INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the Indian appropriation bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the long amendment beginning on page 42, line 22, and ending at line 13, page 51.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the pending question is an amendment offered to the amendment by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], at line 14, page 50, following the word "owed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I beg to disagree with the Chair.

Mr. MYERS. It was agreed to by a viva voce vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so held.

Mr. SMOOT. I was speaking upon the question the time the bill was laid aside. I do not see how it could have been agreed to when I was speaking upon the question. The Chair stated that the hour of 8 o'clock had arrived, when the unanimous-consent agreement relative to an executive session became operative. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah his object in that. Does he want to amend it further, or what is his object?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not to amend it further. I think it is legislation upon an appropriation bill. I think it is unnecessary in this appropriation. The Senate struck out lines 14, 15, and 16 of the bill, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana was to the same purpose but in words a little different.

Mr. PENROSE. May I be permitted a parliamentary inquiry, if the Senator from Utah will yield for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. We have a new Presiding Officer in the Chair, and I should like to have a distinct understanding before any Senators leave the Chamber as to what consent agreement we are working under. Am I correct in the statement that nothing can now be considered except the Indian appropriation bill until 1.30 o'clock, when the Senate will take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. SMOOT. Not later than 1.30 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Senator is correct in his statement. Only the Indian appropriation bill is in order until 1.30 o'clock under the unanimous-consent agreement, and then the Senate will take a recess until 11 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. No other business in the nature of reports can come up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to make a remark on the motion to reconsider. The amendment is essentially different from the part that went out on the point of order raised by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. My amendment confines the provision entirely to three Indian reservations in the State of Montana—the Flathead, Fort Peck, and Blackfeet Reservations—and makes it strictly local and can not apply to anything else. It can not apply in any other State than Montana, and therefore it is essentially different in substance. It was submitted to a number of Senators here on the floor on both sides, and they all said that it was agreeable to them. It was discussed at length, and I hope that it will not be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. I had the amendment in my hands when 8 o'clock arrived.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The amendment applies only to water rights heretofore acquired upon these three reservations.

Mr. MYERS. That is it exactly. It was discussed at considerable length, and I hope it will not be reconsidered.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I was stating when the hour of 8 o'clock arrived. I had the proposed amendment in my hands for the purpose of reading it to determine exactly what the amendment was.

If the Chair will indulge me just a moment, I will read the amendment hurriedly, and then I may have no further objection to it. [After a pause.] I have no objection to the amendment, Mr. President. It changes the other amendment entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment of the committee is agreed to, and the question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask what is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the long committee amendment from the bottom of page 42, line 22, and extending down to line 13, on page 51.

Mr. STERLING. I move an amendment to the amendment. In line 16, page 46, I move to strike out "$686,996.81" and to insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota moves an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 46 of the committee amendment, line 16, strike out "$686,996.81" and in lieu thereof insert "$500,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not prevail. This was discussed for several hours this afternoon and documents were read showing that the Reclamation Service and the Indian Bureau approve of this sum, $686,996.81. It was discussed in extenso. I think it was conclusively proven that this amount of money is actually needed for this project. White settlers have been living there five years and have been simply up against starvation for the lack of water for their lands. They are good citizens and good people, who have taken their all. Some of them have invested as much as $5,000 in their claims and made substantial improvement. Some of them have labored and toiled there for five years, and unless they can get their water on the land this year I am informed by many letters and telegrams that a great many settlers will have to move off, losing their all, losing their toil for five years and their homes, and simply strike the road and go out into the world and start life over. It is equally beneficial to the Indians, because the sooner the water is put on the land the sooner the whites will pay for it and the sooner the Indian will get his money back.

This is the first time in years that this project has had a chance to get a fair and adequate appropriation. They have been struggling along on $200,000 and $300,000 a year, when the Reclamation Service has year after year insisted that they ought to have at least $600,000. This year a claim was made that they could well use $1,880,000 on the project. Therefore I hope the amendment to the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the discussion this afternoon, I think, developed the fact that in 1913 there was $250,000 appropriated for this project; in 1914, $200,000; and out of the appropriations heretofore made there was left $186,996.81. On the 1st of July, 1914, the beginning of this fiscal year, the item referred to, which I seek to amend, reappropriates the $186,996.81 and appropriates $500,000 additional.

Mr. President, in view of what has been used heretofore and in view of the other appropriations in this bill for Indian irrigation projects, I think $500,000, all told, is a reasonable appropriation and will meet a reasonable need and will be probably as much as will be used within the next year.

Mr. WALSH. I move to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, to my mind we are at this late hour of the night and with only a very few Senators present, not a quorum, seeking to pass some of the most important legislation that can come before the Senate on this appropriation bill. It seems to me that the Senator makes a mistake in trying to force this legislation through at this hour with only a few Senators present here, after the Vice President has said in so many words that this whole matter is one network of legislation upon an appropriation bill. I do not know that that is his language, but it is substantially what he said. No one can doubt as to its being legislation. Take, for instance——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, an inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to have the Senator state frankly whether what he now denounces as general legislation is not there because he wanted it there.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I can say frankly to the Senator that I was willing to have this change made to a certain extent. In other words, if the Indians were fully protected and safeguarded, I was willing to have a change made from an appropriation reimbursable to one which was paid for out of the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. Another question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. WALSH. What other provision does the Senator from Vermont want in it to protect them?

Mr. PAGE. I say that I have not had time to investigate the amendment to the amendment which has gone in to-night and which is sought to take the place of the one which went out on a point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator said in the early part of the evening, having great confidence in the ability and skill of the Senator from Arkansas, he was inclined to accept it and believed it a good one. Has he changed his mind again since that time?

Mr. PAGE. I would be very glad, indeed, to have the RECORD read to show what I said. I have probably that right, but I do not like to pass on the question at this moment. I am quite sure as to my attitude. Is there any question in the mind of the Senator if I raise the point of order that it would be accepted? For instance, here on page 47, line 7:

Provided further, That nothing contained in the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 444), shall be construed to exempt the purchaser of any Indian allotment purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon from any charge for construction of the irrigation system—

And so forth.

Are we not changing the law? Is there any question about that? Is there any doubt that we are doing it on an appropriation bill?

Mr. MYERS. May I make a suggestion? I want to say in all candor to the Senator from Vermont that all we are legislating for in this amendment is in regard to the Indians in the State of Montana, and I want to assure him that the language which I have put into the bill, in my judgment, is just the same in substance as the language that went out on the point of order by the Senator from New Mexico, only it confines its operation to Indians in the State of Montana. Now, what more can the Senator want? We are only legislating about that, and if it protects their rights is not the Senator getting what he started out to get, and all he wants?

Mr. PAGE. Since this matter has been under discussion I have heard conversation between others to the effect that this amendment covered certain past transactions. I do not know how far it reaches.

Mr. MYERS. I want to assure the Senator that the United States Government has appropriated sufficient water for this entire reclamation project, and it applies to all those appropriations. So what more can be asked?

Mr. PAGE. I think I have been pretty fair with the Senator from Montana. I have said that I would not interpose any point of order on this matter if I could find the bill satisfactory.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. PAGE. I understood the matter was brought up this afternoon before the Vice President, and he said it was one mass of legislation on an appropriation bill. There can be no question about it. But now I ask the Senator in all candor if he gets $500,000, the amount he asked for, the amount he said would be right, why not say he will take that, and we will drop this matter in a minute?

Mr. MYERS. Because I have no right to barter away the rights of my constituents in that way. I am not here for that purpose. I am not here to legislate in that way.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the Senator will not press his view.

Mr. MYERS. I gave all my reasons for favoring this entire appropriation this afternoon. I talked for about an hour.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator knows that I do not want to raise a point of order on this measure. I think the measure calls for too much money.

Mr. MYERS. Surely the Senator would not raise a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FALL. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. FALL. Does the Senator think there should be any money at all appropriated for this enterprise?

Mr. PAGE. I wish I was certain that the money appropriated here could not be so used as to result in loss to anybody. I am not absolutely certain about it. I hope it is all right; but I wish I could feel that we should appropriate a half million dollars this year and then another half million the next year if it pans out as I hope it will.

Mr. FALL. But, as I understand, the Senator would vote to appropriate $500,000 instead of $686,000?

Mr. PAGE. I would, sir.

Mr. FALL. Then, if the Senator can make up his mind that he will vote to appropriate any amount of money whatsoever, I can not conceive why the Senator will not vote to appropriate every dollar that he thinks is necessary to complete this enterprise. I can not understand upon what information the Senator bases his idea that the $187,000 additional will not be necessary to complete the enterprise. If it is necessary, and if the Senator is willing to vote $1, if it is not a matter of principle with him to vote against every dollar of this appropriation, unless he can show me that this entire amount asked is not necessary, I shall vote the entire amount, because I do not favor piecemeal appropriations. If it is necessary to vote for, and if the plans call for, an expenditure of $686,000, or any such sum, I am willing to vote for it. If I think it is not necessary, that that money is not going to be well expended, I shall not vote for any of it. I will either vote what I think is properly applicable to this enterprise or I will not vote anything.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator allow me the same privilege?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. FALL. But I was asking the Senator from Vermont really for information. I want to know on what point the Senator bases his idea that an appropriation of $500,000 is all right and that an appropriation of $680,000 is not? If the amount has been estimated for, and if the engineers have agreed that it is correct, I go by the engineers; I take their statement for what it is worth or I do not take it at all. I form my own judgment. Now, on what does the Senator form his judgment that an appropriation of $500,000 is justifiable and that an appropriation of $686,000 is not?

Mr. PAGE. I found it upon the hearings before the committee, in which the Senators from Montana came before the committee and interrogated the assistant commissioner, Mr. Meritt. He said, "I think $500,000 is what we ought to have," and they said, "All right, we will agree to $500,000"; and nothing was said, nor was there a suggestion of anything more than $500,000 until days and days afterwards.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think I appreciate somewhat the feeling of the Senator from Vermont. I want to say to him, however, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana has removed what objection I had to that paragraph; and I think, perhaps, if the Senator from Vermont had a little time to look into it and think it over he might be brought to the same conclusion to which I am brought. I ask the Senator from Montana if it would not be agreeable to him and to the Senator from Vermont to let this matter go over with the other two items until to-morrow and see if an agreement can not be reached on it upon further consideration? I think perhaps we might save time upon the bill in that way.

Mr. PAGE. That would be very satisfactory to me, Mr. President. I stated to-night that I think it is wrong to consider this very important matter—at least it seems to me important—when we have here only a very few Senators. All any Senator need to do would be to suggest the absence of a quorum, and that would end the matter

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the vote on the committee amendment as amended be postponed until to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I should have no objection to doing that if we could agree upon an hour at which to vote. I shall not object to it if we can get an agreement to vote upon the entire matter not later than 12 o'clock.

Mr. PAGE. At what time does the Senate meet to-morrow?

Mr. WALSH. At 11 o'clock.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, Mr. President, my suggestion is made only with the hope of expediting the consideration of the bill. Inasmuch as the Senator from Vermont does not seem to have had his objections removed, I think they can be removed quicker in private conversation than they can on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I can say to the Senator from Wyoming now that, so far as I am concerned, I withdraw all objection if we can have to-morrow until 12 o'clock to vote and think it over. I can not, of course, pledge anybody else; but so far as I am concerned, I at once say "Amen" to what is proposed.

Mr. WALSH. I do not undertake to bind any Senator who is not here.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, Mr. President, while to suggest a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on a bill or joint resolution at a certain time would require a roll call to establish the presence of a quorum, I presume we could enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on an amendment without taking that action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WALSH. Will the Chair now state the agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the request for unanimous consent, it is that the vote on the committee amendment as amended be postponed until to-morrow, and that the vote be then taken thereon not later than 12 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH. I hardly think that would do. There might be other amendments to be proposed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There might be other amendments still to be proposed to the committee amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Then I suggest that the Senate, not later than 12 o'clock to-morrow, without further debate, take a vote on this committee amendment as amended and on all amendments offered to it and pending at that hour.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, my suggestion only referred to the difference between $500,000 and $686,000—to that particular part of the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. I want to make it broad and comprehensive. The Senator from Wyoming himself suggested that there might be further amendments then pending.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I say there might be other amendments that might require discussion. My request was that the whole amendment be passed over until that time.

Mr. MYERS. I think the unanimous-consent agreement was that we take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Until 11 o'clock.

Mr. MYERS. Then, that would give one hour for further discussion of this and any other amendments that there might be.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator from Wyoming think that adequate time?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. So far as I am concerned it would be, but there are perhaps other Senators who might want to propose further amendments to this provision.

Mr. MYERS. There would be one hour in which to do it.

Mr. PAGE. I shall not be surprised if there is considerable discussion desired on this bill to-morrow; but I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I would be glad to withdraw my opposition if we can have an hour's debate in the morning.

Mr. MYERS. Well, I ask unanimous consent for the request that I have made, as I have stated it, that not later than 12 o'clock to-morrow, without further debate after that hour, we proceed to vote on this amendment and pending amendments to it.

Mr. GRONNA. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRONNA. Would it not require a call of the roll to establish the presence of a quorum to enter into any unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. MYERS. It does not require the calling of the roll to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement as to an amendment to a bill, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think a number of Senators have left the Chamber for the night who are interested in many of the features of this portion of the bill. I think they left under the impression that no unanimous-consent agreement for closing the debate would be adopted. I think in a way it would be rather an infringement upon their rights, and I do not believe we ought to formulate and adopt any unanimous-consent agreement regarding any of the features of the bill to-night.

The attendance here is very small.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest to the Senator that I think most of the Senators who have gone away probably expected that this amendment would be disposed of. It was the amendment we were considering when many of them left, and they naturally did not expect us to stay on that amendment until 1.30 o'clock a. m. without acting upon it. So that I do not think they would be foreclosed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not agree with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. That is my idea about it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have heard some views expressed quite to the contrary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to say that I am aware that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] desired to submit an amendment to another provision of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield to me for a moment, I desire to say that my request only applies to this long amendment that is now before the Senate, and nothing else—the Montana item.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from Montana if he will not confine his request to the amendment offered——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Why not pass over the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. Why not confine it to the amendment just offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]?

Mr. MYERS. That has been laid on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says that has been laid on the table.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the question is on——

Mr. MYERS. On the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended. There are no amendments pending at present but the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I do not see why that should not go over at the request of Senators. I know of no other amendment that will be offered.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has an amendment to offer.

Mr. MYERS. That will be offered to another item. My request only applies to the pending amendment. The statement of the Senator from Michigan was that he wanted to offer an amendment to another item of the bill relating to the Crow Indians and not to this amendment at all. It is a different amendment. I am confining my request to this one committee item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will kindly let me finish my statement.

Mr. MYERS. I am pleased to.

Mr. GRONNA. I understood from what the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has said—perhaps I misunderstood him—that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has an amendment which he proposes to offer to the pending amendment.

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; I never was permitted to finish the sentence which I attempted to express. I desire to say to the Senator from the State of Wisconsin that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] did desire to offer an amendment in lieu of an amendment found on pages 39 and 40 of the bill, a provision entirely distinct and entirely separate from the amendment now under consideration. It is proposed that we endeavor to get an agreement that a vote be taken upon the adoption of the amendment now under consideration and the amendments thereto.

Mr. GRONNA. I will suggest to both Senators from Montana that we pass this amendment over for to-night. I believe we can save time by so doing. The Senators know that I have had no objection to this amendment. I said that I would vote for the full amount, and I shall do so.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate the good will of the Senator from North Dakota and his desire to expedite this matter, but the Senator from the State of Vermont occupied a great deal of time this afternoon in the discussion of this particular amendment. I think we have heard about all the Senator can offer upon that subject, and yet I should hate to see to-morrow's session consumed in the discussion of this particular amendment. We have still an hour to-night that we can spend in filibustering on it just as well as not, and if there is not going to be a vote to-morrow, I shall insist upon remaining here until half past 1 to talk about this matter. I trust that we will not do anything so foolish as that.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will yield to me, I will object to the request for unanimous consent, so that we can go ahead in the discussion of this matter now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a point of order. The Senator from Vermont has already spoken twice upon this amendment, and I inquire of the Chair whether he is entitled to further recognition upon the amendment?

Mr. PAGE. I have not spoken at all on the motion now before the Senate, I believe.

Mr. WALSH. This is the motion that has been here all the time.

Mr. PAGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not understand him.

Mr. WALSH. This is the motion that has been here all the time—on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. PAGE. The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment after it has been amended. This is the first time we have had an opportunity to talk about that. But, Mr. President, I do not want to filibuster here, if the Senator thinks that is what I am doing; but I do hope that, in view of the limited number of Senators present to-night, he will be willing to trust this matter to the decision of the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. WALSH. I am willing to trust it. I am perfectly willing that there shall be reasonable debate upon it to-morrow. I have proposed that the debate proceed on the matter for an hour more to-morrow instead of an hour to-night. I am endeavoring to get an agreement that there shall be a vote on this amendment at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. PAGE. I have said that, so far as I am personally concerned, I would interpose no objection, but I can not speak for those who are not here.

Mr. FALL. I withdraw any objection that I have, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent made by the Senator from Montana that at not later than 12 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceed to a vote on this amendment and on all amendments thereto?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely want to know if the Chair understood when we meet to-morrow we shall begin the consideration of this amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Senators say "to-morrow" when they mean to-day. I do not want any technicality to be interposed, as the Senator from Vermont might be able to do. I want it understood that this is to-day.

Mr. MYERS. I want it understood that this is Tuesday, the 2d day of March, 1915.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood when he put the request. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that we have now finished the Montana items. I wish to offer a committee amendment, which I think the chairman will accept. On page 38, before the word "Montana," I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, we have not finished the Montana items.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I offer it anyway, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that committee amendments only are in order now.

Mr. GRONNA. This is a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had no means of knowing as to that except as he was informed by the Secretary. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On behalf of the committee Mr. GRONNA proposes the following amendment.

On page 38, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

Mississippi Indians: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the condition of the Indians living in Mississippi and report to Congress on the first Monday of next December as to their need for additional land and school facilities, $1,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the committee amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota on behalf of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not in any way affect the Choctaw Indians in Mississippi, does it?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, no; not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 51, after line 15, to insert:

That section 11 of the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," amended by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 796), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That merchantable timber on said lands, returned and classified by said commission as timberlands, may be sold by the Secretary of the Interior, under such regulations as he may prescribe; and after the sale and removal of the timber such of said lands as are valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes shall be sold or opened to homestead entry by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That lands valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes, heretofore classified as timberlands, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be appraised and opened to homestead entry under regulations prescribed by him, upon condition that homestead entrymen shall at the time of making their original homestead entries pay the full value of the timber found on the land at the time that the appraisement of the land itself is made, except as hereinafter provided such payment to be in addition to the appraised price of the lands apart from the timber, as herein authorized: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion accept payments in installments for said timber under such terms, conditions, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I hope that that amendment will not be agreed to. I do not want to make a point of order against it, if it can possibly be avoided, although I think it is subject to a point of order. It puts the Government in the business of stripping the land of timber, if there should happen to be a little timber on the land of the homesteader, and I do not believe it is good legislation. I believe it is putting the Government in the attitude of taking off from a homestead entry or other entry necessary material for the proper equipment of a homestead, and I do not think we ought to change the law in that respect. If it is timberland it ought to be sold as timberland; if it is not properly classified as timberland, it ought to be subject to homestead entry with what little timber there is upon it. I hope the Senator from Arizona will not insist upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I shall say only a word or two about this matter.

There is a great demand by the settlers on the Flathead Reservation for this legislation. I have received a great many letters in favor of it; so has the Departmentof the Interior. It is a departmental provision. It was gotten up by the Department of the Interior, and was thrashed out and deliberated over very carefully in the Indian Committee. I think we spent two or three hours on it, and got it in such shape as to meet the views of the committee.

The Flathead Reservation is a beautiful country, a productive country, a grand country. It is peopled by as good a set of people as any part of the United States—worthy, industrious, law-abiding people. But they must have water on their lands in order to develop them and make a living on them. To them it is home, sweet home. The Government has promised them water on their lands. They are to pay for the water. They pay the cost. It is only a loan. The Government lends the money. It is reimbursable. The settlers repay it.

Let us deal justly with these people. They clamor for justice. Will you deny it? Tardy justice is better than none. Let us legislate for humanity. Vote the full amount, $687,000, and I promise you that you will make sad hearts glad and make a great section of country blossom as a rose and make good citizens and happy homes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, there are scores of millions of acres of timberland in the Rocky Mountain region from which the Government can sell timber. If the Senator from Montana has had my experience, he has found out that right next to anyone of these reserves a man can buy timber from the Government at just exactly the price he would pay for the best Oregon or Washington timber delivered on the ground, and no less. The settler gets his timber for no less, and while some of them might think they would, it is a mistaken hope. I do not want to see the Government, while it is reserving the timber in some sections of the country, stripping the land of timber where some homesteader might want it for use upon the land which he enters as a homestead.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming will permit me one minute——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I happen to have personal knowledge, from observation, of the conditions with which this amendment is intended to deal.

On the Flathead Indian Reservation there are many places, particularly about Flathead Lake, and especially upon the west side of the lake, covered to a very inconsiderable extent with timber. Exactly the same condition exists in the Flathead Valley. I have seen great fields there, growing magnificent crops of grain, with scattered timber still standing in the fields.

The forest opens out into parks. This is beautiful timber, magnificent pine trees, but they are scattered about so that the fields can be cultivated with the trees still standing. Now, that timber is valuable. There may be 160 acres of it, and the timber scattered around may not cover more than 20, 30, or 40 acres, but it is scattered around so that it is found at intervals throughout the entire tract of 160 acres. Much of that land has been classified as timberland, and so it is not open to appropriation at all under the provisions of the homestead law, because the act opening the Flathead Indian Reservation provides for classification into five classes. One of these classes is timberlands, and these timberlands are to be disposed of under the provisions of section 11. Now, many homesteaders would be very glad to go in and take those lands that have been heretofore classed as timberlands, but which it was not desired should be opened to homestead settlers, because there was no provision in the homestead law by which they could pay for the timber and then take advantage of the homestead law. Thus these lands that would grow beautiful annual crops of grain—indeed, sir, that would make the very highest class of fruit lands, because the Flathead Valley and all that country is a wonderful fruit country—these exceedingly valuable lands lie there entirely unproductive now. It is within the power of the Secretary of the Interior to reclassify these lands, and he can classify them, if he desires to do so, as agricultural lands, and thereupon they would be opened to homestead entry, but the Indians would then lose the value which they distinctly have in the timber which is upon them.

This amendment proposes to subject lands of that character to homestead entry, the homestead entryman at the time he makes entry making an agreement to pay for the timber upon the land entirely in cash or in installments; and it seems to me a very beneficent provision.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The statement of the Senator but confirms me in my opinion. Evidently an error has been made in the classification of the lands of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will allow me for one moment, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Montana is stating this amendment as he recalls it, possibly, but there is a provision in the amendment for the sale of these lands. It is not confined to homestead entries. That is, after the timber is cut off they can be either sold or entered as homestead entries. They can be sold. Now, does the Senator understand that being classified as timberlands they are not subject to sale or entry at all, but must be retained as timberlands?

Mr. WALSH. I have the act here before me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have the act here, too, but I think the Senator is a little mistaken.

Mr. FALL. I may be.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There are two classes of lands mentioned in this amendment. There is one class of lands that are absolutely timberland. Now, they may or may not be valuable for agriculture. The Secretary is authorized to sell the timber on that class of lands, and thereafter he may either sell them at public sale or allow homestead entry upon the lands. The other class of lands comprises those that have just been referred to by the Senator from Montana, lands that upon their face are valuable for agriculture. Now, those lands are also classified as timberlands. I believe, as evidently the Senator from Montana believes, that there was an erroneous classification; that they ought not to have been classified as timberlands.

Mr. FALL. But this provision is "that lands valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes, heretofore classified as timberlands, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be appraised and opened to homestead entry under regulations prescribed by him."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but first the Government is to remove the timber.

Mr. WALSH. No.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think so; or to sell the timber; compel the homesteader to pay for the little timber there is on his land

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There may be a hundred dollars' worth of timber upon his land; there may be $200 worth; there may be 10 acres. When I was a boy, while I never was a farmer—I guess I am the only man in the Senate who was not—I remember that one of the valuable assets of a farm in the country that I came from was a little timber lot where the farmer could go and get his winter's supply of wood. Now, why on earth we should go into the commercial business of selling timber simply because a man has a hundred or two hundred dollars' worth of timber upon his homestead entry I can not imagine; and, besides, the Indians may not be defrauded of any of the value of that land, because all of this land, as I understand, is appraised before it is subject to be taken up. Am I not right in that?

Mr. WALSH. It has been appraised, and, of course, it is subject to reappraisement.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is subject to reappraisement and reclassification. Simply from the fact that a mistake has been made in the classification I do not think we ought to attempt to remedy that mistake by putting the Government into the business of a lumber agent.

I do not know that I have anything further to say.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask the Senator from Montana if he would have any objection to inserting the word "chiefly" after the word "lands" in line 9, so as to read:

Provided, That lands chiefly valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes—

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator that that would really destroy the effect of it, because presumably lands that are chiefly valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes have already been classified as such.

Mr. GRONNA. I see.

Mr. WALSH. It is those lands that are chiefly valuable for the timber that is on them, but that still have a great value for agricultural purposes, that we desire to reach by this bill. However——

Mr. GRONNA. Then let me inquire of the Senator if he would have any objection to striking out the word "merchantable," in line 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "matured, dead, and down," so as to read:

That matured, dead, and down timber—

And so forth. I am simply asking for information.

Mr. WALSH. That is in the first part of the section?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps we would understand this better if I read section 11 as it is in the original act.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. It is as follows:

That all of said lands returned and classified by said commission as timberlands shall be sold and disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior under sealed bids to the highest bidder for cash, or at public auction, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. GRONNA. Does that mean the land or the timber?

Mr. WALSH. That is the land.

That all of said lands returned and classified by said commission as timberlands.

I should have no objection——

Mr. GRONNA. The first part of this amendment, beginning with line 1 and ending with line 8, has reference only to the sale of timber, as I understand it, and not the land.

Mr. WALSH. No, sir. I should have no objection to the change suggested by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I suppose the amendment is in order, to perfect the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that would destroy the purpose of the amendment, as I have it.

Mr. WALSH. No; I think not, because there will not be any sold except in cases where the timber is matured.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But undoubtedly there are quantities of timber there that is not matured, and it would still be timberland, and you could only sell the matured timber.

Mr. WALSH. Really, I do not see why the Senator from North Dakota should want to make that change.

Mr. GRONNA. Since the Senator has asked the question, I will say to him that I want to protect the timber that is not matured. The Senator from Montana stated before the committee that there were lands which were valuable as timberlands, there were lands up on the high hills—I think that is the way he described them—and those lands are chiefly or practically valuable only as timberlands.

Mr. WALSH. They have no value except for that.

Mr. GRONNA. I take it that it would be in the interest not only of these Indians but also of the people of Montana to protect the young timber. All timber is merchantable, and I think it would be better, and I think it would be a wise provision, to permit the Secretary of the Interior to sell only the matured, dead-and-down timber. That would protect the forests.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, if the purpose of the amendment is that this land shall not be disposed of, the proposed amendment would answer that purpose very admirably.

Mr. GRONNA. We are not disposing of the land in this amendment; only the timber.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, no; you are disposing of both. It provides that the timber shall be first disposed of, and then the land may be entered or sold under the homestead act. If the Senator will notice, it runs down to the middle of line 8:

And after the sale and removal of the timber such of said lands as are valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes shall be sold or opened to homestead entry by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. GRONNA. That is true; but I still think it would be wise to permit only the sale of the matured timber, for evidently these lands are valueless for agricultural purposes. It was only my desire to protect the forests.

I offer the following amendment: Strike out the word "merchantable" and insert in lieu thereof the words "matured, dead, and down."

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if that amendment is adopted, that would leave this land then in the position that matured, dead, and down timber should be sold off of it, and that the remaining timber would then become the property of the homesteader. That is the object of the Senator, is it? That would be the result of it, because it would be subject to homestead entry, and the homestead entryman would acquire the lands with the timber on them.

Mr. GRONNA. Exactly.

Mr. FALL. That is the object?

Mr. GRONNA. That is the object.

Mr. FALL. It strikes me that if the desire is to have these lands entered as homestead lands the end can be very much more readily reached by simply amending the old act, under which it is provided that these lands shall be thrown open, by striking out the exception with reference to timberlands and striking out section 11 of the old act, which provides for the sale of timberlands aside from those in homesteads. That would leave timberlands and all to be classified as homesteads, but the price to be put upon them in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the President, so that homestead entry should be allowed there upon the timberlands, but at a price to be fixed. The homestead entryman here under this old law is to pay for his homestead entry. He does not get it free, as he would on the public domain, by residing upon it, but he gets it by paying the appraised price—one-fifth, I believe it is—at the time he makes his entry, and the balance in equal payments, or in other deferred payments.

I call the attention of the Senator, who is doubtless even more familiar with this than I am, to the fact that section 11 is the section which provides for the sale of these timberlands. Now, if that were stricken out and the old law left as it was, with the additional amendment in section 8, after the words "United States," in the third line from the bottom, striking out the words "except such of said lands as shall have been classified as timberlands," and then striking out section 11, which provides simply for the sale of timberlands and not for their entry as homesteads, it would leave all these lands then subject to entry as homesteads and the timberland would simply be appraised at a higher value than the land without timber; and that would allow homestead entrymen to enter the timberland itself and acquire the timber upon it, but upon the appraised price as fixed in the President's proclamation.

I am opposed to establishing a precedent. So far as I am personally concerned, I am always willing to defer to Senators from a State as knowing more about the particular circumstances within their State than I do. I am usually very willing to defer to them, but I do not want to establish a precedent of this kind. I want to say frankly that I have been very much opposed to the stripping of a certain reserve in New Mexico of timber, which had been ordered done where it was surrounded by forest reserves for the purpose of holding the timber. The Indian Department proposed to strip the Indian reserve within the center of this forest reserve of the timber itself; not to sell the mature, dead, or down timber, but to strip it of merchantable timber. Merchantable timber means telegraph poles; it means any kind of timber which will do for crossties; it means anything which measures over 8 inches for crossties or 6 inches for telegraph poles.

I think the Senator is perfectly correct. If he wants to save any timber at all, the words "merchantable timber" cover all timber for mining. Ordinary stulls and all timber over 6 inches, lagging, and timber of that kind used in mining is usually not over 4 inches, and it is usually split. It is all merchantable timber, because it is evidently in a mining country.

Mr. GRONNA. My opinion is that these lands are valuable only for timberlands. My object in striking out the word "merchantable" and inserting the words "matured, dead and down," is to take all timber that is ripe or timber that is dead and still protect the forests. I really believe it is in the interest of the Indians and of the people of Montana. Still, I shall not insist on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to detain the Senate just one moment. I will not take a minute of time. Is there not an Indian reserve now, that strip on the east end that we have talked about in our committee a great deal?

Mr. WALSH. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. On the east end of the reservation that we are discussing here there are three or four tiers of lots running down the entire east end that you thought had best be sold. You remember there was some debate about it and some question whether it ought to be sold or retained for the Indians. Does this particular section 11 refer to that land that is on the east end and are there any other lots that could be sold or would be sold except those on the reserve?

Mr. WALSH. I must confess I do not recall at all the incident to which the Senator refers. The Mission Range constitutes the eastern boundary of the Indian reservation, and the land slopes from that to the westward. The eastern side is the high mountain range and the foothills, and that is covered with timber.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator will remember there was talk that all the other lands except on the east end there was land not desirable for agricultural purposes, but the east end of the reserve was really desirable for agriculture.

Mr. WALSH. The east side of the valley is better than the western portion.

Mr. PAGE. Is there any land that will be probably sold under the conditions named in section 11 which we are now discussing except that?

Mr. WALSH. Except that?

Mr. PAGE. The east side.

Mr. WALSH. The lands I have in mind particularly are around Flathead Lake and on the west side of Flathead Lake as well as along the foothills on the east side of the reservation.

Mr. PAGE. I remember that we discussed many times in our committee the lands which the Senator thought ought to be sold. I think his colleague knows that we have debated that very much. It was urged that those Indians are so destitute that they would starve if we did not sell this land. I think that is the argument in favor of selling the land now, but some, I know, thought we ought to keep those lands for another 20 years for the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that so far as I am concerned I am in no hurry about selling any timberlands; but if there are any lands on this reserve that homesteaders will take up and cultivate, paying to the Indians the appraised value of them, I am satisfied that every consideration of regard for the welfare of the Indians requires that they be sold.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am afraid that the danger which I see is already embraced in the law which this law seeks to amend. What I object to is the right to sell off this timber and strip the country of timber, and that as a matter of fact is provided in the law. This amendment simply provides that after lands have been stripped under the old law they may be entered as homesteads.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I was going to say, that I think the evil the Senator from New Mexico points out is more pronounced in the old law. In fact I think the old law is an exceedingly objectionable one.

Mr. FALL. I am in accord with the idea embraced in this amendment, Mr. President, and if I have an opportunity I shall offer another amendment which I think possibly may do away with some provisions of the old law which at present I do not approve of at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. I suggest to the Senator from Montana that this amendment go over until to-morrow and see if we can not work out of it something that is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment will be passed over for further consideration. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 52——

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he would not be willing also that the last section now about to be read go over until to-morrow. We have so much here from Montana that I think perhaps it ought all to come together to-morrow and not split it into pieces.

Mr. WALSH. That will be quite satisfactory to me, and I trust to my colleague.

Mr. MYERS. I hardly see the object of putting off Montana from day to day and always until to-morrow. The time has got to come some day. I will not make any objection to its going over until to-morrow.

Mr. ASHURST. I object to its going over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator meant to-day—until the next session of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over until after the recess.

Mr. PAGE. I want to interpose right here my objection to anybody insinuating that I mean to adopt any sharp practice. When I say to-morrow I understand and I mean to-day. It was simply a slip of the tongue. I have no desire to be sharp in this matter.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nebraska," in section 12, page 53, line 17, before the word "Indian," to strike out "375" and insert "400"; in line 18, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$64,500" and insert "$68,800"; and in line 20, after the words "in all," to strike out "$69,500" and insert "$73,800," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 12. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian School at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $68,800; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $73,800.

Mr. WALSH. Before we pass this, I desire to say for the information of the Senator from Vermont that we passed an act in terms exactly the same as this amendment, and it has gone over until the next session. So the Senate has already given its assent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 21, to insert:

That the legal road authorities, charged with the duty of laying out and opening public roads and highways under the laws of the State of Nebraska, having jurisdiction over any territory embraced within the Winnebago Indian Reservation, the Omaha Indian Reservation, the Ponca Indian Reservation, and the Santee Sioux Indian Reservation in the State of Nebraska, are hereby authorized and empowered to lay out and open public roads within any of the said Indian reservations in conformity to and in accordance with the laws of the State of Nebraska relating to the laying out and opening of public roads, and that any public road when so laid out and opened shall be deemed a legal road: Provided, That such road authorities shall, in addition to notifying the landowners as provided in the State laws, likewise serve notice upon the superintendent in charge of the restricted Indian lands upon which it is proposed to lay out a public road, and shall also furnish him with a map drawn on tracing linen showing the definite location and width of such proposed road, and no such road shall be laid out until after it has received the approval of such superintendent.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. This amendment having been agreed to, it strikes me as absolutely useless to continue over until to-morrow the last amendment, the Montana item, which is word for word the same.

Mr. WALSH. I was going to ask the Senator from Vermont, who seems quite willing this loss should apply to the State of Nebraska but not to the State of Montana——

Mr. PAGE. I went down to see the Senator from Wyoming, and asked him if he did not want it to go over. He said, "It does not sound quite right to me, but I shall not oppose the amendment." I did not press the matter, because he went off. I guess perhaps I have done my share in the matter.

Mr. MYERS. I observe that it is nearly all word for word the Montana amendment. The Senator from Vermont was very much determined that it should go over until to-morrow. When it comes to the same thing for Nebraska——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that there is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. FALL. If the Chair pleases, I rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senator to it with the idea that possibly he might withdraw his request that the other item go over until to-morrow. That was my purpose in interrupting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the whole purpose of the Senator, but it is not in order. No request being submitted the Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. MYERS. I was speaking to the bill. I merely wanted to say that I observe the Senator from Vermont had no objection whatever to legislation for Nebraska, but he insists that the same identically for Montana must go over until some other day.

Mr. PAGE. I beg leave to say that the Senator has no right to speak in that manner. I did feel that this was objectionable and that it ought to go over, but I have been interposing so many objections that I went down to see the Senator from Wyoming and see if he did not think it ought to go over. He gave me a negative answer and I said amen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to. There is nothing pending before the Senate.

Mr. FALL. A Senator can discuss this bill on the different propositions involved in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to. Discussion on the amendment is not in order. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nevada," in section 13, on page 54, line 21, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$41,700" and insert "$43,750"; in line 22, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$5,950"; and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$46,700" and insert "$49,700," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., including pay of superintendent, $43,750; for general repairs and improvements, $5,950; in all, $49,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 23, to insert:

For the purchase of land and water rights for the Washoe Tribe of Indians, the title to which is to be held in the United States for the benefit of said Indians, $10,000; for the support and civilization of said Indians, $5,000; in all, $15,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to have the chairman explain that amendment. If the title to this land and water is held by the United States for the benefit of the Indians, why should we appropriate $10,000 to pay for it? It says:

For the purchase of land and water rights for the Washoe Tribe of Indians, the title to which is to be held in the United States for the benefit of said Indians.

Let me ask the Senator has he any explanation of that from the Indian Bureau?

Mr. ASHURST. The Washoe Indians are a tribe which have always been at peace and amity with the United States. When other tribes were at war with our Government and with the State authorities this tribe was always at peace. But, singularly enough, it seems to be the irony of fate, no appropriation has ever been made for the care, maintenance, and education of this tribe. Quoting from page 228 of the Senate committee hearings, Senator ROBINSON propounded the following interrogatory:

Are they peacefully disposed—

Referring to these Indians—

Are they peacefully disposed or are they warlike?

Senator PITTMAN. No; they are very peaceful. From the very beginning of the settlement of that State they have been peaceable Indians.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How many of them are there?

Senator PITTMAN. There are from 300 to 400.

Senator PAGE. How many heads of families would there be?

Senator PITTMAN. I should judge in a case of that kind there would be one-fourth of them heads of families.

Senator PITTMAN proceeded to say in response to an interrogatory propounded by Senator ROBINSON:

There are springs all around that State called Indian Springs. There a band of 100 would settle, and they would raise a little grain around that spring—probably put in 20 or 30 acres. They would work it kind of as a community. They would hunt and fish around there. They would do that at the mouth of the little mountain streams. But the homesteader comes around and buys their possessory right and gives them $100, or something like that, to move off.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. ASHURST. They have no land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They have no land, no reservation; nothing of that sort?

Mr. ASHURST. None whatever; they have no land.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the words "and to remain available until expended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 55, lines 3 and 4, after the word "available," strike out the words "and to remain available until expended."

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that. The words "to be immediately available" are not to be stricken out?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I give them all this year and all the next year until June 30 to spend the money.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is long enough time.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," on page 55, after line 5, to strike out:

SEC. 11. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $73,600: Provided, That not to exceed $200 may be expended in the purchase of a fractional acre south of the school farm and adjoining the public road.

And to insert:

SEC. 14. For support and education of 435 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $72,550; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for the purchase of additional acreage adjoining the school farm, $12,000; in all, $92,550.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 18, to strike out:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $59,550; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all, $66,150.

And to insert:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for water supply, $1,600; in all, $78,200.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On line 2, page 56, after the figures "$1,600" and the semicolon, strike out "in all, $78,200" and insert the words:

For aiding the public schools of New Mexico in which children of Indian blood are in attendance, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior through the State superintendent of public instruction, $100,000; in all, $178,200.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 8, to insert:

That the proviso of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to quiet title to lands on Jicarilla Reservation, and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made, and to dispose of the merchantable timber, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, reading: "Provided, That in making such allotments values shall be considered so as to make the allotments uniform in value as near as practicable; that the Secretary of the Interior may dispose of all merchantable timber on allotments herein authorized during the term these are held in trust and on the surplus lands for 25 years, the proceeds thereof to be expended under his direction for purposes beneficial to the individual allottees hereunder and their heirs, or for families as he may deem best, and no part of such proceeds shall be expended for community or common benefits other than irrigation, but shall be equitably apportioned as near as may be among the Indians entitled," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read: "Provided, That in making such allotment values shall be considered so as to make the allotments uniform in value as near as practicable; that the Secretary of the Interior may dispose of all merchantable timber on allotments herein authorized during the term these are held in trust and on the surplus lands for 25 years, the proceeds thereof to be expended under his direction for the purchase of live stock, seeds, agricultural equipment, and for other purposes beneficial to the Indians belonging to and having rights as members of said tribe of Indians with the consent of the individual allottees, or their heirs, natural guardians to consent for minors and the superintendent of the reservation for orphan minors and incompetents.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from New Mexico if this language is satisfactory to him? I suppose it is. He knows more about it than I do, of course. But I was going to suggest to him that we insert the same language in this amendment that we inserted in the item relating to Montana.

Mr. FALL. In what portion of the amendment does the Senator desire it inserted?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In line 12.

Mr. GRONNA. First, in line 12; but the word "merchantable" is used in several other places.

Mr. FALL. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me, and I think the language suggested by the Senator should be inserted.

Mr. GRONNA. Wherever the word "merchantable" is used in the amendment I move to strike it out and to insert the words "matured, dead, and down."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OWEN in the chair). The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 12, before the word "timber," it is proposed to strike out the word "merchantable," and to insert the words "matured, dead, and down."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. In line 17, the same amendment should be made.

Mr. FALL. I have no objection at all to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 17, it is proposed to strike out the word "merchantable" before the word "timber," and to insert the words "matured, dead, and down."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as amended will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think the Senator from North Dakota really means to submit that amendment. The word "merchantable," in line 12, is included in the title of the act.

Mr. FALL. The amendment is not applicable to line 12.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It should not be made to line 12; it may apply to line 17.

Mr. GRONNA. I think that is right. It should be omitted in line 12 and inserted in line 17.

Mr. FALL. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the vote whereby the amendment to the amendment, in line 12, on page 56, was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. STERLING. In lines 4 and 5, on page 57, the word "merchantable" appears, and the amendment should be made there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, in lines 4 and 5, it is moved to strike out the word "merchantable," before the word "timber," and to insert "matured, dead, and down."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I want to suggest that that amendment should not be made in line 17, on page 56, because that is simply a quotation of the old act.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator from Montana will notice in line 12, it is a quotation of the old act.

Mr. WALSH. Line 12 is a part of the title of the old act, but line 17 is the very body of the old act.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is right.

Mr. FALL. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know why that word should be changed.

Mr. FALL. The amendment does not properly commence until the top of page 57. That is correct.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that that change be made, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the vote whereby the amendment to the amendment on page 56, line 17, was agree to will be reconsidered.

Mr. WALSH. I think that all that language from the word "seven," in line 14, page 56, down to the word "be," the last word in line 25, should be stricken out.

Mr. FALL. It is surplusage.

Mr. WALSH. And I move that it be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, beginning with the word "reading," in line 14, it is proposed to strike out that word and all down to and including the word "entitled," in line 25, and the quotation marks, so that it will read: "Approved March 4, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, it seems to me that this thing is becoming so confused that——

Mr. FALL. I object to the Senator from Wyoming looking at the Senator from New Mexico. It is not the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator from New Mexico has absolutely nothing to do with it. It is a purely departmental matter, but so long as it is limited to dead and down timber I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to ask this question: Suppose an Indian takes an allotment of timber lands, the allotment is to be valued so as to be of the average value of all of the allotments. He takes an allotment upon Indian lands and that is his individual piece of land thereafter. The Government reserves the right to sell the timber on it. For what purpose? To provide seed corn and other grain and cattle for the homestead which the Indian has not got. He has got nothing but timber land to cultivate. That is what the amendment means as it now stands. The land must not be cleared in order to be made land that is cultivable, but the timber is to remain there. Only the matured and down timber is to be sold, and the proceeds are passed over to the Indian in order that he may obtain seed corn and agricultural implements and cattle to place upon lands upon which he can not possibly use them. I have no objection to this, however, if the Senator from New Mexico wants it.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from New Mexico has disavowed all responsibility for this amendment or for any part of it.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact under the old law—I know this much about it, although I have not been consulted at all about the amendment—but under the old law allotments have been made to Indians, and they have been forced to suffer considerable hardships; they have not been treated by the department as they think they should and as those who live around the reserve think they should. That has been, as the department claims, that it has not been able to handle their lands as they should have been handled. I ask that this amendment may go over until to-morrow, and unless it can be satisfactorily explained to me I shall myself make a motion to strike it out.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator, inasmuch as there seems to be so much misunderstanding about it, that I was ready to make the point of order against it——

Mr. FALL. I should not take up any time in arguing against the point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. But I prefer that the matter should go over, and let the Senator from New Mexico look at the amendment in detail, for I certainly would not want to do anything that would hurt the Indians there.

Mr. FALL. I want to help the Indians on the reserve.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The purpose of these allotments in the original law was that each Indian should get property of about the same value. If the Indian takes timberland, he takes very much less. That includes all the timber. If that is true, he ought to be able to sell all of the timber off and clear it and take the proceeds and devote the land to agricultural purposes.

Mr. FALL. I will say to the Senator that this happens to be one reserve in New Mexico in the extreme northwestern part of the State, off the railroad, and on the line of Colorado, which I know little or nothing about. I was only once through it in my life and do not really personally know the conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will attend to that in a moment. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7648. An act to authorize an exchange of lands with the State of North Dakota for promotion of experiments in dry-land agriculture, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 19422) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate amendment No. 1.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate resolution 555.

Resolved, That the Senate expresses its profound sorrow on account of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM H. WILDER, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tributes may be paid his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. WILDER and Mr. GOODWIN the Senate do now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia rises to a question of personal privilege. How long will it take?

Mr. HOWARD. I think it will take 5 or 10 minutes. I may not be able to speak longer than that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as the gentleman states he has a question of personal privilege, that he have 10 minutes in which to state it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] have 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that at the busy time of the House I find it necessary to take up even 10 minutes of the time of the House in replying to some statements that were made touching my Representative capacity on last Thursday by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREEN].

The gentleman from Massachusetts introduced into this House some time last September a resolution which sought a Federal investigation of one cotton mill in the city of Atlanta by a special committee of Congress, for the purpose of investigating working conditions and to look into conditions surrounding a strike that was on in the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mill.

At the time that the gentleman introduced this resolution I thought, and I still think, that it was grossly discourteous to me, as the Representative of that district, for him to introduce, on the eve of a national election, for his own political aggrandizement, a resolution involving the conduct of a cotton mill in my district without ever mentioning to me the fact that he intended to do so. When the gentleman did that, the resolution lay in the Committee on Rules for some time, and my first intimation of the fact that it had been introduced was a resolution passed by the Atlanta Federation of Trades, in which they thanked him for his conduct and sought to condemn me for my inactivity in failing to help Mr. GREENE push this resolution through.

When I received that resolution I wrote them a letter and in that letter I used some language that I will quote. I of course recollected the activity of Mr. GREENE when the Lawrence strike was up. I knew when women were being shot down in the streets of Lawrence, and when a little boy had been bayoneted to death on the street, that this great man who holds his mills up in the attitude of "holier than thou" did not open his mouth, did not say a word, but, on the other hand, I have been informed by some gentlemen on the Committee on Rules that he was in a sense "pussy footing" around, trying to keep any resolution from being reported out by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOWARD. Wait a minute. You spoke in my absence, and I refuse to yield. Now let us see, a step further. I will yield to you directly, when I state my case. A little further on the gentleman came to me, or, in fact, I went to him, and I said, "I know that you can not pass this resolution, and every other Member of Congress on both sides would vote against such a resolution. Surely," said I to the gentleman from Massachusetts, "if Congress refused to give an investigation to such an outrageous condition as was portrayed in the Lawrence situation, they would not go to Atlanta to investigate a strike in one mill."

Yet he led Mr. Golden, of the textile workers, to believe that he was going to get this resolution passed. I said this in this letter, and I want to repeat it, that I did not think Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts was dealing fairly with these people in holding out to them a hope that such a resolution could pass through this House. Therefore, knowing his attitude on the child-labor bill in the District of Columbia, as shown by his vote on May 9, 1908, knowing his attitude on the immigration bill, knowing his attitude on tariff matters, knowing his attitude toward the manufacturing industries of this country, I did write this letter, and I used these words:

Mr. Webster defines a demagogue as "one who plays an insincere rôle in public life for the sake of gaining political influence or office; a poser in politics; one who panders to popular prejudice or seeks to inflame reasonless passions in the advancement of his personal interests." If he had had an intimate acquaintance with Congressman GREENE of Massachusetts, he could not have described the man, as he is known to all men, in better terms. When the Atlanta Federation of Trades passed a resolution thanking Mr. GREENE for his activities in behalf of labor, I am sure no one was more surprised to receive such a resolution than was Mr. GREENE, and probably in all his life this was the first letter of this character he had ever received.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] had to get into this dispute the other day. I understand he is a great cotton mill manufacturer or woolen manufacturer. He jumped in here to say something about the cotton workers in the southern mills. I want to say one thing to you gentlemen who represent these great industrial States: The cotton-mill operatives of Georgia may be poor, they may work under conditions that are not the best, but I do want to impress upon you that as pure Anglo-Saxon blood as flows in the veins of any citizenry of America flows in the veins of the Georgia textile workers. [Applause.] They are from the mountains of north Georgia, North Carolina, and Tennessee. I do not defend any mistreatment of those employees, but I do say and I want to emphasize that no condition has ever arisen in the South under which the people who work in these mills have ever been treated in the way in which you are treating them to-day in the State of Massachusetts and in certain other States where a great body of industrial toilers are trying to eke out an existence. May I read just one paragraph from the report of the Commissioner of Labor on this Massachusetts situation? I hope it will soak through some of the tough hides of some of you great friends of the industrial toiler, when you come to talking about southern mills as compared to yours.

Mr. ROGERS had to insert in the RECORD a contract made by Georgia employers with their operatives. I condemn that contract. I would not defend such a contract. I do not defend any contract that is oppressive of labor; but the gentleman had to insert it, when, as a matter of fact, he knows that one of the very things that incited the Lawrence strikers to their action was the fact that one week's pay had been withheld by the employers in that State. Mr. Neill said in this report:

The actual economic condition of the families of the workers in the textile mills in Lawrence can not be easily pictured by a mere statement of individual earnings. It is obvious from the figures of earnings that the full-time earnings of a large number of adult employees are entirely inadequate to maintain a family. Thus the full-time earnings of 7,275 employees, or about one-third of the total covered in this investigation, are less than $7 a week.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for just five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to my friend from Georgia, but it is impossible at this time.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts had 20 minutes, and I thought——

Mr. BARTLETT. You were sick in bed.

Mr. HOWARD. There is one portion of this thing that I will touch upon and then stop, if the gentleman from Alabama will yield the time to me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that this question is not strictly a question of personal privilege. It brings up an issue in the House, and I dislike——

Mr. BARTLETT. My colleague was absent when the gentleman from Massachusetts made his statement.

Mr. HOWARD. The question of privilege is the question of fact that Mr. Golden, of the textile workers, has written a letter to Mr. GREENE, in which he stated that I am trying to throttle an honest investigation by this House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sure the gentleman from Georgia understands——

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think the gentleman from Alabama wants to embarrass me by refusing me this brief time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman stated, and stated positively and unequivocally, that the Georgia laws regarding child labor were most unbearable, and said there was no penalty attached to them. I have here in my hand the act of 1914, and it has been the law all the time in Georgia——

Mr. BARTLETT. The penalty part of it?

Mr. HOWARD. The penalty part of it has always existed in every child-labor law in Georgia, and as prosecuting attorney of a district in the State of Georgia I prosecuted a cotton-mill superintendent for working a child under 12 years of age in his mill in violation of the law and speedily got a conviction for it, and he was fined in court. [Applause.] The Georgia law has always had this penalty attached to it. Now point out to me a single solitary cotton mill in Georgia or in the South that charges little children, 14 and 15 years old, 10 cents a week for the water that they drink while they are at work in the cotton mills. You do it in Lawrence. You do it in Massachusetts. You assess the children for the water that they drink out of these old cesspools of canals, and you charge them 10 cents a week. My God, if you can not make enough money out of your industry, with the outrageous tariff you have had on it, and the millions that you have laid aside as a surplus and for cutting watermelons, and can not give a poor, little, thirsty child that is working for you for about 80 cents a day some cool water to drink, God in Heaven knows that you have got but a mighty little bit of grace left in you when you get up here and criticize the working conditions in a cotton mill in Georgia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the next time any of these "holier than thou" textile representatives get up here, I am going to say a few things about the American wage earners and a few more things when this House is not as busy as it now is. I am getting tired of these people coming around and attacking the industries of the South when you have conditions more unbearable and horrible in your own State which you make no effort to correct. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to insert some extracts and matters I have referred to in the RECORD relating to my attitude which Mr. Golden has seen fit to criticize, but nothing of a personal nature.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Golden, who saw proper to write Mr. GREENE of Massachuetts that I made light of his resolution, is mistaken. I did not "make light" of the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I simply looked upon the introduction of this resolution as pure political buncombe, and nobody knew this better than Mr. GREENE.

So I will incorporate in the RECORD the correspondence I had with those who were interested, not for the purpose of satisfying Mr. Golden of my efforts in this matter to bring about peace between the employers and the employees in this unfortunate strike, but that those who know me may not be misled by the statements contained in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts made on the floor of this House the other day. This correspondence shows that I did everything in my power—and I still stand ready to do everything in my power—to bring about an amicable adjustment of these differences.

Mr. Golden, although interested in this matter, and knowing my disposition to help in any way I possibly could to settle the matter, has never called on me, written me, or communicated with me in any way, and all that I have done has been done at the solicitation of constituents in the city of Atlanta.

"WILLIAM SCHLEY HOWARD."

The suggested mediation is really unnecessary. Out of a total of about 1,300 hands, not over 85 have quit; in other words, if we had this number of hands, i. e., 85, the plant would be running to its full capacity. Our present help, numbering about 1,200, are thoroughly contented with their wages and conditions, and all they want is the privilege of being unmolested while at their work and while in their homes. The reports you have received are undoubtedly grossly exaggerated.

Yours, very truly,

Strikers in Atlanta will be evicted and homeless for want of funds. No settlement possible. Kindly endeavor to obtain loan of Army tents discarded by service. I understand that Fort McPherson has 200 condemned tents. If we can have use of them, it will obviate much suffering. Wire reply.

LOUIE P. MARQUARDT,
Member Executive Board.

Immediately upon receiving the above telegram I got in communication with Maj. Gen. James B. Aleshire, Quartermaster General, United States Army, and Gen. Aleshire informed me that it would be impossible to lend tents, under the law as it now stands to these strikers, and that it would be necessary for a resolution to be passed through Congress authorizing the same, and that the department had uniformly reported against the loan of tents except in cases of flood or disaster.

[Letter.]

ATLANTA, GA., December 5, 1914.

Hon. WM. SCHLEY HOWARD,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The textile workers of this city are trying to get an investigation by Congress of the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills. As you know, about 1,000 operatives employed at this mill have been on strike for six or eight months and are now living in tents in the outskirts of the city, after having been ejected from their homes by the mill owners, this sometimes having been done by negroes in the employ of the mill.

Seeking to inaugurate this investigation, Mr. Golden, president of the International Union of Textile Workers, will be in Washington next week. He is familiar with all the details of the situation, having worked in conjunction with the Federation of Trades in the matter from its inception and has the utmost confidence of the federation.

The federation is sending him to you in regard to this matter and requests that you give him any assistance you can.

Assuring you anything you can do to aid Mr. Golden will be greatly appreciated, and thanking you in advance, I am,

Respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

[Letter.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 9, 1914.

Mr. J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades, Atlanta, Ga.

MY DEAR MR. BRADFIELD: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, and I will take very great pleasure in seeing Mr. Golden upon his arrival in Washington and discussing with him the situation from the standpoint of the operatives discharged, employed by the Fulton Bag & Cotton Mills.

I would be anything but frank with you if I did not tell you that the proposition of a congressional investigation of a mere strike in one cotton mill is not likely to meet with any favor either from Republican or Democratic Members of Congress, for the reason that unless interstate commerce has been interferred with, or unless it reflects a discreditable manner of executing a Federal law by the officers charged with this responsibility, or unless such an investigation would be necessary for Congress to procure information upon which to predicate future legislation, it will be an unconstitutional function of Congress.

May I call your attention to the fact that Congress absolutely refused to investigate the Lawrence strike, in Massachusetts, which was the most horrible industrial upheaval in the textile industry that we have had in this country in years. As you know, the so-called officers of the law, which were no other than "pimps" of the mill, shot down innocent women and children on the streets.

I am willing to do my best in this matter, but I can not hold out much hope.

Sincerely, yours, WM. SCHLEY HOWARD.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that there may be an indelible record of some of the horrors and mistreatment of mill operatives in the State of Massachusetts from which the gentleman [Mr. GREENE] hails, I shall quote a few extracts from the testimony of witnesses before the Committee on Rules, and a few statements incorporated in the report of Hon. Charles P. Neill, Commissioner of Labor, on the Lawrence, Mass., situation in 1912:

STATEMENT OF SAMUEL GOLDBERG.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are late 5 or 10 minutes, is anything taken off of your pay?

Master GOLDBERG. Yes, sir; they take an hour's pay.

The CHAIRMAN. What happens if you are three times late?

Master GOLDBERG. You get fired.

Mr. WILSON. What is this 5 cents for water? I do not understand that.

Master GOLDBERG. They take 5 cents off for drinking water.

Mr. WILSON. They do not furnish you with drinking water?

Master GOLDBERG. No; they say it is spring water, but it is not.

STATEMENT OF AUGUSTE WANTE.

Mr. POU. Do you have to pay anything for water?

Master WANTE. Yes, sir; 10 cents a week.

Mr. POU. Is it good water?

Master WANTE. Canal water; that is what we get.

Mr. POU. Canal water? What mill is that in?

Master WANTE. The Wood mill.

STATEMENT OF JOHN BOLDELAR.

Mr. WILSON. What furniture have you in the house?

Master BOLDELAR. Oh, a couple of beds; that is all.

Mr. WILSON. Have you carpets on the floor?

Master BOLDELAR. I guess not; I guess some horses live better than we do.

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM MURPHY.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the smallest pay you get for one and a half days' work or two days' work?

Master MURPHY. Seventy-eight cents.

The CHAIRMAN. Seventy-eight cents? Do you pay anything for water?

Master MURPHY. Five cents a week.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they hold back a week's pay from you?

Master MURPHY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are late, how about closing the doors and deducting pay?

Master MURPHY. If you are late two minutes, they close the door; or for seven minutes, they take off an hour's pay.

STATEMENT OF CAMELLA TEOLI.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you have to pay anything for water?

Miss TEOLI. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How much?
Miss TEOLI. Ten cents every two weeks.
The CHAIRMAN. Do they hold back any of your pay?
Miss TEOLI. No.
The CHAIRMAN. Have they ever held back any?
Miss TEOLI. One week's pay.
The CHAIRMAN. They have held back one week's pay?
Miss TEOLI. Yes.

Now, let us see what Commissioner Neill says about living conditions:

Practically all the textile mill employees in Lawrence live in wooden tenement houses. The most usual types of these are either three or four story buildings, and, in the more thickly settled portions of the city, tenements occupy both the front and rear of the lots. These rear tenement houses can usually be reached from an alley, but the principal entrance, and in some cases the only entrance, is through a narrow passageway between the front buildings.

In other words, they are compelled to live just a little above the ordinary dog, and each worker when his day's labors are over seeks his "stall."

It might not be amiss to state in this connection that the report of Mr. Neill shows that 86 per cent of the employees in textile industries in Lawrence are foreign born or are the sons and daughters of foreign-born parents.

But why go further into this horrible situation. It portrays a condition that we southerners can not contemplate as actually existing anywhere in the civilized world.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question—just half a minute?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I will.

Mr. BRYAN. It is in reference to the case of Harry Yates, Washington Volunteer Infantry. I want to ask the gentleman what is the chance of getting that application considered?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I do not know anything about that case.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to inform the gentleman it is one of the most meritorious cases that has ever arisen from our State, and I am very sorry it has not been considered.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. So am I.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted, I here present the salient facts of this case of Harry Yates. I very much regret that the session is about to draw to a close without action on this claim. While the claim was not in my hands primarily, yet I feel, along with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], a very deep interest in the matter.

The following letter from Mr. C. H. Winders, a prominent Seattle attorney and Spanish-American War veteran, sets forth some of the features:

SEATTLE, WASH., April 25, 1913.

Hon. J. W. BRYAN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BRYAN: This is the first letter of this kind that I have ever written to any Member of Congress, but I can not believe that there is anything that I can honestly do or ask that would not be proper in connection with the subject matter of this letter.

I am attaching hereto a copy of a letter covering the same subject, which I have addressed to Hon. WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY.

You will probably remember, if you were around our Bolo Club headquarters, Mr. Yates, the boy on crutches, with but one leg. What I have said in my letter to Mr. HUMPHREY is absolutely true. Yates is a man of character and integrity, and I do not believe that there is a man within King County belonging to the Spanish War organization who is better and more favorably known than Mr. Yates.

It is a very easy matter for the Pension Department to say that, after the lapse of 10 years, the condition of Yates's leg was not the result of any injuries received while in the service. I have asked Dr. Bourns, whose affidavit you will find attached hereto, to look into this matter carefully. Dr. Bourns states to me that it is his professional opinion that the condition he found at the time he amputated Mr. Yates's leg arose by reason of the facts set forth in the other affidavits. Dr. Bourns is a man who has had a very wide experience. He was connected with the health department in the city of Seattle for a number of years. He is at this time one of the surgeons of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., and has in addition thereto a large and lucrative practice. I do not know whether you are acquainted with him or not, but he stands high in his profession in this county.

I know that you have always expressed a friendship for the men who were in the Spanish War. I also know that there are a great many fraudulent pension claims granted in the regular routine, and also that the man who had a poor hospital record does not stand upon the same footing as the man who was always answering the hospital call. I also appreciate that the matter of getting a special bill through Congress requires considerable work, and that there are many fraudulent claims continuously being put before the committee.

The boys have put this matter in my hands, and I hesitated a considerable time about whether to send the original affidavits to you or to Mr. HUMPHREY. Inasmuch as Mr. Yates had talked to Mr. HUMPHREY about the matter, and HUMPHREY had agreed to do something for him, I finally thought it best to send them to him, and I know that in doing so you are too broad-minded a man to feel that the originals should have been sent to you. I believe further that you will recognize merit, and I firmly believe that it is going to be your endeavor to represent upon broad-minded grounds the district in which you reside, and it is upon such assumption that I am writing you this letter, because I believe that it has reached that stage in politics where merit will prevail and the man who endeavors to hand out a square deal will be recognized; and I want, in closing, to assure you that any consideration you can give to this claim will be appreciated by our organization within King County.

It is needless for me to say that I am acting in this matter not as an attorney, but I am willing to do anything that I can for Mr. Yates, because I know that he is deserving, and if you can make any suggestions in connection with the subject matter of this letter, the same will be gladly received by myself and by the organization.

Very respectfully,

C. H. WINDERS.

These statements by Mr. Winders are verified by several affidavits, two of which follow:

IN THE MATTER OF THE APPLICATION OF HENRY YATES, ALSO KNOWN AS HARRY YATES, CORPORAL, TROOP B, ELEVENTH CAVALRY, UNITED STATES VOLUNTEERS, FOR PENSION.

STATE OF WYOMING,
County of ———, ss:

Walter Cross, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he was a private in Troop B, Eleventh Cavalry, United States Volunteers, from September 18, 1899, to the muster out of said troop in March, 1901, and during all of that period served in said troop and associated with and was well acquainted with Corpl. Yates, being Henry Yates and sometimes known as Harry Yates, being his bunk mate during a considerable period of that time, the said Yates being the only Yates in said troop; and affiant further states that he served with said Yates during the entire campaign in the Philippines, and that he has a distinct recollection of Yates being injured on the left knee or leg on at least two occasions, under the following circumstances:

He was kicked by his horse at Inus, P. I., and also by MacMahon's horse at Naig, P. I., MacMahon's horse kicking Ferrell, the blacksmith, at the same time it kicked Yates. The first accident happened some time between January 6 and January 27, 1900, at the time when his troop was escort to Gen. Bates, Yates being kicked at Inus either on the second or third day out on this trip. At that time he was kicked on the left knee, and also received a slight kick on the left cheek. He limped around for several days, and apparently suffered considerable pain. I do not believe, however, that he went to the doctors, because he was a man who would not call upon a doctor unless he was unable to move.

At Naig he was helper to the blacksmith, and as I have stated, both the blacksmith and himself were kicked by MacMahon's horse. This horse was a mean horse, but Capt. Davidson had directed that none of the horses be thrown when shod.

I was Yates's tent mate at the time, and I know that as a result of being kicked his left knee bothered him for some considerable time, and while he continued with his work he was required to use a stick or cane, and used a cane for some time thereafter.

It is my recollection that at the time that Yates and Ferrell were kicked that Capt. Davidson was present. This accident happened some time between February 22 and April 21, 1900.

I was very close to Harry Yates, being his tent mate, and I know that he continued to suffer from time to time from this leg. He would particularly complain after mounted drill that his leg pained him as a result of being rubbed by his carbine, and I know from my personal association with him that it gave him considerable trouble, although he was a man who would keep his troubles from being generally known and was not a man who could complain to his superior officers, as I am satisfied every officer and member of the troop will testify. I know that at times up to the time of our muster out Harry would complain of his leg; sometimes he thought that it might be rheumatism, but by reason of his grit he would not yield to the belief that he had any serious injury.

WALTER CROSS.

VANCOUVER, B. C., December, 1912.

On or about the last part of March or the first part of April, 1900, Harry Yates, of Troop B, Eleventh United States Volunteer Cavalry, was in my squad while in the service. I remember quite well of Harry being kicked on the knee by a vicious sorrel horse which Capt. Davidson had given orders not to be thrown while being shod. I also remember Harry Yates complaining about his knee bothering him for some time afterwards, especially after mounted drill. How I remember this so well—from being in my squad, I felt it well to be as lenient with him as possible.

Then follow affidavits by A. V. Davidson, Tim Ericson, Fred Duhig, John W. McMahon, D. M. Bourns, one of the most reliable physicians and surgeons of the Northwest:

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
County of King, ss:

F. S. Bourns, a physician and surgeon duly licensed in the State of Washington, declares as follows:

That he has been the medical attendant of Harry Yates since March, 1912; that at the time said Harry Yates was suffering from an injured knee which, after careful study into the history and actual condition of the patient, was determined by the affiant to be a cancer of the bone of the knee joint (inner condyle of the femur, left leg); that on the 9th of April, 1912, the leg was amputated above the knee for said cancer, and that the subsequent pathological examination proved it to be cancer of the bone (osteo sarcoma); that the affiant has since that time made careful study in regard to the origin of the growths of this character, and that in view of the fact that many cancers of this character give a clearly defined history of irritation or injury, in some cases extending many years back, the affiant is of the opinion that the injury sustained by said Harry Yates while in the service of the United States, being kicked twice by a horse on this same bone where the cancer subsequently developed and at the same spot where it subsequently developed, and there being an accompanying irritation following said injuries due to the constant irritation of horse-back riding, may be considered as the cause of the cancer which subsequently formed.

The principle involved on which this opinion is based is well known to the medical profession, and specific instances can be cited should such be required.

F. S. BOURNS.

[SEAL.] MARTHA H. WALKER, Notary Public.

Here we have a Spanish-American War veteran of splendid moral character hobbling about on one leg as a result of an injury received in the service under the conditions set forth, and yet he must go without a pension, although so many claims which, it seems to me, are much less meritorious are amply taken care of.

The bill I introduced covering this claim was as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7221) granting a pension to Harry Yates.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harry Yates, late of Eleventh Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

My colleague [Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington], to whom Mr. C. H. Winders sent the original affidavits, also introduced a similar bill. This claim ought to be allowed and the pension granted by this Congress. Never was a more meritorious case presented.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up the bill S. 7212.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 7212) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CALDER. I rise to oppose the amendment just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can proceed for five minutes.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, Minnie Wadsworth Wood is the widow of Gen. Oliver E. Wood, who served in the Civil War as a private soldier for about a year and a half and obtained an honorable discharge. After this service he entered West Point Military Academy, graduated in 1867, and was then appointed second lieutenant. He served continuously from 1867 to 1902. He had some service in the Indian wars and all through the Spanish War, retiring as a brigadier general. On his death in 1910 he left a widow with little or no income, and this provision in the bill seeks to give the widow a pension of $40 a month, which is the amount usually granted to widows of general officers. The report of the Senate committee indicates that he was sick during the last years of his life, and while it has been impossible to directly trace the cause of his death to illness incurred in the service, the doctors who examined him rather indicate that unquestionably this was the case. I repeat, he served nearly 40 years in the Regular Army, he had a year and a half service in the Civil War, and, in view of the many precedents established, it seems to me that in so meritorious a case the Congress would be doing simple justice in granting this pension. [Applause.] I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the House will vote down the committee amendment.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this House is going to attempt to amend these omnibus bills on the floor of the House. I will state to the gentleman from New York that this item will receive proper consideration in conference. I think it is a bad precedent to amend these bills on the floor of the House. On page 47 of the report, report No. 1448, the gentleman will note the reasons set out in the report why the committee declined to make a favorable report on this item, and I trust the gentleman will not press his amendment.

Mr. CALDER. I am going to ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CALDER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 25.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The following committee amendments were severally considered and severally agreed to:

Page 3, strike out lines 4 to 7, inclusive (Michael Grace).
Page 3, strike out lines 8 to 13, inclusive (Lillian J. Hartley).

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
FREDK. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? I did not hear all of the statement. Is this a complete report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a complete report.

Mr. MANN. So that agreeing to this report agrees to the sundry civil bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It winds the sundry civil bill up.

The bill as it passed the House carried $125,790,047.79. The Senate added $2,390,372 and struck out $1,100,000 of the amount provided by the House for the physical valuation of railroads. The total amount added by the Senate was $1,290,372. The bill as it passed the Senate carried $127,080,419.79. The Senate receded from $1,262,669, and the conference restored $1,100,000 for the physical valuation of railroads.

The bill as agreed upon carries $126,922,750.79, or $1,127,703 more than it carried when it passed the House. The appropriations for the current year in the sundry civil bill were $130,728,037.39. This bill is $3,805,286.60 less than the appropriations for the current year. The estimates submitted for consideration in the preparation of this bill were $137,616,472.89, and the bill carries $10,693,722.10 less than the estimates submitted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what was done with the Senate amendment reducing the appropriation for the valuation of railroads?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amount recommended by the House was restored—$3,000,000.

There is only one other matter to which perhaps I should call the attention of the House. That is the amendment of the Senate relative to the connecting parkway between Rock Creek Park and Potomac Park. The Senate amendment authorized the changing of the map by the commission and the acquisition of such additional land as they deemed desirable or the exclusion of land, providing that no more is acquired than originally authorized. It was impossible to ascertain just what was desired to be done in the way of acquiring or eliminating land. The conferees agreed to a provision authorizing the commission to have a survey made so as to show the proposed changes, and appropriated $5,000 to enable that to be done.

If no one wishes further information, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield to me two or three minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman what became of the $15,000, which was an increased amount for the investigation of gas and petroleum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the Senate receded, and the appropriation of $35,000, recommended by the House, is made.

That was Senate amendment No. 61. The House recommended $35,000, and the Senate increased the sum to $50,000, and the Senate receded. The amount appropriated is $35,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I realized that, of course, the conferees were endeavorng to keep this bill down to the lowest amount possible, and I want to congratulate the chairman and those who were with him in their efforts to reduce this appropriation below what it was last year and so much below the estimates as made to Congress. This appropriation is:

For inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas, with a view to economic development and conserving resources through the prevention of waste; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting the industry, $35,000.

It was raised by the Senate to $50,000 and not agreed to, and it remains at $35,000. It is the second appropriation Congress has made for this purpose, and we are gratified to know that this investigation has resulted in such a great conservation of this natural resource of our country. It has been demonstrated in Oklahoma that it is possible to conserve and save the natural gas so that it may be utilized at some future time and not permitted to be wasted as usually is done in the oil fields throughout the country.

This morning the newspapers carried the news, which is correct, that a discovery has been made by those connected with the Bureau of Mines whereby they are able to realize by a new process, which, of course, will be given to the people, and may secure in the extraction of gasoline more than twice as much as now is secured in the refining process. It is known that the Standard Oil Co., of course, has a patented process whereby they are able to extract more than independent companies, but under this new process every independent company in the country will be able to avail itself of the discovery by this bureau. I am sure that the appropriations that have been made in the past, which amount to $60,000, have worked great good to the people generally throughout the country. I am pleased to know that such progress is being made along these lines as we have had.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to inquire of the status of the debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has an hour if he wants it, and has the right to move the previous question at any time he gets ready.

Mr. DIES. I would like 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if it was his purpose to insert the Secretary of the Interior's explanation?

Mr. FOSTER. I may insert a part or all of it.

Mr. BORLAND. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. I wanted to do that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to print the information conveyed in the interview of Secretary Lane:

WASHINGTON, February 27.

Secretary of the Interior Lane to-day announced the discovery by the United States Bureau of Mines of two chemical processes, one of which, it is claimed, will be of tremendous importance to the oil industry, greatly increasing the supply of gasoline, while the other may make the United States absolutely independent of the rest of the world in regard to important materials necessary for the dye industry and the manufacture of high explosives used in warfare and in engineering operations.

The first of these processes promises to enable the independent refiners in this country to increase their output of gasoline from petroleum 200 per cent or more. With an estimated production on the part of the independent refiners of 12,000,000 barrels of gasoline in a year, this will mean an output from the independents alone of 36,000,000 barrels, greater than the total production to-day from all sources.

The second process includes the manufacture from crude petroleum of what is known chemically as toluol and benzol, both of which have heretofore been obtained from coal tar. As Germany has specialized far beyond other countries in by-products from coal, the United States and the rest of the world have been dominated by that country as regards those products of toluol and benzol, which are the important bases for the production of dyestuffs and high explosives, and especially smokeless powder.

The discoverer of these two valuable processes, after many years of research, is Dr. Walter F. Rittman, chemical engineer of the Bureau of Mines, the work having been done at Columbia University, New York, the facilities of the laboratory there having been turned over to the Federal Government by President Nicholas Murray Butler.

Application has been made by Dr. Rittman, on behalf of the Federal Government, to patent these processes in order to prevent any monopoly in their use, the patents to be dedicated to the whole American people.

"These processes," said Secretary Lane to-day, "are fraught with the utmost importance to the people of this country. For some time the Standard Oil Co., through the great amount of money at its command, through its employment of expert chemists, and through its extensive organization, has had a big advantage over the independents in the production of gasoline, this company having a patented process that obtains for it as much as three times the amount of gasoline from a given quantity of petroleum as the independents now obtain. There are two or three other large corporations that have an efficient process for the manufacture of gasoline, but the independents, as a whole, have never been able even to approach the results obtained by the Standard Oil Co. Now the Federal Government, through the efforts of Dr. Rittman, proposes to make free for the use of all of the people of this country who wish it a process that is confidently expected to increase their yields of gasoline from crude petroleum fully 200 per cent, and perhaps more, such results having repeatedly been obtained in the laboratory.

It is claimed by Dr. Rittman that his process is safer, simpler, and is more economical in time than processes now in use, and these are economic factors of great importance. With a steadily increasing demand for gasoline for automobiles, motor boats, and engines this fortunate discovery comes at the proper time. It is but two years ago that the automobile industry, fearful that the supply of gasoline might not be adequate for its rapidly expanding business, offered through the International Association of Recognized Automobile Clubs a prize of $100,000 for a substitute for gasoline that would cost less than gasoline. Happily the urgency of this situation has passed, and at the present time there is a plentiful supply of motor fuel to meet immediate demands. This new process adds to the hope that in spite of the wonderful growth in the use of gasoline there may not be any shortage in the future. It indicates an increased production of gasoline from the present production of petroleum—an output of 50,000,000 barrels instead of 25,000,000 as under the present methods. It will render free for use to all the results of that efficient and intelligent research which has heretofore been only at the command of the wealthy. I am led to believe that it will not only be of inestimable value to the refiners commanding but limited capital as well as those of wealth, but also to the hundreds of thousands of users of gasoline. When it is realized that the gasoline industry each year in this country yields products amounting in value to between $100,000,000 and $150,000,000 the importance of this discovery is seen.

The second process discovered by Dr. Rittman may prove of much more value to the country than the first, in that it suggests the establishment of an industry in which Germany has heretofore been preeminent—the dye industry; and also promises indirectly a measure of national safety of incalculable import. Among necessary ingredients of high explosives used in modern warfare toluol and benzol are in the first rank. Heretofore these products have mainly been obtained in Germany and England from coal tar, and the explosive manufacturers have had to depend largely on the supply from these sources in the making of explosives. I understand that some toluol and benzol have been obtained from American coal and water gas tars, but this supply does not begin to satisfy the present demands. The Federal Government now proposes to obtain the toluol and benzol from crude petroleum also. I am further informed that these products can be produced from practically any American petroleum, and that the supply can be made sufficient not only for the entire American trade, but also for other purposes. This process has gone far enough to indicate that the two products can be produced at a reasonable cost. The real comforting thing, however, is that we have the knowledge that this new source of supply is at the command of our people, and that in time of great national stress, if the Nation is ever called upon to defend itself, we will be able to manufacture the most efficient and most powerful explosives known in warfare. Were it not for this discovery it is possible that in such an emergency we might be compelled to rely largely on the greatly inferior explosives that were used in the time of our Civil War, and this would spell national disaster.

Dr. Rittman concludes from his experiments that this process may become more economical than the German method of obtaining these products from coal tar, as this process not only makes toluol and benzol but also gasoline in considerable quantities. He intimated to me the possibility of the value of the gasoline being an important factor in paying the costs of the process. If this should prove to be true, it may result in eventually giving the United States a supremacy in the dyestuffs industry that has for some time belonged to Germany, since toluol and benzol are the source of many of these important dyestuffs that are used in the silk, cotton, and woolen industries. It would also tend to prevent disturbance of the great industries engaged in the manufacture of silks, cottons, and woolens in such extraordinary times as we are now experiencing, for we would be able to supply them with the necessary dyes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

[Mr. DIES addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Is this a privileged matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that instead of making the report through the basket I am making it direct to the House, in order that it may be printed.

The SPEAKER. It is in response to a resolution of the House. It is ordered printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Annie R. Chaffee, widow of Adna R. Chaffee, late lieutenant general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 5, line 3, strike out "$2,000 per annum" and insert in lieu thereof "$50 per month."

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, Adna R. Chaffee was born near Warren, Ohio, April, 1842. In July, 1861, he enlisted as a private in the Sixth United States Regular Cavalry. He fought throughout the Civil War. For gallant and meritorious services he was brevetted time and again during the four years of that great struggle. By bravery, executive ability, good judgment, and strict attention to duty he earned promotion after promotion from private to first lieutenant before the close of the Civil War, and from lieutenant of a company to lieutenant general of all our armies during his 40 years of active service after the war.

He led his troops in our Indian wars and in Cuba during the Spanish-American War. He was selected to command the American forces in the march of the allies on Peking, China, in 1900, and to command our Army in the Philippines afterwards. Following that he served at Chief of Staff at Washington until he was relieved for age in the spring of 1906.

Mr. Speaker, the following is the faithful, efficient, wonderful Army service record of Adna R. Chaffee: Private soldier in 1861; lieutenant general in 1904. It was thus recently given to the Senate of the United States by the Assistant Secretary of War:

Adna R. Chaffee enlisted in the Regular Army July 22, 1861, at Warren, Ohio, to serve three years, and was assigned as a private to Troop K, Sixth United States Cavalry; was appointed sergeant and first sergeant October 1, 1861, and September 26, 1862, respectively, and was discharged May 12, 1863, as first sergeant of that troop and regiment on account of promotion to second lieutenant. His service as a commissioned officer was as follows:

Second lieutenant, Sixth United States Cavalry, May 12, 1863; first lieutenant February 22, 1865; regimental adjutant from November 11, 1864, to December 12, 1866; regimental quartermaster from December 12, 1866, to October 12, 1867, when promoted to captain; major, Ninth United States Cavalry, July 7, 1888; lieutenant colonel, Third United States Cavalry, June 1, 1897; brigadier general, United States Volunteers, May 4, 1898; major general, United States Volunteers, from July 8, 1898, to April 13, 1899; brigadier general, United States Volunteers, April 13, 1899; colonel, Eighth United States Cavalry, May 8, 1899; major general, United States Volunteers, July 19, 1900; major general, United States Army, February 4, 1901; lieutenant general, United States Army, January 9, 1904, and was retired as such February 1, 1906. He died November 1, 1914, at Los Angeles, Cal.

He was brevetted as follows: First lieutenant, July 3, 1863, for gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of Gettysburg, Pa.; captain, March 31, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of Dinwiddie Court House, Va.; major, March 7, 1868, for gallant and efficient services in engagement with Comanche Indians at Point Creek, Tex.; and lieutenant colonel, February 27, 1890, for gallant service in leading a cavalry charge over rough and precipitous bluffs held by Indians on the Red River of Texas August 30, 1874, and gallant service in action against Indians at Big Dry Wash, Ariz., July 17, 1882.

Following is a detailed statement of this officer's service: Served with his regiment in the Army of the Potomac until wounded in the Gettysburg campaign at Fairfield, Pa., July 3, 1863; absent on account of wound to September, 1863; commanding troop to October 11, 1863, when wounded at the battle of Brandy Station, Va.; absent, sick, to November, 1863; with regiment in Army of the Potomac to August, 1864; in the Senandoah Valley, Va., to February, 1865, and in the campaign against Richmond, Va., to May, 1865, during which period he participated in all the battles, engagements, etc., in which his regiment was engaged (about 50), from the siege of Yorktown, Va., April, 1862, to Appomattox Court House, Va., April, 1865; with regiment at Frederick, Md., June to October, 1865; en route to and at Austin, Tex. Fourth Army Corps to December 14, 1898; chief of staff to Maj. Gens. Brooke and Wood, of the headquarters division of Cuba, Habana, Cuba, December 29, 1898, to May 16, 1900.

He was highly commended by Gens. Brooke and Wood for services rendered in the latter position, the former stating that "the Army has no better example of efficiency" and the latter that "he has filled the position with ability and assiduity rarely seen among public men." He left Cuba May 25, 1900, en route to Washington, and thence to San Francisco, sailing from the latter place July 3 and arriving at Taku, China, July 29, 1900, when he assumed command of the China relief expedition, which he commanded to May 26, 1901, when he proceeded to the Philippines.

He was highly commended by the President and Secretary of War "for the brilliant achievement in which the courage, fortitude, and skill of the American forces under his command in China played so honorable a part."

He arrived at Manila, P. I., June 5, 1901, and after making a tour of inspection of the islands, on July 4, 1901, assumed command of the Division of the Philippines and duties of military governor, and was relieved October 2, 1902; in command of the Department of the East, Governors Island, N. Y., November 21, 1902, to October 26, 1903; member of the General Staff from October 26, 1903, to January 9, 1904, when he became Chief of Staff. He was relieved as Chief of Staff January 15, 1906.

In the case of this officer the medical records show as follows: Wounded, right hip, ball, severe, at Battle of Fairfield, Pa., July 3, 1863; treated, June 10 to 15, 1870, intermittent fever, tertian; August 8 to 12, 1870, intermittent fever; November 1 to 14, 1871, abscess; April 15 to 20, 1873, sprain; December 2 to 4, 1884, quotidian intermittent fever, in line of duty, cured; November 28 to 30, 1893, influenza, in line of duty; December 4 to 13, 1893, epidemic influenza, in line of duty; January 10 to 31, 1894, hemorrhoids; operation, January 10, 1894, removed by clamp and cautery, in line of duty; June 12 to July 3, 1895, sprain, right knee, thrown from horse while on review June 11, in line of duty; hot applications, first; plaster of Paris bandage put on June 13 and removed June 25; at night knee swells slightly after exercising during day, but no pain; returned to duty, cure not complete.

Mr. Speaker, for the last few years of his life Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee was a resident of the district I represent. Soon after retiring from the service he moved to Los Angeles, Cal., where I had the honor of his acquaintance and the pleasure of serving with him in many public places. For several years, and until a very short time before he died, Gen. Chaffee was chairman of the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles. This board had direct charge of the building of the great Los Angeles aqueduct, costing $25,000,000, that is now bringing pure water sufficient to supply a city of 3,000,000 people from the snow-clad mountains 220 miles away.

We were glad to have Gen. Chaffee and his family come to us. We honored him, and ever shall, for his hand, his brain, and his time were always at the command of every good movement for the upbuilding of the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. Speaker, a pension is now sought for his widow. The Senate has expressed the opinion that $2,000 per annum should be paid. The House Pension Committee, in accord with its rule, which I understand it has never violated, has reported in favor of $50 per month. Mr. Speaker, I must oppose this reduction; $600 per annum is not enough. This country has been most liberal in its pensions. Many of the widows of our war generals are paid from $1,200 to $2,000 per annum. Mrs. Annie R. Chaffee, Gen. Chaffee's widow is reported by the Senate committee to be without income. A part of a personally written and personally signed letter to me from Mrs. Chaffee reads as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., December, 1914.

Hon. W. D. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS:

* * * * * * *

I forgot to tell you that I have no present income; but I am not unhappy, for I have had the honor of being the wife of Gen. Chaffee, and I am a happy, grateful woman. I am,

Sincerely, yours,
ANNIE R. CHAFFEE.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I have to say that the military record of Adna R. Chaffee, who entered the Regular Army as a private in 1861, served through all his country's wars and after, and who, because he was at all times a good soldier, rose step by step to supreme command, is a record that will prove a wonderful incentive to every man in the ranks. As a soldier his service to his country was extraordinary, his bravery and ability unquestioned. As a citizen all Los Angeles pays him tribute. His life among us was devoted to the public good.

Gen. Adna R. Chaffee gave 45 years of his life to his country. The least we should do, now that he is gone, is to make his widow comfortable for the remaining years of her life. I am sure the Senate and House will provide well before this matter is closed.

Mr. Speaker, with permission, I submit the following:

STANTON POST, NO. 55,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Los Angeles, Cal., January 29, 1915.

The Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Stanton Post, No. 55, Department of California and Nevada, Grand Army of the Republic, passed a resolution begging the Senate and lower House to grant to the widow of the late Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee a suitable pension.

The original resolution has this day been forwarded to the Hon. J. D. WORKS, of the Senate, and we beg that you confer with him on the subject.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. DERBY,
Adjutant of Stanton Post, No. 55, Grand Army of the Republic.

Resolution.

LOS ANGELES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Los Angeles, January 8, 1915.

Whereas Adna R. Chaffee, late lieutenant general of the Army of the United States and a resident of Los Angeles since his retirement from active duty in 1906, died in this city November 1, 1914, thus bringing to a close an honorable and distinguished career, devoted from early manhood to the service of his country as a soldier; and

Whereas Gen. Chaffee, by reason of the exactions of the military profession and of his whole-hearted devotion to duty, was unable to provide a competency for himself and family, and, consequently, left practically no estate for the support of his widow, who, from the time of her marriage to him as a young lieutenant, shared his life in loyal and affectionate helpfulness and joined with him in giving their children to the Army: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Los Angeles does most urgently request and recommend that the Congress of the United States make prompt, adequate, and suitable provision, by grant of pension, for the maintenance of the widow of Gen. Chaffee in comfort during her life, and that the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be urged to exercise their best efforts to bring about the passage of an act for that purpose; that a copy of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to each of such Senators and Representatives.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at the regular meeting held Wednesday, January 6, 1915.

LOUIS M. COLE, President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEY of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I present the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 20415) with Senate amendments.

The Clerk began the reading of the report (H. Rept. 1470).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the report of the committee is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Of course not. Has the gentleman any motion to make?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Senate amendments to H. R. 20415, and pending that I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to all Senate amendments except amendment 89, commonly known as the McCumber amendment.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how much time for general debate he thinks we ought to have on amendment 89?

Mr. LEVER. May I inquire of the gentleman from Texas how much time he desires?

Mr. HENRY. It seems to me we ought to have at least three hours for general debate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question? In the consideration of Senate amendment 89 in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, of course it is thrown open to amendment. There may be any number of amendments offered to the Senate amendment, or there may be different substitutes offered in different ways.

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Any part of it is subject to amendment?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, does the gentleman prefer to have a long general debate or more debate on the amendments which are offered in the committee?

Mr. HENRY. I really think it would shorten the time to have three hours of general debate, because the bills would all be better understood, and the debate under the five-minute rule would not be so long.

Mr. MANN. It does not make any difference to me. Of course I know what will happen if we have three hours' general debate on the bill. Everybody will leave the Chamber, and then when we come back we have got to discuss it over again under the five-minute rule, because it is a matter that is very difficult to vote upon without some understanding.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to gentlemen who are interested in this proposition that after we have gotten into Committee of the Whole I shall be extremely liberal in permitting debate on this proposition.

Mr. MANN. If you are not, the committee will be.

Mr. LEVER. There will be no disposition on my part to shut off the debate. All I desire is to get to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENRY. Let us try to agree on two hours' general debate. Can not we agree to two hours for general debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in the closing hours of Congress, with five or six general appropriation bills in conference which must be agreed to and the bills enrolled, it seems to me that if we want to consider the real merits of this question we do not want any general debate. The minute you announce general debate all but a few of the Members of the House will clear out.

Mr. HENRY. I think it would shorten the proceedings under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that two hours is not excessive.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If gentlemen want to speak on the merits of the question, they want an audience; and they will not get it under general debate.

Mr. MANN. We can have a sort of an understanding, if debate runs along, that we will rise to dispose of conference reports.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that is true; but I think it would be better to have a liberal debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama; but if we have conference reports on appropriation bills we ought to dispose of them so that if appropriation bills are agreed upon they can be enrolled; they can not all be enrolled in the last 15 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This bill will have to go to conference.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but if every other bill is out of the way we can sit all night, or any night, on this bill.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this proposition be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes; 30 minutes to be controlled by myself and 1 hour by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to say that I wish the opportunity to present a substitute for the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that that is a matter for the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman will have his right in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HULINGS. But what I wish to say is I desire to have some allotment of time out of this hour and a half.

Mr. MANN. Let me say to the gentleman that we will have to have some time on this side of the House.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion to the gentleman from South Carolina, that he ask unanimous consent to limit the debate to one hour and a half, the time to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and nobody be recognized for more than 10 minutes.

Mr. BATHRICK. I will not agree to that.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that general debate be limited to 2 hours; 1 hour to be controlled by myself, 30 minutes by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and 30 minutes by some one on the other side.

Mr. HOWARD. I object to that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think that this side of the House will be willing to take one-third of the 2 hours—40 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, 40 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina, and 40 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that the gentleman from South Carolina has made three requests and one motion. In the first place he asks unanimous consent that all the Senate amendments except Senate amendment 89 be disagreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I want to direct the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to Senate amendment 35, appropriating $3,000,000 for forest reserves. I want to ask if we can not have a separate vote on that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to all unanimous requests.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the House, outside of this other question, to remember that there are some 90 amendments to this bill, and we want to pass the Agricultural appropriation bill. I realize the importance of the McCumber amendment, but the other amendments are amendments that can be disagreed to. Do not let us get into a filibuster in regard to it. I ask unanimous consent that all amendments except amendment 89 be disagreed to before we go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENRY. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I told the gentleman from Alabama that I would not object, but for another reason I shall have to at this time, although I think we can dispose of them quickly in the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman wait? He has not heard what the request is.

Mr. MANN. It makes no difference; I object.

Mr. BORLAND. I was going to ask to have the debate limited to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider Senate amendment 89.

Mr. GARNER. To go into Committee of the Whole to consider all the amendments. The gentleman from South Carolina made a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider Senate amendments, and then asked unanimous consent to dis-agree to all the amendments except Senate amendment 89, and that was objected to, and now the motion is to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider all the Senate amendments, or you can not consider the bill.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. That is true; all the Senate amendments are referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all the Senate amendments, except Senate amendment No. 89, be reported back to the House with the recommendation that they be disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all of the Senate amendments, except Senate amendment No. 89, be disagreed to and that the committee report them back to the House as disagreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to his attitude, without embarrassing him, in respect to Senate amendment No. 35, which provides for an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the Appalachian Forest Reserve. If we can obtain a separate vote on that before final agreement is reached, in case the Senate does not recede from its amendment, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that can not be done in that way. The only way to do is to have a separate vote now. We can not make agreement at this stage of the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole for separate votes. It can be excepted from the request and we can have a separate vote now.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I was about to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin, without committing myself in advance as a conferee, that I realize very fully the condition of the Federal Treasury, and I will state that the agricultural appropriation bill as reported from the committee in the House was constructed upon the theory that we would not provide for any appropriations that would put new burdens upon the Treasury. The whole theory of myself and the committee was in the direction of holding down the appropriations in this bill; and that being true as to our attitude in the House, I take it the gentleman will draw a proper inference if he would say that it would be so with reference to our attitude in conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I assume the same may be said as to amendment 89, which provides for a half million dollar appropriation for building artificial lakes out in the deserts of Kansas.

Mr. LEVER. I have a strong notion that that will be true of that.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not eliminate from his request Senate amendment 88, on denatured alcohol?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Washington that, as far as I am able to do it, under the stress of other circumstances, I am studying that proposition. I would much prefer to permit it to go to conference at this time, until we can get some further information respecting it. I promise the gentleman a very serious and earnest consideration of it in conference, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman any objection to having a rising vote in the committee on amendment 35, the $3,000,000 Appalachian project, and amendment 87, with only a very limited debate, in order to show the attitude of the House, to strengthen, perhaps, the position of its conferees?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Wisconsin would permit, I would very much prefer to go to conference untrammeled.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to report Senate amendment 89.

The Clerk proceeded to read Senate amendment No. 89.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that there probably will be no objection if he asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, which I do not intend to do, I ask unanimous consent that both the McCumber amendment and the so-called Hollis amendment be printed in the RECORD at this stage, one following the other.

Mr. MANN. Of course this amendment will be printed, but the other amendment will not be printed until it is offered.

Mr. FERRIS. Why not let the two be printed at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Oklahoma that two requests for unanimous consent can not be pending at the same time.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENRY. If we dispense with the first reading of the amendment——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects and the gentleman from North Dakota objects.

The Clerk will report the Senate amendment numbered 89.

"That there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the Bureau of Farm Credits. Said bureau shall be presided over by an officer who shall be designated Commissioner of Farm Credits. The Secretary of the Treasury shall provide for sufficient clerical force to perform the duties of said bureau.

"That there is hereby appropriated and set aside for the use of said bureau, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"That the said sum so provided shall be used for the purpose of purchasing notes secured by first mortgages on agricultural lands, as hereinafter provided, for stationery and clerical expenses, and such other expenses as may be incident to the business of said bureau.

"That every national bank and every State bank desiring to avail itself of the privileges herein provided are hereby created and declared to be agencies of the Treasury Department for the purpose of receiving from mortgagor notes and mortgages securing same, advancing the moneys to the said mortgagors and transmitting said notes and mortgages to the Bureau of Farm Credits, and receiving in return therefor the amount advanced to the mortgagor by the said bureau.

"That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to apportion the sum hereby appropriated among the several States according to the agricultural population, importance of the agricultural productions of each State, and percentage of agricultural lands incumbered by mortgages or trust deeds, and to pay for such notes and mortgages as may be presented to the extent of the amount apportioned to any State.

"That any owner of agricultural lands within the United States, who is living upon and farming such lands, desiring a loan under the provisions of this act, shall execute a promissory note due in 10 years, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, interest payable annually, which interest shall be evidenced by 10 coupon notes attached to said principal note, and which coupons shall also bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of maturity until paid, payable annually. Said note shall also provide that the principal may be paid on any interest-paying day after the expiration of five years. Said note shall be secured by a first mortgage upon the lands so farmed by the owner, and executed and recorded in the manner provided by the laws of the State in which the land is situated, for the execution and recording of mortgages on real estate. Such mortgage shall be accompanied by an application for loan, which application shall recite the purpose for which the loan is desired, the market value of the land, the value at which it was last assessed for taxation, the value and kind of buildings thereon, the number of acres under cultivation, the character and quality of the soil, the number of acres capable of being cultivated, and such other information as may be required by the rules of the said said bureau. Said application shall have attached thereto or made as a part thereof an affidavit signed by the owner and at least two neighbors who are thoroughly acquainted with land values in the vicinity, stating the market value of such lands and the market value of the particular lands to be mortgaged. Said note, mortgage, and application shall also be accompanied by an abstract of title duly certified by an abstract company, the register of deeds, or other officer authorized by the laws of the State to make and certify abstracts of lands, which abstract shall show no other mortgages, judgments, delinquent taxes, or other liens of any character against the said lands, unless the purpose of the loan is to secure money to cancel such liens. Said owner shall then present to any national bank or State bank accepting the provisions of this act the said loan papers. The said abstract and papers shall be carefully examined by the president, cashier, or other officer of the bank for the purpose of ascertaining whether the title is perfect in the mortgagor, whether the land is affected by any liens, who shall certify the result of his examination of the abstract, and who shall further certify what in his opinion and judgment is the actual cash selling price of the land. And no mortgage shall be accepted for a greater amount than one-half of the value of such lands, including improvements; nor in any event to an amount exceeding one-half of the actual market value thereof. The said bank may charge the borrower for its services in examining papers and abstract and in forwarding the papers to the Bureau of Farm Credits a sum not exceeding 1 per cent of the amount of the mortgage. No mortgage shall be less than $300 nor more than $10,000 to one person or company, and shall be in multiples of $100. The said notes and mortgages shall not be dated at the time they are executed and presented to the bank. The said bank shall forward all the said papers to the said Bureau of Farm Credits, which bureau shall examine the abstract, note, mortgage, and application, and if said abstract shows the land to be clear or to have no liens of greater amount than the amount desired to be loaned, and all papers properly executed, it shall remit to the bank forwarding the papers the amount of the loan, and shall date the notes and mortgage the date on which the remittance is made, from which date interest shall begin to accrue; and all coupons shall be dated to correspond with the date affixed to the principal instrument; and said bureau shall return, with the remittance, the abstract of title. Upon receipt of the said abstract of title by the bank, said bank shall require the abstract to be continued up to date of payment by said bank to the borrower, and if said abstract after being continued shows the land clear, the bank shall indorse over to the borrower the remittance made by the Bureau of Farm Credits. If there are any liens upon the land, the bank, out of the remittance, shall first pay and have canceled such liens and pay the balance to the borrower. The bank shall be held responsible for any negligence in the performance of its duties as agent of said bureau. The principal and all interest coupons shall be payable at the bank where and through which the loan is negotiated and remitted by said bank to said bureau.

"That whenever the Bureau of Farm Credits shall have received such mortgages to the extent of $1,000,000, it shall issue bonds in the name of the United States, payable in 20 years and bearing 4½ per cent interest, payable annually, with the privilege and option of the said bureau to pay the principal at the expiration of 10 years. Said bonds shall be issued in denominations from $100 to $500 each, and the said Commissioner of Farm Credits shall sell the said bonds for the face value thereof to any persons applying therefor, preference being given to those desiring small investments. Said bonds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States, a State, or municipality. All moneys received by the said commissioner in the sale of bonds and the principal and all interest paid on said mortgages shall be covered into the said fund of $10,000,000 and used in the payment of mortgages as they may be presented, the expenses of the bureau, the interest on bonds, and payment thereof at maturity.

"That all mortgages shall run to the Commissioner of Farm Credits, and said commissioner shall have all the rights and authority of a mortgagee under the laws of the State wherein such mortgage is executed.

"That all taxes of every kind levied by a State or municipality which may become a lien prior to said mortgage shall be paid by the mortgagor at least 30 days prior to the time such lands could be sold for delinquent taxes. Upon his failure to do so, or to pay any other lien that may attach to said lands and become superior to said mortgage, the commissioner may pay the same and the mortgage shall stand as security for such sums so paid and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum. And said mortgage shall further provide that in default of the payment of any interest or the payment of taxes, or other superior liens, as aforesaid, the commissioner may foreclose the premises pursuant to the laws of the State in which the land is situated. All papers necessary for the foreclosure proceedings shall be prepared and premises foreclosed by the proper law officer of the bureau. In lieu of foreclosure the commissioner may sell the mortgage to any person desiring to purchase the same, without recourse, and the money so received shall be covered into the said fund. Upon foreclosure, the said commissioner may transfer and assign the certificate of sale to any purchaser, and after the period of redemption has expired, may sell the lands. And any sum received therefor shall in like manner be covered into said fund.

"That it is the purpose of this act not only to secure and facilitate borrowing upon agricultural lands at a reasonable rate of interest, but also to afford a means for those who desire a safe investment, and so long as the said bureau shall be able to dispose of bonds at par it shall accept mortgages presented to any extent above the $10,000,000 hereby appropriated.

"That said bonds shall be negotiable in form, and transferable by indorsement, and may be bought and sold by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913, and may also be received as collateral for the issue of Federal reserve notes under the provisions of section 16 of said act.

"That the word 'mortgage' shall be construed to include deeds of trust or any other instruments of security on agricultural lands.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all needful rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act.

"That this act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVY. Is it proper now to offer a substitute for that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture has been in session to-day from 9.30 o'clock until 1 o'clock considering the various rural-credit bills that have been offered in this Congress, the numbers of which and the authors of which I desire to print in the RECORD at this time, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list referred to is as follows:

RURAL-CREDIT BILLS.

Messrs. SMITH of Maryland, BATHRICK, AIKEN, TAYLOR of Colorado, HAMMOND, HULINGS, THOMPSON of Oklahoma, DOOLITTLE, MOSS of Indiana, HOWARD, BULKLEY (also for commission), KEATING, HENRY, KELLY of Pennsylvania, MCKELLAR, CARAWAY, TRIBBLE, BARTON, MORGAN of Oklahoma, and HELGESEN (also for commission).

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, when we have gotten into the discussion of this bill under the five-minute rule, I desire to say to Members that I shall offer, as directed by the Committee on Agriculture, what is known as the Hollis bill, as a substitute for the amendment numbered 89, the Hollis bill having been reported unanimously by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate on Saturday.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BULKLEY. Is it exactly the same as was reported by the Senate Committee?

Mr. LEVER. It is exactly the same, to the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20415, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20415, with Senate amendments thereto; and pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on Senate amendment numbered 89 be limited to two hours.

Mr. EDWARDS. That includes all amendments?

Mr. LEVER. All other amendments have been disposed of; and that one-third of that time be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], one-third by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and one-third by myself.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that general debate on Senate amendment numbered 89 be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that general debate on Senate amendment No. 89 to the Agricultural appropriation bill be limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment. I was demanding recognition to offer an amendment in regard to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER. I offer an amendment that debate be closed in three hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I understand this question is debatable. The previous question has not been ordered——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I was recognized——

Mr. HOWARD. The Chair has recognized me.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. After the Chair recognized me, I asked whether this question was debatable or not, to be certain of my rights, and the Chair recognized me. Can the gentleman from South Carolina now under any guise of procedure take me off my feet?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman for a parliamentary inquiry, as he understood.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, sir, I addressed the Chair for the purpose of securing an extension of time for debate. The previous question has not been ordered. The Chair recognized me, and I think I am within my rights when I desired to increase the length of time on this important question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to recognition to move the previous question.

Mr. HOWARD. But, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that the gentleman from South Carolina had not been recognized. I was recognized by the Chair and the Chair could not take the gentleman from South Carolina off his feet and recognize me when I was not within the scope of my rights under the parliamentary procedure of this House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOWARD. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama for the purpose of asking me a question, but I do not yield the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think we have taken up the time of the House and I want to ask unanimous consent that all debate close in two hours; that is what the gentleman wants.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, the reason I am taking this course—and I want to be perfectly frank about it—I do not propose, unless I can secure some time to present the views that I have about this question, a question involving the most important piece of legislation that has been presented to this House for 50 years, to be run away with by a crowd of people who have only their personal ambition at heart. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusets had offered an amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think the Speaker recognized me to move the previous question on my own motion and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. I have not yielded the floor. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Georgia does not have the floor in my time.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that we are in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from South Carolina——

Mr. HOWARD. I had it all the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from South Carolina to move the previous question.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. Is not this the situation? The gentleman from South Carolina moved to close debate in an hour and a half. I offered an amendment to make that a longer time. If there is to be recognition for debate I am entitled to recognition for debate. The gentleman from South Carolina at any time has the right to interpose a motion for the previous question. On the other hand, the gentleman from Georgia has a right to interpose an amendment to my amendment, but the motion for the previous question under the rules has preference over a motion to amend. After my motion has been entertained by the Chair it can not be cut out and another motion offered. Therefore I submit that the regular order is the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to close debate on his motion with my motion pending as an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true, as has been so clearly expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I think the troubled waters have been smoothed on this side, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my previous motion by asking unanimous consent that general debate on this proposition be limited to two hours, one-third of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], one-third by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and one-third by myself, out of which I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY. I will give you 5 of mine.

Mr. HOWARD. All right. I withdraw my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], withdrawing his motion to limit debate, asks unanimous consent——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the general debate on amendment No. 89 to the Agricultural appropriation bill shall be limited to 2 hours, one-third of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], one-third by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], and one-third by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], the gentleman from South Carolina to yield 10 minutes out of his time to the gentleman from Georgia. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object, and demand the regular order.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas objects and demands the regular order. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that general debate on Senate amendment No. 89 be limited to two hours, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the general debate on Senate amendment No. 89 be limited to two hours, and on that he moves the previous question. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it..

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 140, noes 5.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas makes a point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and sixteen Members are present—a quorum.

Upon this vote the ayes are 140 and the noes are 5, and the previous question is ordered.

The question is on limiting the debate to two hours.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The house again divided, and there were—ayes 145, noes 17.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory. The Chair has just counted a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has been a vote since that time.

The WINGO. There are only 181 Members actually in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eighteen gentlemen are present—a quorum. The ayes have it.

The question is on the House resolving itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the measure.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 176, noes 4.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that is dilatory.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that it is dilatory.

Mr. WINGO. A great many Members have left the Hall. There is not a quorum in the Hall and there has not been to-day. There are some strange faces here that I have never seen before, but there is no quorum of Members present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fourteen gentlemen are present—a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate amendment No. 89 to the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate amendment No. 89 to the Agricultural appropriation bill. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LEVER. I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to occupy this time to say to the House that we expect to pass this bill and send it to conference before we adjourn to-night. It is necessary to have a quorum to do so, and I hope the Members will make arrangements to remain here, no matter how late it may be, to attend to this business. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HENRY. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] yield to me 15 minutes?

Mr. HAUGEN. I have not been recognized by the Chair as yet.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, in the time that has been allotted to me I wish to have offered as a substitute the bill that I introduced in this House on the 12th day of January and have it pending during the discussion, and to be voted upon at the proper time. I wish to offer it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment for the information of the House, and the Clerk will read it in the gentleman's time.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I have it read, Mr. Chairman, will it be in my time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then I will just have it pending and not have it read, because I have not the time.

In the few minutes that I have I shall call attention to the parliamentary situation now confronting Members of this House. The Senate adopted an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill known as Senate amendment No. 89, or the McCumber amendment. This embodies a principle for which I stand—that is, Government aid for rural credits. I do not believe anyone seriously contends that the amendment is workable in its present form. The Committee on Agriculture has brought out a bill as a substitute therefor, which is the bill S. 5542, as amended and reintroduced in the Senate on the 27th day of this month as reported out of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I do not know how many of you have read this bill. If you strike two provisions out of it, there is nothing remaining in it. Strike out of that bill the provisions for collecting money from the farmers and the provisions whereby the company which collects the money can be put into bankruptcy when it has spent the money, you have nothing else left. It provides for getting the farmers money. It provides for putting the company into bankruptcy when the money has been absorbed by some process, and that is the only thing it does. That is all the farmer will get out of it. It does say that if the farmers can get any money they may loan it back to themselves at a rate of interest not higher than the legal rate in the State wherein they may reside. In other words, it says you have all the rights you ever had to loan yourself money if you can get it, provided you do not violate the usury laws of the State in which you live. But, bless your heart, it does not even provide a penalty if you loan it at a rate higher than the legal rate in your State. It just says that you ought not to do it.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Does it not thereby repeal all the usury laws of the several States under this system?

Mr. CARAWAY. It can not repeal the usury laws of the States, as I understand it, but it makes inoperative the usury laws of the States as applied to a loan under this bill. This bill means this, gentlemen—it does not mean anything else; do not let us disguise the issue—it simply means that if farmers residing in a community have money to loan to each other they may do so, providing they pay the overhead charges incident to the loaning and collecting of the money from themselves and paying for the abstracts of title.

There is no use in pretending that we do not understand this. It means, gentlemen, that you say to us who have worked and hoped for relief, "Adopt this measure or you get nothing," and to adopt it means less than nothing.

I hope a bill introduced by me on this subject, and which I shall offer here as an amendment, may prevail. If it does not, I shall vote for the Senate amendment 89, known as the McCumber amendment. If we concur in that amendment, the conferees can not lay their hands on it, and we get a beginning. We have pledged this Government to aid a farm credit system. Another Congress can perfect it. It would not dare repeal it. Therefore I shall, if my amendment does not succeed, support the McCumber amendment. I shall do this because I want to serve my people more than I desire to be partisan. All who want to aid the farmer must forget the origin of the amendment and support the system. I am willing to do so.

It is asserted here that if any bill passes committing the Government to aid the farmers, it will not meet the President's approval and that we will be convened in extraordinary session to pass this appropriation bill. This may be true. It will not swerve me in my course in this vote I shall cast to-day. I shall serve my people first and let the results to follow be faced hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] is recognized.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, at the close of 10 years of public service as a lawmaker, the most consoling thought that lights my way to-day is that in private life and the future pursuit of my profession as a lawyer I shall always derive inspiration from the many experiences by which my mind and heart have been enriched in the American Congress.

No man with a proper conception of the purposes of laws, the functions of government, and the duties of public officers can serve here without increasing his respect for the views of others and fortifying his faith in our institutions.

Whether the study of books or the constant association with the master minds in the public life of a nation yield the greatest intellectual pleasure and profit may be a question, but the combination of both should render any man happy, and to acknowledge that happiness I have taken the floor to-day.

I have witnessed scenes and heard appeals here as thrilling, eloquent, and impressive as ever marked the proceedings of a legislative body.

Probably the most dramatic scene during that period was the challenge of Speaker Cannon, then in his thirty-fourth year of service in the House and seventy-fifth year of life, to depose him as Speaker, and quite as dramatically the House voted to continue him in office.

The only speech in ten years completely to sway the House from one side of a proposition to the other was delivered shortly after midnight by William G. Brantley, of Georgia, on the purposes of law, the dignity of courts, and the privileges of the House. [Applause.] The most powerful peroration was that of Speaker CLARK, when he closed the debate on the Panama Canal tolls repeal and flung defiance in the face of the President. [Applause.] The readiest all-around debater was JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS; the keenest humorist, Adam Bede; and the hardest worker, JAMES R. MANN. [Applause.] The prince of presiding officers for speeding legislation was James S. Sherman. [Applause.] The most pungent debater was Charles E. Littlefield, of Maine; the most ornate was Bourke Cockran; and the most classic in his sarcasm was Judge De Armond, of Missouri. [Applause.] The most placid was OSCAR UNDERWOOD, and the most courtly was Gen. Harry Bingham, father of the House.

The greatest mistake made in my time was enlarging the House membership. This did much to impair its efficiency and destroy its decorum.

The greatest evil that confronts the Congress to-day is the increasing centralization of power in the executive and the tendency of the legislative branch to yield to presidential dictation. [Applause.]

At home and abroad our position is interesting in the extreme.

Every great agency of American development has been put in harness. The railroads are in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The banks are in the hands of the Federal Reserve Board. Business is in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission. What is to be the result of it all?

Certainly the country need halt no longer for want of safeguards. Let us henceforth stifle the spirit of criticism and cheer the Nation and its struggling millions on their way to prosperity.

While I retire voluntarily from public life, my regret at parting with the many pleasant associations here is as profound and sincere as ever accompanied any man from this Chamber.

For the manifold courtesies accorded me by members of all parties and for the chain of friendships which link me with every section of this Republic, I now acknowledge my debt of gratitude. To me it is all a priceless heritage.

Unless one intends to devote his entire life to the public service, ten years is an ideal period to serve in the lawmaking branch of the National Government. Four years are essential for apprenticeship, leaving the remaining years for temperate and judicious service in the solution of important public questions. Such service makes one a better man, a better citizen, a better lawyer, and a more sincere and thoughtful patriot than any other experience in life.

In the enactment and interpretation of laws the last decade has been the most important since the adoption of the Constitution. Storms have raged, passions have run high, and occasional errors have marked the way, but out of it all we emerge a stronger, fairer, and better people. The follies of doctrinaires and the shallow pretenses of demagogues ultimately will be discarded by the people, while the laws and the institutions which are born in the minds of temperate and thoughtful men will remain. [Applause.]

OUR PLACE AMONG THE NATIONS.

A few years ago I represented this Nation in the peace conference in the city of Brussels. I stood upon the mound at Waterloo where Wellington and his allied forces lowered the colors of France. Belgium was then the most beautiful and most blessed country in Europe. A few days later I looked down upon that wonderful sarcophagus of Egyptian marble in which rested the ashes of Napoleon on the banks of the Seine, and I saw France around me in all her glory.

To-day Belgium presents the most pathetic picture in history. To-day France is a stricken nation. And as the hand of time marks the close of a century the people who as foes filled the trenches of Waterloo with their dead are fighting side by side as friends in the trenches of Europe to-day. On the other hand, those who were allies at Waterloo are to-day the objects of each other's fire and sword.

Strange, indeed, are the mutations of time and fleeting the friendships of nations!

In the presence of it all how seemingly like an inspiration is the counsel of Washington that we remain aloof from foreign alliances. May we never depart from that policy.

OUR FUTURE.

America is about to face the greatest opportunity ever presented to any nation in the world's history to strengthen and expand her commercial position at home and abroad, and to aid in bringing peace where guns now shatter cities, devastate fields, and mangle millions of God's children.

Anger and hatred feed the flames of war that were lighted by the follies of men. And, as I witness the awful consequences, my foremost thought and prayer is that our Executive and you whom I leave on guard will steer us clear of the shoals, and that the day will soon dawn

> When the war drums throb no longer
> And the battle flags are furled
> In the parliament of man,
> The federation of the world.

[Applause.]

With the permission of the House I shall add a brief correspondence with a committee of our leading citizens in which my gratitude to the people of my district was expressed:

APPEAL OF CITIZENS' COMMITTEE AND ANSWER OF MR. BURKE.

PITTSBURGH, March 28, 1914.

Hon. JAMES FRANCIS BURKE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BURKE: As the time is approaching for the primaries for the election of a Member of Congress from the thirty-first district, it has been rumored that you have decided not to come before the people as a candidate.

We sincerely hope that the rumor is unfounded and that you will continue to serve the people of this district as its Representative in the American Congress as you have done so faithfully and efficiently for the past 10 years. Your services at Washington in this capacity have reflected credit upon yourself, honored the community and the American Congress, and been of great benefit to our whole country.

We realize, however, that you may decide not to be a candidate. If such action should be contemplated, of course, we would naturally be interested in the selection of a worthy successor to take up this important work. Before any suggestions may be made for a candidate we would appreciate it if you will advise us as early as possible whether you have determined not to be a candidate.

Yours, very truly,

F. R. Babcock, John H. Jones, William M. Furey, William J. Diehl, R. B. Mellon, Pennock Hart, H. G. Bravo, William J. Black, William H. Stevenson, W. S. Brown, E. J. Taylor, James F. Keenan, F. F. Nicola, S. F. Heckert, S. E. Gill, George W. Theiss, F. M. Wilmot, R. B. Caldwell, John C. Bole, James L. Foster, C. Phillips Hill, Charles J. Graham.

MR. BURKE'S REPLY.

To the CITIZENS' COMMITTEE.

GENTLEMEN: The generous expressions contained in your recent letter, and others of a similar nature recently received from many other sources, ordinarily might tempt me to reverse my decision to retire from Congress and devote my energies entirely to my profession. My decision, however, is irrevocable.

No city in America has a more vital interest in our National Government and the manner in which its laws are made and administered than the city of Pittsburgh.

My public service has necessarily involved unceasing labor and much personal sacrifice. The last 10 years of governmental history in this country have been years of storm and strife. The longest sessions of Congress in the Nation's annals have been held. The study and the solution of public problems have imposed unprecedented burdens upon every Representative who sought intelligently and diligently to serve his constituency and his country.

Through it all I have endeavored to reflect credit upon my State and to perform my duty in a manner that will stand the test and command the sanction of history.

With a heart full of gratitude for the honors so repeatedly bestowed upon me by the people of Pittsburgh, and with a memory crowded with recollections of countless courtesies from my colleagues in Congress and from all with whom my public duties have brought me into pleasant contact for so many years, I reluctantly conclude this chapter of my public service.

If my future years in the practice of the law are half as pleasant as those I have spent in making laws, I shall continue to be a very happy man, with many friends to bless and no enemies to bury.

Very sincerely, yours,

JAMES FRANCIS BURKE.

PITTSBURGH, March 30, 1914.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the Sixty-third Congress is just coming to a close. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTERS].

Mr. WALTERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRIEST].

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, that leaves me 25 minutes and 15 minutes, or 40 minutes in all. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have worked for several years up to this point, and it is a little discouraging to me to present my opinions upon this subject in the brief time of five minutes.

We have here a very remarkable parliamentary situation. In the closing moments of this Congress we have the most important bill that we shall have considered when the Congress closes catapulted into the House of Representatives. There is nothing in all the scope of legislation that has been presented since I have been here, and that is four years, that is of so much importance to the people living in the country and living in the city as this legislation; and yet I am sorry to say that I believe probably 50 per cent of the Members of this House will cast their vote upon one proposition or another with very little knowledge of the subject.

I do not say this with any reference to what I know about it myself. I will say that I have specialized on this subject for three years, but we can not all specialize on every subject. But I had hoped that the time would come when the Members of this House would believe enough in my honesty and patriotism and desire to serve the people, so that, at a juncture like this, when many of us do not know and are not familiar with the facts, what I would say would be heeded.

Now, before my five minutes will have expired I want to explain this: We have had a bill which is called the Bulkley-Hollis bill. The Bulkley-Hollis bill was the result of the deliberations of a joint committee of the House and Senate which met and considered farm credits, and heard witnesses from all over the country, including the best students of the subject, for nearly three months.

This joint subcommittee proposed a certain bill. It was introduced in the House, but the full committee of the House did not support this bill, and it was never reported from the full Committee on Banking and Currency in the House; and up to the last few moments, when this parliamentary situation arose, the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate of the United States had given this subject little or no important consideration. But they were pushed to the issue, to get something that pleased a certain coterie of men who had certain preconceived notions about farm credits, which, in my opinion, were entirely foreign to the interests of the farmers of this country, to bring out this bill, known as the Hollis bill, because the parliamentary situation demanded it. Now, the McCumber amendment to the Agricultural bill as it came from the Senate will give every farmer in this country 5 per cent money, and it is more nearly workable and more nearly perfect than any other bill that has been presented to you. I know it is not perfect, and I know some things in it should be changed; and if I have the opportunity I shall offer as an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from South Carolina a revised McCumber bill. Now, I have no pride of opinion in that, but I believe if that is voted up and we can not vote up the McCumber amendment, it should be voted in this afternoon, and I will see that most of you get a copy of that revised McCumber bill.

Now, gentlemen, the bill reported by the Agricultural Committee has been under consideration by that committee from 9.30 o'clock until 1, and it never considered farm credits before to-day. The subject has never been before that committee before to-day. Yet there are people in this House, no doubt, who will say that because it comes from that committee, and because they may be in the dark respecting some provisions of this great legislation, they will follow the committee, and let it go at that. Oh, it is so easy to follow somebody in legislation. It is the easiest way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Agricultural Committee, as a coframer of the original Agricultural appropriation bill before it went to the Senate, where amendment 89, the so-called McCumber amendment, was added to it, and as one who has within the last few minutes come from the committee room, where the said amendment has been under consideration, I am indeed embarrassed to feel, as I do, that I can not join with the majority of my colleagues on that committee in their report to the House to substitute the Hollis-Moss-Fletcher rural-credits bill in preference to the Senate amendment 89. Since before the time I became a Member of Congress I have advocated, as a means of lowering interest rates, direct loans from the Government on approved security to farmers or prospective farmers, and my own particular views have been pressed on this House on many occasions in support of my own farm-loan bill, H. R. 11755. I am quite certain the so-called Hollis-Moss-Fletcher amendment which the committee has reported is much better than no bill at all, but, in my opinion, it lacks the fundamental principle of sufficient Government aid to make it an instrument that will lower materially interest rates to borrowers, and it is complicated. It is primarily to be financed by private funds, and that means profit to the man who has the private funds to invest rather than a reduction in the interest the borrower must pay. Private capital invests where the rate of return and the security is the most advantageous; public or Government funds take the larger view and invest, when properly directed, where most needed, properly safeguarded, of course, and where the welfare of the borrower is not ignored. The McCumber amendment is not perfect by any means. As examples of its imperfections as I see them, let me name a few: The interest rate provided is too high by at least 2 per cent—3 per cent on a farm mortgage ought to be enough. It does not provide for amortization; the methods of valuing the land offered as security are crude; it is not limited sufficiently as to the purposes for which the loan may be had. No loan should be had from the Government that is not for purchase price, permanent improvements, repaying encumbrances contracted at some prior time for purchase price or permanent improvements, and possibly for stocking up the farm in a needful and necessary manner. Borrowing for speculation should be definitely barred. There are other imperfections in the McCumber amendment, but it involves the right principle—that of Government aid. It is a long step in the right direction and has the parliamentary advantage of having passed the Senate, although it was scantily considered there, as has been truly said. At another time we can perfect the bill. Let us not lose the present opportunity to take the best we can get. I shall vote for the direct Government-aid plan rather than for the substitute, believing that no real relief can come to the already heavily oppressed borrower except through this course. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I had a tentative agreement with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] to yield to me 10 minutes, and I should like to use all my time at once.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that I was agreeing to that at the time we were trying to get a unanimous-consent agreement of the House; but inasmuch as I was forced to close this debate by a motion, with a filibuster incipient, I feel that I certainly ought to be entitled to 30 minutes myself, and I have yielded 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas, who controls the other end of the time.

Mr. HOWARD. I yield back my time to the gentleman from Texas, with thanks.

Mr. LEVER. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. I was no party to the filibuster.

Mr. LEVER. I acquit the gentleman of that and yield to him five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that this great question has to be dealt with in such a hasty manner. The truth about the business is I believe that a great many of us who are dealing with this question right now and are professing to help the farmer could not give even an intelligible definition of the word "amortization" used in these rural-credit bills.

I weigh my words well when I say that the legislation with which we are now dealing is the most important that this Congress has had to deal with in 30 years. Now we have here the Hollis bill. I do not believe these good gentlemen intend to hand the farmers a stone when they ask for bread, but after eight hours' study of this bill—that is all the time I have had to put onto it—I do not believe that the bill is going to help the farmer. I do not believe it is going to do anything else on this earth except to allow a lot of people who have got money to organize these banks in the different localities in this country and to issue bonds or debentures and try to sell them, and drag the farmers' securities around through the country, and I do not believe that the rate of interest is going to redound to the benefit of the farmer. I am going to be very frank about this matter.

The Lord in heaven knows that if there is ever a time for the crowd of men who represent the great American producers to be frank and sincere and honest with one another, that time is now. This is a very critical time in the history of the farmers of this country. We ought to be honest enough to say what we want to do for them; and I want to say that the farmers in my section of the country have never asked for anything from the date of the Ocala convention down to the present day—the most wild-eyed paternalists never asked for anything—except to be put on the same basis in financing their business that the great industrial corporations and railroads were placed upon, to wit, to have the privilege of bringing together their collective credits under proper supervisory methods, and after bringing those credits together, having their securities of unquestionable validity placed on the market in such a way that honest investing capital would seek a perfectly sane, safe, businesslike security. If I have interpreted the Hollis bill to mean anything, it means that when the farmer goes to sell his security he is brought into competition with other farmers seeking to do the same thing, and when they are in the market bidding for money they are necessarily increasing the interest charges that they will have to pay.

Now, there are two or three different sorts of securities that are offered under the Hollis bill. I am frank to tell you that I do not know what sort of securities they are, nor does anyone else.

In the limited time I have allotted to me I can make only the following criticisms and say that at the proper time I shall offer a substitute for the Hollis bill.

The Hollis rural banking bill, as amended on February 27, 1915, seems to be a general mixture of the provisions of various other bills which have heretofore been presented, and obviously is a compromise measure. The compromises suggested serve only to weaken the bill as originally presented.

The amended bill provides for the organization of a Federal farm loan board to supervise the operations of all the banks or associations contemplated under it. It then provides for local loan associations, limited to a county or contiguous counties, which can buy and sell farm mortgages. These associations can also indorse said mortgages and dispose of them to either one of two different kinds of institutions provided by the bill:

First. They can dispose of them to what is called the "Federal farm loan bank." This Federal farm loan bank seems to be a land-mortgage bank operating in a district substantially similar to a Federal reserve district, and having power to accept indorsed mortgages from the local associations and to issue debentures against the same. These Federal farm loan banks, which I shall refer to as district banks, are to have their capital subscribed for by the local banks or associations, by individuals, and by the State and National Government. The local banks must take at least $1,000 of stock in the district bank, or 10 per cent of their capital, before using the district bank. The United States Government must take all stock not taken by other parties. There must be at least 12 of these district banks, each with a minimum capital of $5,000,000, and the Government must take all stock not otherwise taken. The inducement to individuals to take stock is removed, because the individual can not vote the stock purchased.

The local associations and the district banks above described would seem to constitute a complete system in itself, but their operations are subject to a most remarkable limitation. The local banks can buy mortgages and sell them. In practice this means that they can only sell them locally. In addition they can indorse the mortgages and send them to the district bank, which can issue debentures against these mortgages. But the curious limitation is that the district bank can only issue these debentures to the amount of the certificates of deposit issued by the local bank for deposits made with it, such certificates being turned over by the local banks to the district bank to be exchanged for debentures. In other words, the district bank can only issue debentures to the extent of the local deposits in the local banks. The result is that the system up to this point only provides for the sale of mortgages to the extent of a local market and furnishes no opportunity for reaching a wider market.

Second. The local bank can sell its mortgages to an entirely different kind of bank, called a "Federal land bank," to be capitalized privately, to be limited in its operations to a State, and authorized specifically to do two things. First, it can itself purchase first mortgages anywhere in the State; second, it can buy first mortgages indorsed by local banks and issue debentures against them.

From the prominence given these Federal land banks, which I shall refer to as State land banks, because they have a State-wide right of mortgage purchase, it appears that the advocates of the bill depend principally on these State banks to find a general market for the debentures to be issued. There is no way by which the district banks can reach the general market, because their debentures are limited to the amount of certificates of deposit held by the local banks, as above stated.

The result of this would be that there would be 12 district banks—practically owned by the Government, and perhaps eventually owned by the local banks—selling one kind of debenture, but limited to a local market. There would probably be at least 48 State banks, privately owned, selling another kind of debenture wherever they could find a purchaser. Each of these 48 State banks would be liable for all the debentures issued by each of the other State banks.

The result is that competition between all these State banks to sell their debentures would necessarily create higher interest rates to the farmer, because of the competition for investment money. And any prospective purchaser of debentures would have to decide whether he would deposit his money in a local bank and buy the debentures of the district bank controlled by the Government or whether he would buy the debentures of the State bank on the open market. The bill specifically provides that the debentures issued by the State and district banks shall be so engraved as to be readily distinguished in form and color.

The bill also takes the whole rural banking plan into the Federal Reserve System by making the Federal reserve agent the trustee to hold mortgages against which debentures are issued, and by practically requiring all financial operations of rural banks to be carried on through the Federal reserve banks. The result is an unfortunate and unwise combination of rural and commercial banking, when the two should be absolutely separated.

The State banks must have at least $250,000 of capital, while the district banks have $500,000 of capital; but there is no connection or relation between the State and district banks. All debentures of each State bank are guaranteed by all other State banks. The debentures of each district bank stand separate and alone.

The rate of interest to be charged the farmers is based on the rate current in the State, and the system tends to a diversity of interest rates rather than to uniformity, and tends to higher interest rates because of the competition for investment money incident to the operation of so many competing banks.

The bill provides in general terms for local banks, for Government-controlled district banks, for privately controlled State-wide banks, and for the tying up of all of them to the existing Federal reserve banks.

The attempt is made with the State-wide banks to give their debentures the benefit of the collective credit of all the State-wide banks, but no such collective credit is used with the Government-controlled district banks.

Another most serious objection to the whole plan is that, while it provides that the guaranteed mortgages may be twenty times the amount of the capital and surplus of the local bank, these mortgages must all be long-term mortgages containing the amortization feature. They must run from 5 to 35 years.

The Howard-Smith bill provides that the local banks may guarantee long-term mortgages to the extent of fifteen times their capital and surplus, and short-term mortgages—running less than five years—to the extent of five times their capital and surplus. The Hollis bill does not make any provision for short-term mortgages, and no land-mortgage bank system can conceivably be complete which does not provide for short-term mortgages.

Practically all banks in the Hollis system are required to invest 5 per cent of their capital in United States bonds. The reason for this is not apparent, and it seems foolish to take a fund intended to help the farmers and invest a material portion of it in Government bonds.

In case of the State banks, the returns to the investors in the stock are limited to 6 per cent.

Many criticisms in detail might be made, but the above general criticisms would seem to be sufficient.

The Howard-Smith bill starts with a local institution operating in a county and proceeds through the State institution to the central institution, which alone can issue debentures. All the debentures are the obligations of the central bank, secured as to the different series by mortgages from different States. All are issued on mortgages guaranteed by local and State institutions. The smallest borrower in the most remote district gets all the benefits of the collective credit of the whole system. There is no competition for investment money, because one institution alone issues debentures, and every debenture is backed up by the same general class of land mortgages, with practically a similar amount of guaranty behind it. This will tend to produce uniformity in interest rates and lower interest rates.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to detain the committee for only a short while. We now have an opportunity to add an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill which will bring substantial relief to the farmers in the way of rural-credits legislation.

At the outset, permit me to call your attention to an authorized interview by the President published in the metropolitan newspapers in 1913, when the Democratic caucus of Members of the House of Representatives was considering the Federal reserve act. The President's statement was issued and printed on August 13, 1913, and was carried in the Washington Post and the Washington Evening Star. The President said:

Special machinery and a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. A Government commission is now in Europe studying the interesting and highly successful methods which have been employed in several countries of the Old World, and its report will be made to Congress at its regular session next winter. It is confidently to be expected that Congress will at that session act upon the recommendation of that report and establish a complete and adequate system of rural credits.

* * * * * * *

There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. We long ago fell into the habit of assuming that the farmers of America enjoyed such an immense natural advantage over the farmers of the rest of the world, were so intelligent and so at ease upon the incomparable soils of our great continent, that they could feed the world and prosper no matter what handicap they carried, whether of the law or natural circumstances they labored under. We have not exaggerated their capacity or their opportunities, but we have neglected to analyze the burdensome disadvantages from which they were suffering and have too often failed to remove them when we did see what they were.

* * * * * * *

*Our farmers must have similar means afforded them of handling their financial needs easily and inexpensively. They should be furnished these facilities before their enterprises languish, and not afterwards. And they will be. This is our next great task and duty. * * * The Congress and the Executive, working together, will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the countryside, and that very soon.*

The President was right at that time, and I was glad to agree with him. Subsequently, in December, he emphatically reiterated the same views touching rural credits in his annual message.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us to-day three concrete propositions: First, the McCumber amendment, which has come from the Senate, providing for direct loans to the farmers. Second, the Hollis bill, which was reported to the Senate on last Saturday. In my judgment, this last bill is a makeshift, an empty thing, a vacuous and spineless piece of legislation, and will wilt and crumble like a frogstool if Government aid is not placed behind it. [Applause.] Second, this Hollis bill set up an alleged rural credits system separate and apart from any source of governmental aid. Governmental aid is the one essential thing to make rural credits legislation a success in this country, as it has proved to be successful in every other civilized country of the world where the Government has fostered and aided the plan. Third, the Bulkley bill is before us, and with section 30 providing for governmental aid, the system is destined to be a success and will carry genuine relief to the American farmers. Section 30 is absolutely necessary and vital to give force and effect to the plan. Section 30 is as follows:

PURCHASE OF BONDS BY GOVERNMENT.

SEC. 30. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon application of one or more of the Federal land banks herein established, and upon the recommendation of the Federal Reserve Board, purchase from Federal land banks farm-loan bonds not previously issued or sold, in an amount not to exceed $50,000,000 during any one year, and shall pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That any land bank which may sell its bonds to the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided by this section, shall, by appropriate action of its board of directors, as consideration for the accommodation afforded by the Secretary of the Treasury, enter into an agreement that at any time on 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury said land bank will cease to make any investments whatever, and will devote all receipts from every source, except so much as may be necessary for the payment of maturing liabilities, to the redemption of its bonds so purchased and held by the Secretary of the Treasury. The enforcement of said agreement shall be at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall have purchased any farm-loan bonds under the provisions of this section, he may hold the same until maturity, or may sell such bonds at his discretion.

For this purpose the Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the Federal farm loan board and the approval of the President, may issue and sell or use for the purposes of this act any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909, the act of February 4, 1910, and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal: Provided, That any Panama Canal bonds issued and sold or used under the provisions of this section or other existing authority may be made payable at such time after issue as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may deem advisable and fix, instead of 50 years after date of issue, as in said act of August 5, 1909: Provided further, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, such bonds may bear a rate of interest not exceeding 3½ per cent per annum.

And at this point permit me to call your attention to several salient and strong provisions of the Bulkley bill, which we have rewritten, that make it incomparably better than the Hollis makeshift just reported to this House by the Commitee on Agriculure. First, it provides for a Federal farm loan board, divorcing the system entirely from the Federal reserve act. It sets up a separate and distinct rural-credits system not subordinate in any respect to the Glass-Owen currency law recently enacted. Second, in it we provide that the interest rate shall in no event exceed 6 per cent per annum wherever loans are made to the farmers. And, third, in section 30, we specifically commit the Government of the United States to the aid of this system and provide for expending not exceeding $50,000,000 annually out of the Treasury of the United States to guarantee the success of the plan. And in pursuance with this principle we expressly write into this law as a new amendment provision for the sale of Panama Canal bonds, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to setting up our rural-credits system. Hence, we make it certain that the strong arm of the Government shall be placed under and around the rural-credits system for the farmers, just as we have placed it under the Federal reserve act in behalf of the commercial and banking interests. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it would be fatal and criminal to tender the American farmers a plan that would not sustain itself and prove a success. With this opportunity here presented, let us not fail to put our great Government back of legislation which we are now writing in behalf of the entire agricultural population of the United States. [Applause.]

The Federal reserve act was proposed, the credit of the United States was bundled up, a blue ribbon was neatly tied around it, and the resources of a hundred millions of people, in the form of their credit, were mortgaged to the bankers and commercialists. And I am not willing to tender the farmers of this country legislation of any less strength. In the Federal reserve act we placed the Government in partnership with the banks as to capital stock and profits, and I now assert that we should place it in partnership with the farmers in a new rural credits system. The principle is identical. They are entitled to the same treatment in accordance with all logic and by the parity of all reasoning. The farmer is here to-day to demand that he enjoy the same privileges at the Government Mint as the bankers who are feasting on Federal reserve notes issued by that mint and under this new partnership arrangement with the banks. Nothing can deter me from insisting that any rural credits legislation that we pass shall also be backed and reinforced by the credit of the United States Government upon the same principle written in the Federal reserve act. It would be a mockery and sham and a glaring fraud to do less for the agriculturists! We have come to the point where our people in these modern generations must necessarily be divided into three classes, to wit, the commercial, the industrial, and the agricultural. Currency legislation suited to the needs of commercial interests will not be sufficient for the agricultural and industrial classes. We must have a plan that authorizes long-time loans for the farmer; the commercial banking system will not avail. And I here predict that with the Federal reserve act in effect the time is not far distant when we will open the Mint of the United States to the American farmer, so that he may place his securities, mortgages, and liens as collateral with the Government and receive Government issues of money from the mint, just as the bankers do under the Federal reserve act. And States, counties, municipalities, and localities will sooner or later be enabled to take their bonds and securities, based upon the wealth, property, and resources of the people, to the Government Mint and deposit them as security and receive United States money issued for them upon the identical principle by which the Secretary of the Treasury is now preparing to issue $500,000,000 of Federal reserve notes, coined as the people's money, to the banks of this country in exchange for their assets and commercial paper wares sent up through the Federal reserve banks to the Mint of the United States. There is not one particle of difference in principle in these arguments which we here advance.

The papers have just contained a statement that the Secretary of the Treasury is preparing an issue of $500,000,000 of Federal reserve notes, to be exchanged for the assets, notes, and paper securities of the banks which they are hypothecating with the Federal reserve banks. These notes are issued from the people's mint, and the banking and commercial interests have no God-given right to monopolize this money and the credit of the Government, and exclude the farmer and wage earner from the same privileges at the people's Treasury. If the merchants' and bankers' paper are good security for these Government obligations, the farmer's mortgage, at a fair valuation, on his rich farm lands is a better guaranty. And if the merchants' paper, merchandise, and notes and the bankers' bills, drafts, and notes are good security, State, county, and municipal bonds, based upon the taxable wealth and resources of 100,000,000 people, are still better, even if the time for their redemption is somewhat longer. Hence, it is mandatory that we must forever divorce and separate our agricultural banking system from the commercial banking plan. We have an opportunity to-day, and therefore I shall vote for all good amendments looking in that direction.

In the first place, I shall support the McCumber amendment without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" in order that we may provide for direct loans to the American farmers and send this amendment back to the Senate, so that there may not be the slightest difference between the Senate and the House calling for a conference. When we have done that and sent it to the President of the United States, we have provided for direct loans out of the Government mint to the farmers of the United States as we have previously arranged for such loans out of the same mint to the commercialists and the bankers in the shape of Federal reserve notes and the credit of the United States which we have placed in their custody. If this McCumber amendment is not written with entire accuracy at this time, we can adopt it and write it into law as the basis for future action. When Congress reconvenes in December we can build to it, round it out, and shape it up as a foundation for a splendid rural-credits system. Hence, on this historic day, my first choice is the McCumber amendment.

In the course of the proceedings I shall undertake by my vote to perfect the Hollis bill and establish a plan worth something to the farmers. If we can not do that, then, when the final vote comes between the two amendments on the motion to recommit, I shall vote for the McCumber amendment without any change, in order that my name shall go down in the permanent RECORD as one who stood for legislation bringing real relief to the farmers.

Ah, but we hear it whispered in these Halls that the President will veto the McCumber amendment, that he will veto the Bulkley amendment with section 30 in it, providing for Government aid, and that he will not veto the Hollis bill. As far as I am concerned, my resolution is fixed to do my duty here for the farmers to-day, and support legislation that means something—let others pursue whatever course they may. It makes not the slightest difference with me. [Applause.] And yet I do not believe the President will veto a genuine rural credits bill, when we attach it to this Agricultural appropriation bill.

Gentlemen object to adding such a bill to the Agricultural appropriation measure. They say that legislation by the insertion of a rider on appropriation bills is not good. Permit me to say that some of the greatest reforms in legislative bodies for the benefit of the people have been brought about by attaching them to appropriation bills. And it seems to me that the hand of Providence can almost be observed in this proceeding, because it has given us the only opportunity available for establishing a rural-credits system before this session of Congress has ended. [Applause.]

Mr. VAUGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY. For a question.

Mr. VAUGHAN. Is it not a sure way to get this legislation—if the friends of rural credits want any legislation on the question—to agree to the McCumber bill without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t"?

Mr. HENRY. That is a sure way. But before reaching that parliamentary point of procedure, we can afford to deliberate. The Bulkley bill has been considered for nine months by a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, Democrats and Republicans, in a nonpartisan way, and they have agreed to it. Members of that committee who speak to-day will tell you that they have given the Bulkley bill nine months of deliberate study and can see no further way of improving it if they should work upon it many months longer. They are prepared to report it to the House. They are ready for action, and these Democrats and Republicans have placed their seal of approval upon it. Hence, I say, let us support and adopt it, and present both the amended Bulkley bill and the McCumber amendment to the House of Representatives in order that Members may exercise their choice of action.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HENRY. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Will my colleague indicate what his objections are to the McCumber amendment?

Mr. HENRY. I have none, if we can not have the Bulkley bill amended to suit ourselves.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman has no objection to it, then why adopt the Bulkley bill?

Mr. HENRY. We might adopt the McCumber bill. The gentleman would not vote for either one, so it makes no difference to him.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean to imply that all of the members of the farm-credits subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee have agreed to the Bulkley bill?

Mr. HENRY. I did not say it was unanimous. The subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate and House worked on the bill and agreed—perhaps not unanimously—that this is the very best bill they can bring before Congress for action either now or hereafter. We can not improve upon its fundamental principles. It puts the Government back of it, the one essential thing for which we are fighting to-day.

Mr. Chairman, the McCumber bill embodies practically all of the essential features included in a rural-credits bill recently introduced by me. Therefore, if this McCumber amendment can be adopted by Congress and approved by the President, it will embrace the vital principles of the measure presented to the House by me. I will indeed be happy if we can take these steps before this session ends. Pride of authorship will not count with me if we can write the principles for which I have been contending in our legislation. The great and overshadowing principle of Government aid is contained in the Bulkley bill, the one great thing around which my bill has been written. And so if these propositions set out in my measure can be inserted here in the McCumber amendment or the Bulkley bill, I shall gladly support them and waive all pride of authorship.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to say, in conclusion, that my resolution is fixed, and that during the remainder of my congressional career I shall fight for a rural-credits law builded and founded upon plans entirely apart from the Federal reserve act or any commercial banking system. The farmer must have a system that will afford him long-time loans. The necessities of his vocation imperatively demand it, and I shall continue to struggle for writing the same principles in all rural-credits legislation for extending direct Government aid to the tillers of the soil just as we have placed it in the hands of the banker and commercialist. There is no invidious distinction or criticism intended by me in making these arguments. Long since I have concluded that the three classes of our people—the commercial, industrial, and agricultural—must have their needs supplied through distinct banking and financial systems. The issue is raised here to-day and will not down. The fight will go on, and my prediction is that before many years have gone by this long-deferred relief for the American farmer and the industrial class will be accorded to them as Congress promptly afforded facilities to the commercial class of our people. It is a lamentable fact that in this House and elsewhere, whenever a legislator raises his voice in behalf of the farmer, the wage earner, and the worker, he is charged with being a demagogue. But a Representative is weak and cowardly who has not the heart and spirit and resolution in the face of these affronts to fight on in behalf of those who till the soil, earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, and make this Republic prosperous and great. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, these matters were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, and we were asked in four hours to do what other committees of the House and the Senate have not been able to do in three years, and these matters come from the Committee on Agriculture in a very unsatisfactory shape. My time is limited and I shall not even presume to discuss the bills at length, but I do desire to address myself for a moment to the subject of Federal aid to farm-loan banks. A cry is raised against Federal aid, and some gentlemen—a great many, I believe—stand aghast at the idea that any Federal money shall be used for the purpose of assisting in the organization of these banks or be used by them in making loans upon farm property. I wish to say to my associates on this side of the House that if they are opposed to the idea of Federal aid they would better change or modify their national platform, because the platform has declared in favor of the organization and the supervision of banks and organizations by which the farmer of the country may obtain cheap money. But in my judgment, formed after a great deal of attention to the manner in which organizations of this kind are effected and operated in the first instance, they can not be organized and started successfully on their work without Federal aid.

We are told by the commission that visited Europe and made investigation of European methods that governmental aid has been withdrawn, and that private interests are allowed to contribute to those organizations and to conduct them, and that private capital alone is involved in them. They do not go further and say what is the plain truth, that almost every one of those systems was organized in the first instance by governmental aid, by direct appropriations of money, and that they never could have been organized without governmental aid.

But after it was organized and became strong and could operate alone without Federal aid or governmental aid, that aid was withdrawn. So that the experience of Europe is not that Federal aid is not in any case advisable or that it is not necessary, but that experience teaches that it is necessary, that it is advisable, that it is given and continued until the system has grown and the operation has attained such strength that they are able to get along by themselves and without Government assistance. Now, why should we stand aghast, as I say, at the idea of Federal aid? We have already a Postal Savings Bank System by which the people of the country are encouraged to deposit their money and draw on it 2 per cent interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLDFIELD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference asked by the House on bills H. R. 20643, H. R. 21089, and H. R. 21218.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me incredible that the House of Representatives should attempt to legislate on this important matter by snap, last-minute action in the manner we are going at it now. This is an exceedingly complicated proposition all the way through, and nobody can possibly understand the Hollis bill who has not had a considerable time to study it. It is the Bulkley bill with one important section—section 30—taken out and another set of banks put in, so as to make three different sets of farm-loan banks, one of them, the smaller ones, called farm-loan associations. They loan money to the farmer and take the mortgages and indorse them to banks located in the Federal reserve districts known as Federal farm-loan banks or land banks, and then there is another set of banks, limited in their action, which are called Federal farm-bond banks. The bill jumps from one kind of banks to another in such a way that you have to read part of it over four or five times to tell which is one kind of a bank and which is another. Certainly no farmers' organization has asked for any such bill as the Hollis bill.

The bills that the farmers' organizations have indorsed are bills like the Bathrick bill containing Government aid from the sale of Government bonds. Some have indorsed the Bulkley bill and a few the Moss bill. The Hollis bill does not give them what they are asking. It will not do what the farmers want, and if we should pass this hybrid Hollis bill they will all be dissatisfied with it. It is a mere makeshift compromise, patched up at the last moment. I do not see why any man should vote for it, whether he believes in Government aid or does not believe in Government aid. If he believes in Government aid, he ought to vote for the McCumber amendment just as it comes over from the Senate. The McCumber proposition is at least simple and easily understood—money from the United States Treasury. The Hollis bill is complicated. It provides for three or four kinds of institutions and two different sets of bonds, but will satisfy nobody. Certainly it will not satisfy the farmers' unions or the grange. There is only one thing that can be done in a hurry in reference to rural credits, and that is to pass the Moss bill, which will satisfy a good many intelligent farmers. It will not satisfy those of the South and West who look for Government aid, but it will give a sound system of rural credits a chance to start naturally.

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will yield.

Mr. RUBEY. Does the gentleman understand that the Moss bill is incorporated in the present bill before the House now?

Mr. PLATT. Not at all.

Mr. RUBEY. It is a part of the bill; the entire Moss bill.

Mr. PLATT. This is the Hollis bill.

Mr. RUBEY. And the Moss bill, also.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, well, the Moss bill separately has not been offered by the gentleman from South Carolina as an amendment.

Mr. RUBEY. The Moss bill is part of the report of the Committee on Agriculture which we are now discussing.

Mr. PLATT. Well, if the Moss bill, as it was last introduced by Mr. Moss, is part of the report, I am heartily in favor of having that adopted by itself as an amendment in place of the McCumber proposition, the Hollis bill, or any other proposition.

Mr. RUBEY. It reports the Hollis proposition and also the Moss proposition.

Mr. PLATT. I did not understand it so; but I suppose the gentleman means that the farm-bond banks of the Hollis bill before us were taken from the Moss bill by way of compromise; but that is not the entire Moss bill by any means.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman has not said anything about the Bulkley bill. I take it from what he has said that he is opposed to any bill carrying Government aid?

Mr. PLATT. I certainly should at this time be opposed to the Bulkley bill or any similar bill.

Mr. ADAIR. You are not in favor of the McCumber bill?

Mr. PLATT. No; but if I were going to play the demagogue on this matter, I would want something that the farmers of the country would be more pleased with than anything else, and I would vote for the McCumber bill.

Mr. ADAIR. Regardless of the interests of the Government?

Mr. PLATT. Regardless of the interests of the Government or of the country.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman is also absolutely opposed to governmental aid in this proposition?

Mr. PLATT. I will say that in the farm-credit subcommittee I opposed that section of that Bulkley bill——

Mr. ADAIR. Or any other form of governmental aid?

Mr. PLATT. Other forms were not before us; but I should oppose any direct Government loans or any bill providing for issuing greenbacks.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE].

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, about two years ago, when I became a Member of this body, I thought there was no committee assignment that could be given me where I could have been of greater service to my people than by becoming a member of the Banking and Currency Committee; and one of the reasons was that there was a plank in the Democratic platform that specifically provided for rural-credit legislation. Now, we come to the last days of this session, when we had despaired of any opportunity in this body to have rural-credit legislation. A Republican will have written into the law of the United States, if we can get it through here, some legislation which will give us relief. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not care where a bill comes from—I do not care if it comes from a Progressive, I do not care if it comes from a Republican, I do not care if it comes from a Democrat—if it will reduce the interest burden that the farmers and producers of wealth in this country, upon whom we are dependent, pay, then I am for that bill, no matter what its effect on any party. [Applause.] I believe that at this time the Bulkley-Hollis bill is the best bill to adopt, because I do not believe that the Hollis bill is worth the paper on which it is written. I do not believe that it gives the best thoughts of the distinguished Senator whose name it bears, and I do not think that he believes in it. I do not believe that he felt in his own mind that it is in the real interest of the farmers of this country. Every Democrat on our rural-credit committee believed, and strove day after day, after careful thought, to write a bill that would give relief to the farmers of this country. We prepared the bill and introduced it in the House, which sent it to the Banking and Currency Committee, where it is now buried. Why, Mr. Chairman? Not because the rural-credit committee was not united, but because outside interference came in and denied to the farmers of this country the right to be heard on the floor by their representatives, which prevented us from carrying out platform pledges and Democratic caucus instructions and denied the right of the lawmakers of this land to consider a bill that would give us real relief.

Ah, Mr. Speaker, the time has come, and now, when these Representatives can no longer dodge this issue. This legislation sleeps no longer in the Banking and Currency Committee room, where it has been throttled in the House of its friends, who promised us relief in their platform if they should come to power. It was promised by our candidate for the Presidency upon the stump, it was promised by our President as President, it has been promised by our party, and our Democratic caucus last year instructed our committee to bring in a bill; and the time has come, and now, when the people of this country can put us in the scales and find whether we are willing to be charged with being demagogic, whether we are willing to be charged with being unsound in our legislative ideas, and whether or not we are willing to stand up here and be criticized and laughed at by the big interests, usurers, bankers, and hostile press of the country, as they did before when we were trying to reduce the burden of interest that the producers in this country are carrying. We remember the fight made to prevent six months' rediscount privilege and to prevent the use of farm products in storage and farm lands as a basis for credit, yet we wrote these amendments in legislation then pending, and to-day its enemies of that time boast of these amendments as a part of "our work." We hear criticism of any kind of legislation intended to give real relief to the farmers of this country. It comes back to us finally, Mr. Chairman, that it is not a question of new ideas, it is not a question of any new promises, but it is a question of good faith on the part of this House, on the part of these Representatives of the people, to give them what they have been promised time and again, and which we all know they need. Government aid for an Alaskan railroad, Government aid to purchase ships, to dig canals, to open rivers and harbors is permissible, nay, wise; bills appropriating Government funds for pensions, for the Army, for the Navy, for a pleasure trip to the west coast, for expositions, for entertainments of all kinds are wise, and statesmen unite in keeping taxes on the people to provide them. But legislation which provides funds for bettering farming conditions, which lessens the burdens of farm life and makes possible the increase of the necessities of life produced there, which increases the value of taxable property and encourages families to leave crowded cities, cease being tenants and become landowners, home owners—that legislation is demagogic and should be frowned upon in this Hall, the House of Representatives, whose Members come from the people. I, Mr. Chairman, will try and keep my pre-election pledges. I shall try to redeem the platform pledges of my party, and caring not whom I please, trying only to serve the people whose brief I hold, I shall vote for rural-credits legislation providing governmental aid, and leave to others the question of their duty, their vote, and the possibilities of a veto.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] is recognized for half a minute.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I desire the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to give intelligent consideration and study to this subject for a number of years. Nearly two years ago I introduced into this body a bill which I think is a better bill than any other bill that has been under consideration here.

There are two lines of thought that are distinctly marked out upon this subject, and one is whether the Government shall give its aid to this great industry, or whether the farmer who is needing money, who is in debt, will contribute the funds with which to organize banks. The bill that is immediately under discussion now—the Hollis bill—in my opinion, simply provides a great piece of machinery, starting out with a $12,000 salary for a commissioner, providing for the employment of an army of employees, for plate glass, burglar-proof safes, and banking establishments, and the farmer is to foot the bill. It has no other purpose than to drive the great volume of farm loans into the control of the banking interest, and even then insists that the farmer, now so heavily in debt, shall furnish the money to start the bank. It simply suggests to the farmer that by pulling on his boot straps he can lift himself out of debt.

He goes into the money market of the world to borrow his money under the plan proposed, from the money-lending class, and he will be the last man in the world to be served, because nobody is going to lend him money at 4 or 6 per cent for five or four or three or two years or one year when there is somebody who is ready to take the money on a 60-day loan or on a short-time loan.

The bill which I have presented, and which has never received any consideration by any committee of this House, is a bill that is plain and simple, providing that the farmers within a given area may organize their associations and take their mortgages and securities to the association, when the association will make its note to the Government, payable in amortized payments within 24 years; and if the security is approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, they can get the face of the notes from the Federal Treasury. The scheme is based upon Government aid extended not to the individual farmer but to a legal organization of farmers, and the organization distributes the funds amongst the farmers putting up the security. And the consideration that is thus to be given to them is not one particle more than has been given to the money-lending class of this country through the national-bank organizations in the last 45 years. The national bank, by putting up good security, gets the face value of the security in Government currency; they to-day can go to the Federal Treasury and by putting up the notes of Tom, Dick, or Harry, that may be good next week or may not, can get Federal aid.

Now, if a legal organization of farmers will put up adequate security, can you give me any good reason why the same consideration should not be granted to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and set out the bill which I presented to this House heretofore.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the bill referred to:

A Bill (H. R. 9988) to provide for farm loans secured by a pledge of approved first mortgages on agricultural lands, for the making, management, and repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be the "Farmers' loan-association act."

SEC. 2. That associations for carrying on business under this act may be formed by any number of natural persons engaged in practical farming, not less in any case than 25.

They shall enter into articles of association which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association is formed and may contain any other provisions not inconsistent with law which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conducting of its affairs.

SEC. 3. That the persons uniting to form such an association shall, under their hands, make an organization certificate which shall specifically state—

First. The name assumed by such association, which name shall be subject to the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Second. The place where its business is to be carried on, designating the State, Territory, or District, and the particular county, town, or village.

Third. The amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is to be divided.

Fourth. The names and places of residence of the shareholders and the number of shares held by each of them, and that the shareholders are practically engaged in farming in the district wherein the association proposes to carry on its business, and the names and places of residences of the president, vice president, and cashier, who shall constitute the board of directors and who shall have been chosen by the shareholders to manage the business of the association for the first year or until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

Fifth. The undertaking of the said president, vice president, and cashier that they will become trustees for the United States to take, hold, or convey deeds, mortgages, or other conveyances of real estate and to collect rents, issues or profits, installments of interest or principal; to pay taxes when necessary to protect said mortgages, prevent waste, and to do any other undertaking or thing requisite or proper for said trustees to do in order to preserve the interest and rights of the United States in respect to the lands and the mortgages thereon conveyed to said trustees; and a copy of the bond which said trustees propose to give as security for the faithful performance of their duties.

Sixth. That each shareholder has paid to the cashier of the association 10 per cent of the par value of the shares subscribed for by him in cash and has executed and conveyed to certain trustees for the use of the United States his certain promissory note for the sum of the par value of the shares subscribed for by him with interest at per cent, payable annually, to be secured by a mortgage upon improved unencumbered farm lands owned by the mortgagor in fee simple, that for three years last past have been assessed for taxation purposes at a valuation double the amount of said mortgage and within 30 miles of the place wherein the association is to carry on its business, which said mortgage shall have a term not less than 3 nor more than 25 years, and shall be a collateral security for the payment of said note. And said mortgage may provide for the payment of said principal sum with interest or it may provide for the payment of annual installments of a fixed percentage of the face of said mortgage to the said trustees for a specified number of years, and shall also provide that in case the said mortgagor shall make default in the payment of any installment of payment of interest or principal or amortized sum at the time it may become due and payable the whole unpaid principal sum with interest shall immediately become due and payable, and said mortgage shall contain a scire facias clause with warrant of attorney to confess judgment for the principal sum remaining unpaid, with interest and proper costs, upon said mortgage in favor of said trustees, or such other provision permitted or required by the laws of the State wherein such mortgage is made for the immediate collection of said unpaid principal and interest with costs of the proceedings and without exemption or stay of execution.

Seventh. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this title.

SEC. 4. That the organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or notary public, and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, and a copy of the articles of association duly signed by the associators, transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall record and carefully preserve them in his office.

SEC. 5. That upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate the association shall become, as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have the power—

First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

Second. To have succession for the period of 20 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association or by the act of the association, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some provision of the law, or by the act of two-thirds of its shareholders.

Third. To make contracts.

Fourth. To sue and to be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law and equity as fully as natural persons may.

Fifth. To elect or appoint directors and the president, vice president, cashier, and other officers, define their duties, require bond of them and fix the penalty thereof, dismiss such officers or any of them at pleasure and appoint others to fill their places.

Sixth. To prescribe by its board of directors, subject to the provisions of this act, by-laws, not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected or appointed, its officers appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on its business by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt of its shareholders; by loaning money and borrowing money according to the provisions of this act. But no shareholder shall be permitted to become indebted to the association for a sum greater than the par value of the share held by him. The association shall not lend its funds or credit to any person not a stockholder, except that in case the association may have loanable funds not desired by any of its shareholders it may loan to other persons for terms not exceeding one year. Whenever, at any time, funds of the association can not be safely loaned at the rates fixed by the association, said trustees will immediately pay such funds into the Treasury of the United States, and extinguish by so much the liability of the association to the United States.

But no association shall transact any business, except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization, until it has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence its business.

SEC. 6. That whenever the articles of association and organization certificate are transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, as provided in this title, and the association transmitting the same notifies the comptroller that such association has complied with the provisions of this title required to be complied with before an association shall be authorized to commence its business, the comptroller shall examine into the condition of such association, ascertain especially the amount of money paid in on account of its capital, the name and place of residence of each of its directors, and the amount of the capital stock of which each shareholder is the owner in good faith, and generally whether such association has complied with all the provisions of this title required to entitle it to engage in business; and especially the character and standing and the undertaking of the persons named as trustees and the form of the official bond which they propose to give; together with the form of the promissory notes payable to the said trustees for the use of the United States with the form of the mortgages proposed to be given to secure said notes; and shall cause to be made and attested by the oaths of the directors of the association a statement of all the facts necessary to enable the comptroller to determine whether the association is lawfully entitled to commence its business, and if upon a careful examination of the facts so reported and of any other facts which may come to the knowledge of the comptroller, whether by means of a special commission appointed by him for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of such association or otherwise, it appears that such association is lawfully entitled to commence its business, the comptroller shall give to such association a certificate, under his hand and official seal, that such association is authorized to commence such business. But the comptroller may withhold from an association his certificate authorizing the commencement of business whenever he has reason to suppose that the shareholders have formed the same for any other than the legitimate objects contemplated by this title.

SEC. 7. That upon the deposit with the Treasurer of the United States by any farmers' loan association of the promissory note of the said association attested by the signature of the president or vice president and cashier of said association for a sum equal to the capital stock of said association with interest at 3 per cent per annum, payable in annual installments as follows: Three per cent per annum for 2 years, 5 per cent per annum for 3 years, 6 per cent per annum for 10 years, 7 per cent per annum for 10 years, until said note and interest are fully paid, beginning 12 months after the date of the note, and shall deposit with said note the promissory notes of the shareholders payable to said trustees for the use of the United States in amount equal to the capital stock of said association with mortgages as aforesaid to secure the payment of said notes and interest thereon, accompanied by policies of insurance of the validity of such mortgages, and the same are approved by said Comptroller of the Currency to be in proper substance and form according to the purposes and intent of this act; and it appearing that said notes and mortgages are valid securities taken by the association in payment of shares of its stock and deposited as collateral security with the Secretary of the Treasury to secure the payment of the note of the association as aforesaid, and to secure the immediate payment of any installment of said association note with proper costs in case default shall be made in the payment of any such installment at the time it becomes due, and thereafter or as often as any installment becomes due in which there is any default in payment, and the said trustees having deposited with the said Secretary their undertaking of the office of trustees of said securities for the use of the United States, together with their official oaths and bonds for the faithful discharge of their duties, the Secretary of the Treasury shall then place the notes made by the shareholders and the mortgages securing the payment thereof in the possession of such trustees, and such association shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of the United States to an amount equal to the par value of the stock of said association; and it shall be the duty of said trustees to safely keep said mortgages and the shareholders' notes secured by the same, and to collect the said notes and the interest as the same becomes due, and out of such collections to pay to the Treasury of the United States the stipulated annual installments as they fall due on the note of the association, and such payments shall be credited on the note of the association, and in case there is any default on the part of any maker of any of said notes according to the terms thereof, or if taxes are allowed to become a lien upon the land mortgaged to secure any of said notes, to proceed at once to collect the whole of said mortgage thus in default with interest and the costs thereof; any moneys collected by the trustees over and above the amount required for the annual payment for any year due to the United States shall be paid into the treasury of such association.

In case of the death of a trustee or trustees the survivor or survivors shall act.

SEC. 8. That the association shall then cause the certificate issued under the preceding section to be published in some newspaper printed in the district where the association is located for at least 30 days next after the issuing thereof, or, if no newspaper is published in such district, then in the newspaper published nearest thereto.

SEC. 9. That any such association may change its name or place where its business is to be carried on to any other place within the same State not more than 30 miles distant with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, by the vote of two-thirds of the shareholders of such association. A duly authenticated notice of the vote and of the new name or location selected shall be sent to the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, but no change of name or location shall be valid until the comptroller shall have issued his certificate of approval of the same.

All debts, liabilities, rights, provisions, and powers of the association under its old name shall devolve upon and inure to the association under its new name.

Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in any manner to release any such created association under its old name or at its old location from any liability, or affect any action or proceeding in law in which said association may be or become a party or interested.

SEC. 10. That a farmers' loan association may purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others:

First. Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business.

Second. Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security for debts contracted.

Third. Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the association, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it.

SEC. 11. That the capital stock of each association shall be not less than $25,000, or may be any multiple thereof, and shall be divided into shares of the par value of $100 each, and be deemed personal property and transferable on the books of the association in such manner as may be prescribed in the by-laws or articles of association. Every person becoming a shareholder by such transfer shall, in proportion to his shares, succeed to all the rights and liabilities of the prior holder of such shares; and no change shall be made in the articles of association by which the rights, remedies, or security of the existing creditors of the association shall be impaired.

SEC. 12. That in all elections of directors, and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders, each shareholder shall be entitled to one vote without respect to the number of shares held by him. Shareholders may vote by proxies duly authorized by writing; but no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of such association shall act as proxy; and no shareholder whose liability is past due and unpaid shall be allowed to vote.

SEC. 13. That the affairs of each association shall be managed by three directors, one of whom shall be president, one vice president, and one cashier, who shall be elected by the shareholders at a meeting to be held at any time before the association is authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business and afterwards at meetings to be held on such day of each year as is specified therefor in the articles of association. The directors shall hold office for one year and until their successors are elected and have qualified.

SEC. 14. That every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States, and must have resided in the district in which the association is located for at least one year immediately preceding his election and must be resident therein during his continuance in office. No director shall own more than one share of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director, nor shall he be a borrower from or be in any way pecuniarily interested in loans made by such association. Any director who as a trustee is unsatisfactory to the Comptroller of the Currency may be immediately removed as such trustee by the said comptroller, and such removal renders such person ineligible as director and his place shall become vacant.

SEC. 15. That each director, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves upon him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of such association, and will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of this title, and that he is the owner in good faith and in his own right of the number of shares of stock subscribed by him or standing in his name on the books of the association, and that the same is not hypothecated or in any way pledged as security for any loan or debt other than to the association itself. Such oath, subscribed by the director making it, and certified by the officer before whom it is taken, shall be immediately transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency and shall be filed and preserved in his office.

SEC. 16. That any vacancy in the board shall be filled by appointment by the remaining directors, and any director so appointed shall hold his place until the next election.

SEC. 17. That if, from any cause, an election of directors is not made at the time appointed, the association shall not for that cause be dissolved, but an election may be held on any subsequent day, 30 days' notice thereof in all cases having been given in a newspaper published in the city, town, or county in which the association is located; and if no newspaper is published in such city, town, or county, such notice shall be published in a newspaper published nearest thereto. If the articles of association do not fix the day on which the election shall be held, or if no election is held on the day fixed, the day for the election shall be designated by the board of directors in their by-laws, or otherwise; or if the directors fail to fix the day, shareholders representing two-thirds of the shares may do so.

SEC. 18. That the shareholders of every farmers' loan association shall be held individually liable, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares.

SEC. 19. That the Treasurer of the United States is also authorized to permit the trustees to substitute for one or more of said notes and mortgages one or more other notes and mortgages of similar terms and of equal approved value whenever said association may find it necessary to substitute for a nonborrowing shareholder another shareholder desiring to borrow, who furnishes equally good security, and such substitution having been authorized, the trustees shall transfer the shares held by the retiring shareholder to the new shareholder or shareholders.

SEC. 20. That the power of visitation and inspection of each association shall be similar to that now exercised by the United States over national banks, but the fee for any inspection shall not exceed $15, and inspections shall not be made more than three times in any one year.

SEC. 21. That the general provisions of law relating to suits by or against national banks shall apply to farmers' loan associations.

SEC. 22. That the real property of any such association shall be subject to State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent according to value as other real property is taxed, but the mortgages made to any trustees for the use of the United States shall not be subject to State taxation, nor shall the loans of the United States to any such association be subject to taxation for any purpose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has 25 minutes, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has 15, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has 7.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Iowa use some of his time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, during the last year or two I have given much study to this question, and I very much regret that we are obliged to pass upon it here after only two hours' debate. I regard it as one of the most complicated and most important questions that have been before this Congress.

In the first place, let me speak of the so-called McCumber amendment. The McCumber amendment, if I understand anything about the Constitution, would be, as my friend from Georgia has said respecting the Hollis bill, not worth the paper it is written on. I would like to know under what grant of power of the Federal Constitution Members of this House can find authority for putting the Government of the United States into the loaning business—under what grant of power we are going to give the farmers, a single class in this country, an axe and tell them to go ahead and knock down the doors of the Treasury and help themselves, for that is about what this McCumber amendment means.

There is no provision whatever in this bill for any appraisement of the property on which loans are expected to be made. There is no machinery provided for putting this into operation. Any Secretary of the Treasury would have great nerve to undertake to organize a loaning bureau in the Treasury of the United States and start it into action under the provisions proposed by the amendment to this bill.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HENRY. Did we not loan the Government money to the banks in New York City in the panic of 1907?

Mr. HAYES. No; strictly speaking, no loan was made. Money was deposited in the banks by the Secretary, and there may be doubt whether there is any warrant for it in the Constitution. That was done, you might say, by unanimous consent. It has only been done in times of financial distress.

Mr. HENRY. Do we not loan money to the banks now on security?

Mr. HAYES. No; but the Government does loan its credit, and when the Federal reserve act was before the House I expressed the doubt, which I express now, whether there is any authority in the Constitution for doing it, and I said then to the gentleman and to this House that if we did that the next step would be that the farmers and other classes would be before us, asking that the Government lend its credit to them for their especial personal benefit. And I will say to the gentleman now that if the Congress of the United States passes this amendment it will not be a year before the laboring people of this country will be before the Congress of the United States asking that the privilege be extended to them. Next will probably come the miners, who want to develop their mines, asking for the same thing, and they will be followed by other classes of our citizens.

Mr. HENRY. Just one other question now: Have we not insured the ships of the shipowners?

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman knows I do not approve of any of that sort of legislation. I am opposed to extending the field of operations of the Federal Government, except where absolutely necessary to carry out some great national purpose which can not be accomplished through the local governments, and I am strongly opposed to putting the Federal Government into private business enterprises of any kind.

Mr. KORBLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. KORBLY. The gentleman from California does not want to be understood as saying that the Federal reserve notes would not be effective if they did not have the governmental quality?

Mr. HAYES. I do not. I think they would be just as effective if they did not have it.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that all this legislation that the gentleman from Texas speaks about concerning the banks is justified by the courts upon the theory that they are fiscal agents of the Government?

Mr. HAYES. The courts have not passed upon this legislation, but they may justify it on that ground.

Mr. GORDON. Solely?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; it must be justified on that ground, if justified at all.

Mr. GORDON. Is there any such function as that performed here?

Mr. HAYES. Not at all.

Mr. BATHRICK. Now, on that point——

Mr. HAYES. One moment. In the so-called Hollis amendment proposed by the committee there is a provision on page 72, at the bottom of the page, which is intended to make that amendment constitutional, providing that 5 per cent of the stock of these banks shall be invested in Government bonds; but, in my judgment, that does not overcome the constitutional objection at all, and does not make it constitutional. The purpose of the amendment is plainly not governmental in character and is not intended to carry into effect any grant of power to the Federal Government conferred by the Constitution.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. Did we not make provision for loans to the farmer in the Federal reserve bank act?

Mr. HAYES. We did—commercial loans and real estate loans, and not to exceed a certain per cent of the capital stock of the bank.

Mr. MOORE. Can he not get such money as he needs under that, if he has property or credit?

Mr. HAYES. He can get commercial loans and real estate loans to the extent of a certain percentage of the capital stock of the bank, as I have stated.

Mr. BATHRICK. Does not the McCumber amendment make the Government a fiscal agent for the purpose of making loans?

Mr. HAYES. Yes, it does; but it does not make the banks fiscal agents of the Government, which is necessary to give it any pretense of constitutionality.

Mr. BATHRICK. It does.

Mr. HAYES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no pretense of that sort at all.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I can not yield, as I have only two minutes left. I want to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], who said that no rural-credit institution in the world had ever been organized without Government aid. The landschaften of Germany, the greatest farm loaning institution in the world, has been in operation for nearly 150 years, and has never had any financial aid whatever from the Government.

Mr. BATHRICK. Now, will the gentleman yield on that?

Mr. HAYES. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BATHRICK. Does not the gentleman know that the landschaften has no money and needs no Government money?

Mr. HAYES. I can not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. I know that the landschaften never had any Government financial aid at any time in its history. It was started under Frederick the Great and was fostered and assisted in its operations, but the Government of Germany never gave it any financial assistance of any kind.

Mr. BARTLETT. And, besides that, Germany is not governed as we are, under a written constitution.

Mr. HAYES. That is true, and very important to bear in mind while considering any legislation of this kind.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is not the same thing true of the Credite Francaise?

Mr. HAYES. They had $2,000,000 in the beginning, but have never had any further direct governmental aid.

I am one of those who believe in providing the farmer with as cheap money as he can possibly get. I am willing to go as far as I can see my way clear to give him the loans that he desires at as cheap a rate of interest as can be gotten for him; but when the farmers of the United States are asking bread, I am not willing to give them a stone. I am not willing to do something that I know will be worthless, because void under the Constitution under which we are supposed to operate, and that will not give him the relief which he is seeking. All of these amendments should be voted down; and in the next session of Congress, when we have plenty of time, we can take up this subject and formulate and pass into law an adequate rural-credit proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONNOLLY].

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the pledges of the various political parties. I shall put the planks of the various parties in the RECORD. I want to say that in no one of them is there a pledge for loaning any public funds to an organized system of rural credits in the country.

The Republican Party declared:

It is of great importance to the social and economic welfare of this country that its farmers have facilities for borrowing easily and cheaply the money they need to increase the productivity of their land. It is as important that financial machinery be provided to supply the demand of farmers for credit as it is that the banking and currency systems be reformed in the interest of general business. Therefore we recommend and urge an authoritative investigation of agricultural credit societies and corporations in other countries and the passage of State and Federal laws for the establishment and capable supervision of organizations having for another purpose the loaning of funds to farmers.

The Democratic Party in its Baltimore platform said:

Of equal importance with the question of currency reform is the question of rural credits or agricultural finance. Therefore we recommend that an investigation of agricultural credit societies in foreign countries be made, so that it may be ascertained whether a system of rural credits may be devised suitable to conditions in the United States; and we also favor legislation permitting national banks to loan a reasonable proportion of their funds on real estate security.

The Progressive Party declared:

We pledge our party to foster the development of agricultural credits and cooperation.

Investigations have been instituted and carried on under the direction of Republican Presidents so that the matter of rural credits had been much mooted throughout the country and had received favorable consideration.

Congress has been in session almost constantly for the last two years. The pledged rural credits legislation, which was placed on a parity with currency and bank reform by the party in power, has been studiously delayed and obstructed by those who are responsible for legislation. A commission was sent to Europe to study rural credits systems there. Not a single fact was or could have been discovered by that commission which could not have been readily obtained in the usual means of obtaining information here at Washington. But, then, that would not have enabled the long delay which has taken place in the consideration of this legislation. Members of the majority interested in rural credits legislation and who were insisting on its enactment in connection with or at the same time as the so-called Glass-Owen currency measure was passed were placated by that force which has been directing legislation in Washington for the last two years by the promise that as soon as the Glass-Owen banking and currency bills were passed the rural credits bill should be taken up. This was at a time when the Banking and Currency Committee was meeting informally, but allowing only the majority members to be present, excluding the minority members. If the minority members had been permitted to meet, as the proper procedure for committee action demanded, rural credits legislation would have been immediately connected with or run parallel to the banking and currency bill. But the few majority members of that committee who really favored rural credits legislation were thrust aside with a barren promise.

How effectually rural credits legislation has been disposed of has been well told on the floor of this House by Representatives WINGO, of Arkansas, NEELY, of Kansas, and RAGSDALE, of South Carolina. They place the blame where it belongs.

The legislation was delayed, obstructed, and finally set aside in the long session of the Sixty-third Congress. In the short session of the Sixty-third Congress the friends of rural credits legislation became active. It was expected that the distinguished Representative and Senator who constituted the present commission to visit Europe and study rural credits would become exceedingly active in presenting this legislation, but it seemed to have suddenly dawned upon the administration that ships on the ocean were more important than credit on the land. So we find the distinguished Senator member of that commission leading about a 40-days' fight in the Senate for a hopeless, useless, unwise ship-purchase measure to the entire neglect of the rural credit legislation.

It seems that after the ship-purchase bill's passage became entirely hopeless a rural credit bill was attached to the Agricultural appropriation bill in the Senate and it comes back to the House for our consideration. The rural credit system involved in this bill is not regarded as satisfactory, and we are told upon the floor of the House by the leaders of the majority favoring rural credits that unless the McCumber provision goes through, that on account of the lateness of the session there will be no rural credit legislation. I am convinced that this is true, and the development of the last few days demonstrates it to be true, for since the debate was opened on the subject the McCumber bill has been by the majority taken out of the Agricultural appropriation bill and the so-called Hollis-Bulkley bill substituted. The Agricultural appropriation bill has gone to the Senate, and from thence thrown into conference, and the conference committee has decided that there shall be no rural credit legislation this term. It gave instead the subterfuge of a commission in an attempt to placate the insistent demands of a large number of the people of the United States, who had some faith in the deliberate promise and pledge of the party in power, to legislate along this line.

It is much to be regretted that this House did not rise to its opportunity and pass some rural credit legislation if for no other reason than to establish and announce its dignity and independence. It should have done this despite the threat of veto, the blandishment of power, and the activity of Cabinet members with patronage at their disposal. The action would have been worth while.

A great deal has been said about the landschaft and other rural credit systems in Europe. We could safely investigate and consider them, but should not be guided or controlled by them. America's situation is different from that of any European country. Our ways are not their ways, nor are their conditions ours. We can safely trust our Representatives to take account of our conditions and legislate in the interest of our people for the purpose of rectifying and changing those conditions, if they should be changed. Our legislation should be based upon our own history and present state of development and future conditions desirable to be brought about. Past and foreign precedents and practices may be shackles for our limbs instead of walls for our protection. The oxgoad will not control the spirited horse, nor the equine reins direct an automobile.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] two minutes.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, with reference to rural credits, there are two thoughts running through the country, and there are the same two thoughts running through the minds of the Members in this Chamber. One is the thought that the farmers ought to continue to pay for the use of money the enormous and prohibitive rates of interest at present charged against them on their mortgages, with abstract charges, with commission charges, and with renewal charges, which together constitute prohibitive rates, so as to keep the producing masses perpetually in bondage to the financial oligarchy of this country.

Another is the thought that the farmer ought to have, when he has perfect security, the facility of obtaining a loan for his use and benefit by the aid of the Federal Government, so that he himself may retain his annual increase of wealth and not be longer compelled to sacrifice it by excessive interest charge for the money he is required to borrow. I earnestly share the latter view.

Now, over in the Senate the other day, when the venerable fathers were nearly all out of the Chamber engaged in other business, only six being in the Chamber, a gentleman tendered to the Agricultural appropriation bill an amendment called the McCumber amendment, which was adopted, and it comes over here as the McCumber amendment, and we must to-day vote for it or against it.

May I say, because one can necessarily express himself only crudely in two minutes, that there is tendered, after that political exigency was created in the Senate, by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate a unanimous report called the Hollis bill—a bill with the life taken out of it absolutely, and unless amended not worth the paper that it is written on, so far as the American farmers are concerned. [Applause.]

Without impugning the good faith of any man, permit me to say that it is my deliberative judgment, after years of study of the important subject of farm credits, as well as 20 years' experience as a lawyer, that this Hollis bill without necessary amendments is what in slang parlance is called "a lemon" tendered to the American farmer.

I am not in favor of it, and unless it be amended I should not vote for it, because it requires the farmers to "lift themselves by their own boot straps."

But there will be tendered to the Hollis bill an amendment called the Bulkley bill. The Bulkley amendment is section 30 in the Hollis-Bulkley bill, which the joint subcommittees of the House and the Senate after nine months of hearings prepared. Section 30, which will be tendered by Mr. BULKLEY as an amendment to the Hollis bill, puts the financial aid of the Nation, with its wealth of $140,000,000,000 and its population of 100,000,000 souls, back of the farmers' rural-credit bill, and will thus give it backing and strength and guarantee its success. Hence I think that every Member who is in favor of the farmer having cheap money to purchase and to keep and to improve his land, who does not believe that the American financiers ought to be allowed to continue to monopolize the annual increment of wealth produced by the farmers of this Nation, ought to vote to add the Bulkley amendment to the Hollis bill and then to vote for the Hollis bill as thus amended in preference to the McCumber amendment. But if the Bulkley amendment can not be adopted, I think those of us who would give the farmers substantial relief should vote for the McCumber amendment instead of the Hollis bill, which promises much but performs nothing. [Applause.]

Upon the shoulders of the American farmers rests the whole fabric of our wealth, our prosperity, our security, and our happiness. Laws that make for his security and prosperity make for the perpetuity and glory of our institutions. Sprung from him, my whole heart is set upon his welfare. The dearest wish of my public service is to aid him in his burdens, to lighten the loads laid upon him, to contribute toward his welfare and happiness. While we have the opportunity let us give him real and permanent relief and blessing by putting the Federal Government back of a farm-credit system which alone can guarantee its success and his blessing. [Great applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HELVERING].

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 19 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there is no subject in which my people are more deeply interested than the subject of better credits for the farmer. I believe in Federal aid to our rural-credit system. I believe that aid ought to go as far as necessary to secure proper credit for our agricultural interests. Some persons seem to think that this is only a question of doing a special favor for the farmer. Some people appear to believe that the only problem involved is getting for our farmers a lower rate of interest, as a special concession, a gift, or a donation to them. I am in favor of this legislation, of course, first, in the interest of my constituents, and, second, in the interest of the farmers generally of the United States. But higher and above and greater and more important than the interest of the farmer or any other class of our citizens is the interest of this great Government of ours. My friends, just as sure as we are here to-day, the future of this Nation, its life, its strength, its power, its perpetuity, rests upon the expansion and development of its agricultural interests. You men who represent constituencies in cities—the non-farming population—are as deeply interested in this question as are the men on the farm, because in the course of 40 or 50 years, when we will have 250,000,000 population, should stress and peril and war come, it will be the millions in our great cities that will first raise the cry for bread. I am in favor, as I said, of such aid as is necessary. I do not believe it is necessary for the National Government to issue its own bonds to secure our farmers credit. That is going further than any nation has ever gone, and while I may vote for the McCumber proposition, I do not believe it is necessary to go that far in order to provide our farmers with an abundance of interest at the lowest rate of interest. The Hollis bill as embodied in the committee report is not fair to our farmers. Our farmers have asked for bread, but if the National Congress passes this bill it will be giving them a stone. Two things are necessary for any adequate rural-credit system: First, you must provide ample credit; second, you must provide a low rate of interest. Unless we are to get greater credit than we have now, it is useless to have additional legislation.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I can not yield. And unless we can lower the rate of interest it is useless to have additional legislation. I maintain that this bill will neither provide adequate credit nor a low rate of interest. Under this bill the capital stock of these banks may be only $6,000,000, and loans are limited to 20 times the capital stock of the banks. This would provide for only $120,000,000 in loans, and what would that be compared to the two or three billion dollars in existing farm mortgages that must be taken up under the new system? You will not provide adequate credit under the system proposed in this bill. The Hollis bill provides for an expensive system. The farmers have the security if we will only throw around that security inexpensive machinery that will present the farmers' security in proper shape. This bill provides 1 per cent annually on every loan to provide for the expense of administering the system.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Does the gentleman know that the farmers have $2,500,000,000 on deposit in banks of the United States at the present time?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. They may have more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, no one has a deeper interest in the welfare of the farmer than myself. I come from a farm stock. All my people were tillers of the soil. My maternal grandfather was among the earliest settlers in central Indiana. He wrestled with an unbroken wilderness and reduced it to cultivation, rearing a large family and laying deep the foundations of a community which has always prospered and which to-day ranks high in farming and stock raising. I was born and grew up on a farm. I learned my letters in a country school. My earliest and happiest recollections are of country things and country ways. The very first money ever earned by me was a small silver coin which an uncle paid me for dropping corn. All the duties which the farm life imposes are familiar to me. My experiences embrace almost everything connected with farming as it was carried on when I was a boy. I have milked the cows and operated the old dash churn. I have sat day after day on a Brown corn planter. Many a long hot day have I spent "snaking" haycocks from the meadow to the stack yard. Many a down row have I kept up when corn husking was in progress. In a small way it was my privilege to participate in the sheep shearing, in the hog killing, in the feeding of stock, in every activity that falls to those in agricultural pursuits. So I can not be charged with any lack of native sympathy with the farmer. If I do not share precisely in certain demands which are being made here in behalf of the farmer, it is not because I am of alien blood or indifferent disposition. My sympathies run as true to the old life of which I was a part in the long ago as those of any man on this floor or elsewhere. My desire to promote the interests of the farm is as keen as it is sincere. And my readiness to serve the farmer in any proper way is equal to that of anyone in public life or out of it.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a question in my mind whether the legislation here proposed is desirable from any standpoint. It certainly can not be desirable from the standpoint of the tenant farmer or from that of the farm laborer. It can not possibly help either. On the contrary, it must infallibly make the lot of both a little harder, for if this legislation shall accomplish anything it will stimulate speculation in farm land, and speculation in farm land will mean higher prices for it, higher rents demanded for its use, a longer and more difficult struggle on the part of the landless to obtain a solid footing on the soil.

What we are proposing to do is to confer a special privilege on certain owners of farm land—the privilege of borrowing money at less than the current rate of interest. This does not differ in principle from employing the powers of government for the benefit of manufacturers in the matter of protective tariffs. But it is said that we have conferred on big business the privilege which is sought for the farmer. True. But we have been complaining a good deal about the favoritism which has been shown toward big business. There has been ground for complaint. It is no part of the business of government to foster any particular interest or industry. It can do so only at the expense of other interests and industries. Where a privilege is bestowed some right is invaded or denied. You can not rob Peter to pay Paul without leaving Peter the worse for what you have done.

It is urged that farm loans at less than current rates of interest will stimulate the growth of wheat and corn, of cotton and tobacco, of cattle and hogs. Possibly. Yet what we are certain to stimulate is the selling price of farm lands. The advantage of the lower interest rate will infallibly be capitalized in higher land values. Such an advantage is just like any other—like the building of a railroad, the digging of a drainage ditch, the increase of population. It is immediately reflected, as the other advantages named are reflected, in the value of the land. Farmers as such are not helped by high-priced lands. It is only as land speculators that they stand to gain from this source. If they are primarily interested in the production of grain and cotton and tobacco and other forms of agricultural wealth, they can produce no more when the land worked goes up to $100 an acre—other things being equal—than they were able to produce when it was worth only $10. But I recognize how hard it is for the farmer to separate his interests as a mere landlord from those which concern him as a tiller of the soil. The enormous growth of speculative farm-land values during the last 40 or 50 years has somewhat turned his head. In some cases he has grown quite rich as a result, not because he has worked harder, not because his production has increased, not because of keener thrift, but simply and solely because population has multiplied, advantages have increased, and in response to these forces the value of his land has doubled or quadrupled. In some sections of the country farm-land values on the average have increased during the last 10 or 20 years by 300, 400, and even 500 per cent.

What this means to the tenant farmer and the farm laborer should be fairly obvious. To the one it means that he must pay a much higher rent than before. To the other it necessarily means a longer, a harder, a more hopeless struggle to gain a position of independence. It means to the tenant farmer that he must remain in that condition. It means to the farm laborer that he must continue in this capacity or drift to the city. And I think if those who are so much concerned over the relative depopulation of the farming communities would take this tremendous fact into account they would find in it a sufficient explanation of the phenomenon which causes them so much anxiety as to the future.

Back to the farm! Yes; back to the farm. But when the man from mill or mine, from factory or countinghouse, from workshop or store turns his face in that direction what runs forth to meet him? Farm-land values which compel him to stand and deliver all that he may have saved during a long period of working and self-denial. Before he can gain access to the soil upon which he hopes to live and labor he must pay a tribute which leaves him practically without resource. In nine cases out of ten this tribute not merely absorbs all his savings; it also plunges him into debt, the purchase price thus hanging like a millstone about his neck.

It is a serious question with me, Mr. Chairman, whether we are going to mend things much if we adopt this legislation or any legislation along this line. I would like wonderfully well to do something to help the farmer, but I do not want to help him at the expense of some one else. I do not want to help the farm owner at the expense of the tenant farmer or the farm laborer. Nor am I more willing to employ governmental powers for his enrichment than I have been that these powers should be employed in enriching the Steel Trust, the Coal Trust, the Lumber Trust, the Railroad Trust, or the Money Trust. All my life I have been conscientiously opposed to privilege, and all privileges have looked alike to me. Had it been possible effectively to protect the farmer by tariffs, as steel has been protected and lumber and woolens, I would have opposed the protective tariff in that case as relentlessly as it has been opposed by me in its real workings as the enemy of the farmer and the workingman. I would be unworthy of the honor which is now mine if I should reverse the record of a lifetime spent in war upon privileges for the manufacturers and the bankers to appear on this floor as the champion of another sort of privilege designed to benefit a particular class.

Mr. Chairman, if I were to undertake to do something for the farmer it would be along a quite different line. Instead of making him the beneficiary of a governmental favor I would undertake to free him from the exactions of those possessing governmental favors, who are preying upon him in a dozen ways. Instead of conferring a privilege upon him, I would take away the privileges which others employ in laying him under tribute. If the farmer is falling behind in the race—and apparently this is so—it is because he is carrying some unnatural and unnecessary handicap. It is because he is the victim of discrimination. It is because there are those who are in position to place obstacles in his path and to fetter his limbs. Where one sows and from the sowing reaps a hundredfold there must be some other than a natural reason for failure.

But if farmers are to be accorded the privilege of borrowing money at a low rate of interest—a rate below the current one prevailing at a given time and place—why not "the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker"? Is our Uncle Samuel partial? Has he particular nephews toward whom he feels peculiarly gracious? It is perhaps true that the farmer is in hard lines because of high interest rates exacted by those with money to loan. But are not men in other walks in hard lines for the very same reason? We hear that the farmer is retarded in the development of his land by the interest burden he is carrying, and that when this is lightened he will leap and run and get forward. Let us not doubt that this will be the case. But there are men in town and city who are retarded in their activities by the very same sort of burden who would leap and run and get forward were their burden relieved in like manner and measure. Is nothing to be done for these?

Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think of the forgotten man. He figures very little in our calculations. He is wholly lost sight of, it would seem, in this particular exercise of governmental beneficence. Yet he is somewhat numerous. He embraces the millions who are dispossessed—the mill workers, the miners, the artisans of many kinds, the train men, the farm hands, the small storekeepers, the struggling professional men, the small manufacturers, the tenant farmers, the hundred and one component parts of the vast industrial army which is cut off from its base of supplies by the monopoly of natural resources and whose case will be aggravated rather than improved by what is proposed here. For nothing can be clearer than this, that land values will be boomed by this process so that access to the soil will become more difficult rather than less, self-employment more remote rather than less. I therefore speak for the forgotten man—for the man whom Uncle Sam is again passing by; for the man with nothing but his labor; for him with the little home and the little business who is staggering under a load which grows heavier as he struggles forward; for the clerk behind the counter; for the tenant farmer who works one day for himself and the second day for the owner of the acres he tills; for the farm laborer who can not possibly share in the beneficence which Uncle Sam is bestowing on his employer; for all the voiceless multitude which has no lobby at this capital, which has no printing press in motion to spread its tale of woe, which suffers and is dumb, which must be the more cruelly oppressed by this new grant of privilege and which can only be relieved by setting it free amid free opportunities where it can work out its own salvation unvexed by the tribute taker and undismayed by what the morrow may bring forth.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER].

[Mr. FALCONER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, we have arrived at a point in the legislative career of this Congress where there is presented a proposition for rural-credit legislation, a thing that I have been striving for ever since I have been a Member of this Congress. The Senate on last Thursday attached to the Agricultural appropriation bill what is known as the McCumber amendment. It is not all that I would wish it to be, but it is a long step in the right direction, and will result, in my judgment, in reducing the interest rates that our agricultural classes are compelled to pay. It is simple. There is no complex law or machinery to be put in operation, no set of red-tape rules and regulations whereby the farmer would be enmeshed and disabled from procuring a loan. It extends direct Government aid to the agricultural and producing classes of the country the same as the Government has extended its aid to the commercial interests of the country in the Federal reserve act, and as it has since the foundation of the Government extended direct aid to practically every other business except that of the farmer. If I had the power, I would amend the provision by inserting an amortization principle, extend the loans to a period of 50 years instead of 10, make its provisions broad enough to include personal credits as well as real estate credits, and reduce the interest rates to that interest for which the Government bonds will sell at par—3 or 3½ per cent—and I would provide that the farmer in no event should pay more than 5 per cent for his money.

The Committee on Agriculture has brought in a provision which it is intended to offer as a substitute for the McCumber amendment adopted by the Senate, and it consists of 55 pages, provides for the organization of farm loan banks in the various communities of the United States and a land-mortgage bank in each of the Federal reserve districts. The farm loan organizations in the different communities are to be organized by citizens of the community who take stock therein. It provides numberless rules and regulations and a complex and cumbersome organization which, in my judgment, foredooms it to failure. In the first place, in a community where there is sufficient money to organize one of these farm loan organizations such organization is absolutely useless, because the people have money and do not need such an organization. In other words, this bill merely provides that the people can form an organization to loan their own money back to themselves, paying the expenses of such an organization. The bill does not attempt to reduce the interest rates. It provides that the interest rates shall be the interest rates in the different States of the Union where the banks are operated. It provides no usury; and, being organized under a Federal law without any usury penalty, it would necessarily repeal the usury laws in force in the various States where these farm loan institutions are organized and operated. It does not provide any governmental aid whatever. It is not practical or workable. The institutions never will be organized and, in my judgment, the plan will prove a complete failure. It is an attempt to hand the farmers a "lemon." I shall vote against the Hollis substitute and I shall vote for the McCumber amendment, notwithstanding it is not what I want and not what the farmers and producers of this country are entitled to.

Within the past two days, and since the McCumber amendment was attached to the Agricultural appropriation bill in the Senate, I have received numerous telegrams from farm-loan companies operating throughout the United States, protesting against hasty action in the preparation of a rural-credit bill. These farm-loan companies, you know, are terribly interested in the welfare of the farmers and in reducing the rates of interest the farmer has to pay. For instance, here is one telegram that I received:

OSWEGO, KANS., February 26, 1913.

Hon. JOE B. THOMPSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Newspapers report rural-credit act attached as rider to Agricultural appropriation bill passed by Senate. The act as drawn is considered not well conceived or properly balanced. Its importance is such that hasty action would be ill advised. Proper delay for preparation of more complete comprehensive act is most important.

ROBERT O. DEMING.

And I received others containing practically the same language. The language is so strikingly similar that it produces the suspicion that the farm-loan companies at least understand one another in their opposition to the provisions of the McCumber amendment. I have answered the various parties telegraphing me as follows:

I have your night letter of the 26th, protesting against rural-credit legislation attached as a rider to the Agricultural appropriation bill. The McCumber amendment, which has been made a part of the Agricultural appropriation bill of the Senate, is not all I would want, but it is a step in the right direction. The farmers of the country, and especially the farmers of Oklahoma, are required to pay such high rates of interest that I am gratified to support any provision, though it may not be what I would want, that promises relief, and especially a bill containing a provision carrying direct governmental assistance, which insures the lowering of the rate of interest to this most deserving class of our people. I shall therefore be glad to support this amendment, perfected if possible, but if that is found impossible, to support it just as it is.

To show you what the farmers of the country think of the McCumber amendment, I desire to quote a telegram from George J. Christensen, secretary-treasurer of the Farmers' Cooperative Union of Oklahoma, addressed to me to-day. It reads:

DAVIS, OKLA., March 1, 1913.

Hon. J. B. THOMPSON,
Washington, D. C.

Support Senate amendment. Oppose buncoed bankers' proposition, without Government backing, and stand for rural farm credit. See other Oklahoma Senators and Congressmen and get them to do likewise.

GEO. J. CHRISTENSEN,
Secretary-Treasurer.

We have an opportunity at this time to give the farmers real genuine rural credit legislation, not in all its details, but in principle, Government aid, what we have extended to all other classes of business. I know it is said that the President will veto the Agriculture bill and call an extra session of Congress if it carries the McCumber amendment or any other proposition extending direct aid to the farmers. The Washington Post of this morning carried the following:

ULTIMATUM FROM WILSON—WILL VETO AGRICULTURAL BILL IF M'CUMBER AMENDMENT IS IN IT.

Representative ASBURY LEVER, of South Carolina, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, was notified by President Wilson last night that the President would veto the Agriculture appropriation bill if it contains the McCumber amendment, which proposes to loan Government money directly on farm land.

Representative LEVER also was informed that the President will veto the bill if it comes to him containing the so-called Bulkley amendment, which would obligate the Government to purchase $50,000,000 of land-mortgage bonds, another form of Government direct aid.

Mr. Chairman, the responsibility of passing this bill rests on Congress, and I have a duty to perform to the people of Oklahoma who elected me as a Member of this body. Our people were compelled during the cotton-harvesting season just passed to sustain a loss of thirty to forty millions of dollars by reason of the paralyzed condition of the cotton market. The Government refused to extend aid and assist them in holding their crop until the war was over and the markets restored. The Government can help every class of business and every character of business except the agricultural industry. We can build a railroad in Alaska, purchase ships to carry the commerce on the high seas, pass a Federal reserve act that puts the Government behind the currency of the commercial interests of the country and extends relief to the banks, but we must not extend relief to the agriculturists.

The President has a perfect right to veto this bill if he so desires if it passes with a provision carrying Government aid. That is his privilege, but that shall not deter me from voting for what I believe to be right, and if the bill passes carrying this provision and is vetoed, the responsibility will be with the President and not with me.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

[Mr. MOORE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, no one can carefully and candidly examine our present banking system without coming clearly to the conclusion that at present it favors commercial transactions at the expense of the producing or agricultural interests of the country. A man steps into a bank now to borrow money and if he wants it for commercial purposes the bank is glad to get the loan, because it can at once rediscount it and get its money back; but if he steps in and asks to borrow money for the purpose of buying land, of improving land, to carry on the process of production, the banks says, "We can not use that very well, because we can not rediscount it," and the result is that in a practical way the farming interests of this country are put at a disadvantage in the borrowing of money, and every man who is in practical touch with the present situation knows that it is harder now to secure money for a loan upon real estate than it has ever been, so far as I have known, in the history of this country.

Now, I can not get myself to believe that the Hollis bill amounts to anything. It seems to me that these fellows loan themselves their own money. If it is in a community where they have no money, they can not start these banks, because they can not find the money to start them or run them. On the other hand, if it is in a community where they have plenty of money, they do not need this system at all. I think that if we ever do anything that is of real substantial benefit to the farming interests of the country we must do for them what we have done for the great commercial interests of this country—put the strength and credit of the Government behind it. [Applause.] If you do not do that, you accomplish nothing. I would favor the McCumber bill with a slight amendment. I do not believe that we ought to be forced to sell our bonds at 4½ per cent when we can sell them at 3 per cent. [Applause.] Therefore I am going at the proper time to offer as an amendment the words "not to exceed 4½ per cent." On the other hand, if these bonds will sell for more than their face value, I see no reason why the Government should not be able to command the market price for them. If they are drawing 4½ per cent and selling at 110, why should not the Government receive 110 for them. At the proper time I will offer a little amendment covering that defect. With this amendment I shall vote for the McCumber provision.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS. Does the gentleman believe the bill also ought to carry the amortization plan?

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, I think that is a good thing, but I do not think it is absolutely essential. I think great relief can come from this bill if it be passed substantially in the form that has been proposed by Mr. MCCUMBER, with the amendment which I suggest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the Federal reserve act places the Government behind the commercial interests of the country, issues and proposes to issue money into the hundreds of millions, and lends it to the banks for commercial purposes. No one should be shocked therefore when it is proposed by the McCumber amendment to place the Government behind a plan that proposes to finance or take up the securities of the farmers of this country and enable them to secure money that is placed at the disposal of agencies selected by the Government for the convenience and benefit of the farmers. I opposed the Federal reserve act, but that having been forced upon the country and having made more difficult the borrowing of money upon farm securities than ever before, I shall vote for this amendment. I am opposed, as a general proposition, to the Government issuing money, but if we can issue it for commercial purposes we ought to issue it for the purpose of enabling our people to purchase and pay for farms. I shall vote for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, during the past few years no question has been discussed by the people of this country more than the question of rural credits. It is generally conceded by everyone having any acquaintance with the subject that in this country to-day the farmers are paying an interest rate of just about twice what they should pay. The farm property of this country is estimated to be worth $40,000,000,000, in round numbers. Twenty-eight billion dollars of that amount represents the value of farm lands. The annual income from all farm property is something more than $8,000,000,000. The total amount of credits that the farmers of this country carry to-day is about $6,000,000,000. In a recent work by Mr. Herrick on rural credits he makes the statement that the average interest rate on this $6,000,000,000 of farm credits is 8½ per cent. The interest that the farmers of this country are paying each year amounts to over $500,000,000.

It does not take much of an argument to convince any man if we can adopt some system that will cut that rate in two, reduce it one-half, take off the backs of the American farmers over $250,000,000, it is our business to do that.

Mr. GORDON and Mr. BATHRICK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. While you are taking it off the backs of the farmers and lending it to them at 4 per cent, why do you not pass it around and loan it to everybody at 4 per cent? Men in business have to pay 6 per cent.

Mr. NORTON. Yes; and many of these men are, in carrying on their business, standing on the backs of the farmers of the country. Farmers who produce the food for the Nation occupy a very much more important position in the life of the Nation than the business men you speak of.

Mr. GORDON. You have to get money to do business with.

Mr. BATHRICK. I asked the gentleman to yield that I may have opportunity to pay just tribute to a banker of the United States who owns one of these 10 or 12 per cent banks and yet, unselfishly, is standing here and advocating a lower interest to the farmers of this country. I commend his conduct to some who will not sacrifice personal interest to the people's welfare.

Mr. NORTON. I want to say to gentlemen of the committee if I know anything about anything I know something about farm loans and the exorbitant rates farmers are paying on their credits in this country. We have before us here to-night a very simple proposition. I believe, and I am sure that is the belief of anyone who has knowledge of this subject and knowledge of the parliamentary situation here, that unless we concur in the McCumber amendment practically without amendment, we are going to go home from this Congress without any Federal rural credit legislation. [Applause.] I want to say to you, gentlemen, that with the situation that is before us I am first for the McCumber amendment. The Bulkley bill has some merit. But the Hollis bill proposed as a substitute is, in my judgment, an impractical proposition. The Hollis bill will bring no relief whatever in this generation to the farmers of this country. [Applause.] I know that the McCumber bill is a practical and workable bill. It is not in some important particulars as I would like to have it. Still it is a simple proposition. It involves the same business principles that are employed by every great insurance company in this country to-day making farm loans. What do these companies do? They do just as the McCumber bill provides for the Federal Government to do. They send out applications through the banks of the country to receive from the farmers applications for loans. They act upon those applications and they grant the loans if the security is sufficient. In brief, that is what the McCumber amendment is. It provides that the Government shall loan money direct to farmers; that applications shall be sent to the State and national banks of the country; that these applications shall be returned here to a farm credit bureau in the Treasury. It is true that the provisions of this bill loans the credit of the United States to the farmers of the country, but not any more than the credit of the country to-day is being loaned to the national-banking institutions of the country.

The credit of the United States is being loaned without question to the banks in this country to-day. Should the United States under provisions of this bill issue bonds and loan $2,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 to the farmers of this country, it would be secured by farm lands worth more than twice the amount of the loans. The United States now lends its credit to the Federal reserve banks, which accept as security commercial papers frequently having back of them no producing power. It is often a question as to whether the private individual or business concern making these papers will be able to meet them. However, when you loan a farmer under a proper rural-credit system $1,000 he is possessed of property which will produce an income sufficient to pay the annual interest on that $1,000 and to retire the principal within a reasonable time.

There are some provisions in the McCumber bill which should be amended. The provision in the bill now is that the bonds to be issued by the Government shall be sold at their face value and shall bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent, payable annually. I believe that this provision should be amended to provide that the bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent and may be sold at not less than their face value. I believe, further, that the rate of 5 per cent provided to be charged to farmers on their loans might well be reduced to 4 per cent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NORTON. Just a word. I want to say, in conclusion, to the gentlemen of the committee if you vote for the McCumber amendment to-night, you will have to-morrow Federal rural-credit legislation and a good, fair, workable system in this country. If you adopt some substitute for amendment 89 and send the legislation to conference, you will be simply playing into the hands of those opposed to Federal rural-credit legislation, and such action will mean the death of practical rural-credit legislation by this Congress. This legislation is now half way through Congress. I hope the real friends of rural-credit legislation will not vote to lose the advantage which it almost seems Providence has given us. The eyes of the toiling farmers of this country are turned toward you, beseeching your assistance. Do not fail them at this hour of opportunity. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WILSON of Florida having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21328) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in another legislative body, consisting of 96 Members, with only 6 of that membership present, I am informed, a great proposition, involving an entirely new departure in the legislation in this country, was inserted upon an appropriation bill as a rider. That bill came to this body. An attempt in a regular and orderly way was made to send that bill to conference, where the differences between the two Houses might be worked out in an orderly and proper manner. That request was denied. The bill was sent to a committee of this House which had no jurisdiction over it in the first instance, and whose members, as far as I know, with the exception of one, had never given any special consideration to the subject of rural credits, although most of its members were in favor of rural-credit legislation. That committee was asked in the course of 24 hours to present a workable, reasonable, and wise proposal to this House and to the country.

The committee met this morning at 9.30, and continued in serious and earnest deliberation until after 1 o'clock, when the pressure of time made it necessary that some report to the House should be made. We did what I think all sensible men under the circumstances would have done. We reported back to the House a bill which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate, after long deliberation, covering more than nine months; a bill which contains the essential features recommended by the Federal Rural Credit Commission, and a bill which has been worked out by the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate; a bill which almost in its entirety has the strong indorsement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], who in my judgment—and I do not speak this in disparagement of other Members who have studied this question—knows more about rural-credit legislation than any other man in this body, if not in this country [applause], as a substitute for the unconsidered proposition which was put upon the agricultural appropriation bill as a rider in another body—a proposition that has never been considered by any committee in the other body, and a proposition which had behind it nothing of the expert opinion of the country on this subject.

It was a matter of good fortune for the membership of the Committee on Agriculture that this great student of that question [Mr. Moss] should have been a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Now, gentlemen, what is the situation? We are within three days of the time when this Congress must die by limitation of law. Intimations in the newspapers, whether true or not, have it that there is danger of a presidential veto of the agricultural appropriation bill——

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I do not yield—if certain propositions are permitted to remain in it.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I do not yield. I decline to yield, in all courtesy to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LEVER. If the agricultural appropriation bill should be vetoed—and I do not know whether it will be or not and have no authority to speak for the White House—if it should be, I say to you, that great bill, carrying $2,500,000 for the suppression of the foot-and-mouth disease, which is rapidly spreading, would not be available. I say to you, southern men, that the money for the enforcement of the cotton-futures act would not be available. I say to you that numbers and numbers of new and important propositions, as well as old ones, that are carried in the agricultural appropriation bill must fail, including the hog-cholera item.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. I decline to yield; I can not yield

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LEVER. I say to the Members of this House, I say to my Democratic colleagues, that we are facing as critical a situation as has faced this administration since it began, and it behooves us—it behooves all of us—to deal with this matter in a calm and dispassionate manner. Let this bill get to conference. Let us see if we can not work out a reasonable compromise and come to some conclusion and prevent one of the great supply bills of this country being defeated, necessitating, without a doubt, an extra session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] use some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. He has used all his time.

Mr. HENRY. Then I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is recognized.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time at my disposal it is obviously impossible to discuss adequately the great subject we are called upon to consider. In this time, however, I think I can make clear what the difference is between the Hollis bill, as reported by the Committee on Agriculture today as a substitute for the McCumber bill, and the original Hollis-Bulkley bill, which has been pending for nearly 10 months. Most of the words in the bill now reported by the Committee on Agriculture are the same as the words in the bill H. R. 16478, which I introduced last May. There are, however, three important amendments proposed to this bill. There are many small amendments, transpositions of words, and grammatical corrections which amount to nothing and which I am willing to accept. But, as I say, there are three important amendments.

First, the control of the system is taken away from the Federal Reserve Board, as was proposed in the original bill, and it is placed in the hands of a Federal farm-loan board, created by the new bill. The second important amendment proposes the incorporation of private institutions, confined in their operations each to a single State, with a minimum capitalization of $250,000.

These would be private banks, incorporated for profit, but permitted to do business of the same character as the original bill proposed to have done exclusively by farmers' cooperative associations. These banks would be under Federal control, but would be incorporated for private profit.

The third important amendment is that section 30 of the original Hollis-Bulkley bill, the section which provided for the purchase by the Federal Government of the bonds issued by the land banks—Federal aid to the system—is proposed to be stricken out.

As the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the chairman of the committee has said, the bill which is now reported is one which has been carefully considered. The joint subcommittee of the Senate and House Committees on Banking and Currency worked for months on this proposition and had the benefit of hearing many expert witnesses. It had the benefit of studying the work prepared by the United States commission which went abroad. It had the benefit of cross-examining the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], who served so ably as a member of that commission. It had the assistance of other Members of this House, notably the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK], the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], and others who had made a specialty of this subject, who came before our committee and presented their views. We had the services of the best expert that we could find in the drafting of the bill, Dr. H. Parker Willis, of New York, who was the expert employed by the House Committee on Banking and Currency in the preparation of the Federal reserve law, and who is now secretary of the Federal Reserve Board. He assisted us with his technical knowledge in the preparation of this bill. You need have no fear of any technical defects in the bill. The only propositions on which I differ from the Hollis bill as now presented are broad questions of policy, which every Member of this House can understand in short order.

The first important amendment, taking the control of the system away from the Federal Reserve Board and lodging it with the Federal farm-loan board, is, I believe, a good amendment. I am for it.

The second amendment, proposing that private banks may be incorporated to compete with the cooperative associations which we propose to incorporate, is an amendment to which I am opposed. I shall discuss it more fully under the five-minute rule, as time is short now.

But the fundamental proposition that is wrong about this Hollis bill as it comes to us from the Committee on Agriculture is that it lacks section 30. It lacks that substantial Government aid which will be absolutely necessary to make a success of any rural credit system in this country, as has proved to be the case in every country of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BULKLEY. Briefly. I have very little time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman believe that a proposition which does not carry Government aid will be worth comparatively anything at all to the farmers?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Then is not this Hollis bill pure buncombe?

Mr. BULKLEY. I do not believe it will be of any use at all unless you add section 30 to it. [Applause.]

Now, I want to say that all the farmers of the country have demanded at least as much aid as was contained in the original Hollis-Bulkley bill, and many of them have asked for more. Let me read to you briefly the resolutions adopted at the last annual meeting of the National Grange:

Whereas at the last national meeting of the grange it indorsed the principle of Government aid in establishing a system of farm credit suitable to the needs of agriculture; and

Whereas after a year of official investigation it has been proven that in the long-founded practice of all the great nations of the earth government aid of farm credit is a necessary factor in aid to government, to efficiency of food production, and deliverance from high cost of farm loans, which is now operating to discourage investment in agriculture; and

Whereas a farm-credit bill emanating from a joint committee of the House and Senate, known as the Bulkley-Hollis bill, contains but a modicum of Government aid, hardly in compliance with the request of the large body of Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the legislative committee and officers of the grange throughout the country are instructed to insist on behalf of this body that more substantial Government aid to steady interest rates and uphold the market for farm-mortgage bonds shall be included in the bill finally passed by Congress; and

Be it further resolved, That no farm-credit bill which places in the hands of private capital the power to make interest rates on mortgage bonds without limitations by Federal law will meet either the needs of agriculture or the just demand of the National Grange.

Let me call attention to the fact that it says that the legislative committee is instructed to insist upon even more substantial Government aid than is provided for in the Hollis-Bulkley bill. The Committee on Agriculture now asks you to strike out all of the substantial Government aid that was provided in the Hollis-Bulkley bill. Does anyone suppose that the farmers will be satisfied with that sort of legislation?

The Farmers' Union at the last national convention adopted these resolutions:

First. That any system for farm finance should aim, first of all, for service and not for dividend, although it will be necessary to pay reasonable dividends on capital stock.

Second. That the postal-savings deposits be deposited in the farmers' association in lieu of bonds, to supply cash.

Third. That the regional reserve banks be used to discount farmers' notes, the same as any other commercial paper.

Fourth. That the by-laws allow the borrower to elect the time and the manner of all long-term loans in accordance with strict rules of amortization and that short-term loans be made according to the regulation of ordinary commercial loans.

Fifth. That the board of directors or advisers decide on all applications for loans and the quality of the security.

So far as these resolutions relate to land-mortgage credit, the original Hollis-Bulkley bill substantially meets every one of them.

Now, gentlemen, I propose to offer to the Hollis amendment now pending a few simple amendments. Some of them are of minor importance, and it is a matter of comparative indifference whether they are agreed to or not. Three of them are merely incidental to the two important amendments which I believe to be essential to the perfection of a proper rural credit system. These important amendments are: First, to strike out section 17 of the new Hollis bill providing for the creation of private banks, whose advantage would be to increase the interest rates and compete with the farmers' loan associations. Second amendment, to reinsert section 30 of the old bill providing for a substantial aid from the United States Government in the support of farm credits.

I take it that the gentleman who will conclude this debate in behalf of the committee will offer some further explanation of the structure of the bill which I have not had time to do in the brief time at my disposal. I take it, too, that he will discuss the McCumber amendment and show what are the fatal defects of that amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 17 minutes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in common with every member of the Agricultural Committee of the House, I regret the method by which this bill has been catapulted into the legislative arena. Even were it possible to secure for it careful consideration, its enactment at this time and by this method will subject the law to suspicion and distrust. The public mind has not been prepared for this rapid-fire work, this nickel-in-the-slot method of enacting legislation; and it would have been vastly better had the committees having legislative jurisdiction over this subject framed this bill in the ordinary manner and presented it to the House and Senate through the usual legislative channels. I say this in friendship to rural credits legislation and not in criticism of the Agricultural Committee. It was a "condition, not a theory," which that committee had to face this morning in the committee room, and I feel that its action in bringing back this bill to the House with promptness deserves commendation rather than criticism.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] has just spoken in criticism of the substitute offered to the House by our committee. I wish to use the time allotted to me principally in explaining the provisions of this bill. Some weeks ago I gave to the House my views on State aid, and I shall not on this occasion repeat them. But in passing I desire to say that at no time have I held a very high opinion of the administrative features of the Hollis-Bulkley bill, but I have never held nor expressed as mean an opinion of it as has been freely expressed on the floor of the House to-day by its avowed friends. It has been asserted time and again in this debate that without section 30—that is, without the aid of the Federal Treasury to float its bonds—the proposed bank is powerless to aid the farmers of the United States, and that unless the system is protected from all competition the bank itself can not survive. Thus its friends frankly admit that they are seeking to bestow not only Government aid but also to grant Government monopoly.

The gentleman from Ohio—one of the joint authors of the Bulkley-Hollis bill—complains of the competition of independent banks which are proposed to be chartered by the committee substitute. Now, how can any independent bank compete successfully with the Hollis-Bulkley system? Such competition is only possible if the institution is prepared to give better service at lower rates. Whoever heard of competition on any other terms? The purpose of this legislation is to give to farmers the very best possible rates and terms on farm loans. Competition means the survival of the fittest, and in the end will award business to the strongest instrumentality. It will give command of the field to that institution which can do the business on the best terms to the borrower.

The usual and ordinary objection to extending Government aid to any institution is that such action drives private capital from that particular field of endeavor, and hence stifles private initiative and of necessity promotes the growth of State socialism; but in this debate we have a reversal of this argument. The friends and authors of the Bulkley-Hollis bill, even after the House has amended the committee substitute by inserting the State-aid provision as originally written, are claiming that it is necessary to protect these Government-aided banks from the competition of independent banks, and are insisting on striking section 17 from the bill. This amendment, if adopted, will add monopoly to Government aid and will make that provision doubly offensive to those who believe in a fair field and no favor.

However, in the end a decision on this question of State aid must be made by Congress, and a year's debate or consideration can not obviate that necessity.

I am not one who considers that the rate of interest is the sole consideration to decide the question as to what constitutes the best system of rural credits. In the United States in all our banking legislation of the past we have endeavored to protect the interests of the depositor. This question has been deemed of so great importance that it has been made a political issue and has been incorporated in political platforms. Perhaps, in the conduct of commercial banking, this view is the correct one; but true rural credit banking looks to the protection of the borrower.

I wish to emphasize this idea of protection to the borrower and of this new banking viewpoint. For this reason the system of administration, rather than the rate of interest, comes first in point of importance. I do not wish to disparage the question of rates, but rather to insist upon consideration of administration. Through this proposed system of rural credits we seek to encourage the farmer to go in debt for certain purposes; not only to go in debt, but to go heavily in debt—to mortgage his farm up to the limit of his commercial credit, to be repaid during a long period of time; and, in turn, we seek to protect his interests so that he may with safety and with every assurance of success accept that hazard. It is my opinion that it is only by increasing the volume of their indebtedness that the present generation of farmers may hope to improve our agriculture in a satisfactory degree. There seems to be a relation between improvement in agriculture and the volume of farm indebtedness.

Iowa is the best agricultural State in the Union, and it bears the heaviest mortgage indebtedness. Speaking in general terms, agriculture in the South is not as well organized as in the North; but the South is much freer of mortgage indebtedness than is the North. There has been rapid improvement in southern agriculture during the past 10 years, and likewise there has been a corresponding increase in the volume of mortgage indebtedness. Perhaps the agricultural lands in Prussia are the most heavily mortgaged of any equal area of the earth's surface; but nowhere has agriculture been more highly organized. Therefore I repeat that a successful rural credits system must be one which will enable farmers to go more heavily in debt and which will permit this indebtedness to be contracted under safe terms and conditions.

We have had many rural credits bills presented to Congress. In the main, these various bills represent the individual views of their respective authors. There are two bills which form the basis of this substitute which is offered by the Agricultural Committee. In their early stages these two bills were sharply antagonistic, but as they passed through successive revisions they came more nearly in agreement, until, finally, it was found possible to merge them into this substitute without material abridgment of either.

The United States Commission, after having made a careful study of the subject of mortgage credit, presented the pioneer bill to Congress. Upon that structure the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committees of the House and Senate constructed a bill. Senator HOLLIS, in reporting that bill to the Senate, stated that it was in all its principal features similar to the United States Commission bill, except they felt that they had made some improvements upon it.

The two bills differed in four important particulars: First, the United States Commission in their bill gave the banks under their charters a right to accept a limited line of deposits, fixing the limit at a volume not exceeding one-half the paid-up capital and surplus of the bank. It followed, of course, that the bank was permitted to engage in certain lines of commercial banking so as to provide profitable investment for these deposited funds. The banking and currency bill did not permit the acceptance of deposits nor did not extend the privilege of commercial banking. They decided upon a pure mortgage bank. Personally I am still of the opinion that a mortgage bank should be given the right to accept limited deposits in order to provide funds to purchase their bonds as a temporary investment and to sustain their market value. The bank will find itself under the necessity of fixing a minimum market price on its bonds if these securities are to enjoy the advantage of a stable price limit and a ready cash market. Until these banks have accumulated a considerable surplus it will be difficult for them to protect their securities, should they be offered upon the market by investors. However, in the revision of our bill, the commission decided to eliminate this provision and to reduce the banks to the rank of those proposed by the Banking and Currency Committee. This action eliminated one of the differences between the two bills and left them diverging sharply in but three important provisions.

One of these was in the authority which should be given governmental control over the proposed banks. The commission was of the opinion that this system of banking should be kept separate and wholly apart from the Federal Reserve Board, and we proposed a separate bureau to be created in the Treasury Department. The chief executive officer was to be known as the commissioner of farm land banks.

As stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Banking and Currency Committee lodged their control in the Federal Reserve Board, but in a revision by Senator HOLLIS and his associates this control was taken from the Federal Reserve Bank and placed in a special bureau in the Treasury Department. This change eliminated one of the other differences between the two bills. In all of their essential principles the two bills now had but two differences. One of these was that of Government aid. Section 30 in the original Bulkley-Hollis bill places the power of the Government's Treasury behind the system by permitting the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $50,000,000 of land bonds annually. This provision was intended to have the effect to place on the Government Treasury the burden of keeping these bonds at par. The banks were to be founded in part with Government capital, thus making the Government a stockholder and in part a responsible manager of the bank's business. The Treasury would become a constant purchaser of the securities, and in time the Government would come to hold a vast volume of these bonds. These securities would thus be regarded as quasi public bonds, and their selling value would, in part at least, be a measure of our national credit.

I am not one of those that believe that the United States Treasury and the power of taxing the United States people ought to be put at the control and for the exclusive benefit of any class of our citizens. [Applause.] The United States commission in their report states that while such aid has proven beneficial to European agriculture, it was neither essential nor desirable under present conditions in the United States. After long consideration Senator HOLLIS abandoned the principle and struck section 30 from their bill. This elimination in the committee bill left but one important difference between the two measures. It is these successive changes to which the gentleman from Ohio referred in his remarks as constituting important amendments in the Bulkley-Hollis bill. I call particular attention of the House to the very important fact that these changes were from the position originally assumed by the Banking and Currency Committee toward that occupied by the United States commission, thereby bringing the two bodies nearly in harmony as regards their recommendations on this important subject. The one remaining point of difference was with reference to the administrative form or structure of the proposed banks. The bill presented by the commission was fashioned after the national banking law, which, as you know, created a system of independent banks. We gave preference to a decentralized banking system. The Banking and Currency Committee selected the scheme embodied in the Federal reserve act, which is that of a federated banking system consisting of a central bank and associated local banks or societies.

There is no compromise posible between these two antagonistic ideas. Senator HOLLIS believes as earnestly that a central institution, with large capital and the prestige which goes with such an institution, is the better type of instrumentality, as I do that an independent institution should be preferred. In reporting out this substitute neither the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate nor the Agriculture Committee of the House attempted to determine that controversy.

The difference was eliminated by simply broadening the provisions of the bill so as to permit banks to be organized under either scheme. If the substitute be adopted by the Congress, it will leave the question of superiority to the arbitrament of actual service. The better system will win in the open competition for the business which the new system is organized to transact. I regret that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is not willing to accept this compromise. If his ideas are the better, he should be willing to await the triumph which will surely come with the actual demonstration of that superiority in actual practice. It is possible that each system will possess advantages in meeting the varying local conditions which are to be met in the wide area of our Republic. If so, then each section or State can organize under that type which best suits its requirements. This action disposed of all differences between the United States commission bill and the bill presented by the Banking and Currency Committee, and that is why I am standing here in favor of the substitute. I consider it one of the greatest honors that can come to any man that he shall be sent abroad by his Government to make a study of foreign conditions and to frame a bill on a subject of interest to millions of people, absolutely creating a new banking system, and that he shall live to stand on the floor of this House when a committee of the United States Senate shall report a bill favorably—yes, unanimously—containing absolutely every essential feature of his original bill. [Applause.]

Frankly, I would appreciate the honor if this bill bore the names of its real authors, but I am content with the personal satisfaction which comes from the growth and adoption of our ideas by those who are charged with the particular duties of framing legislation for this great legislative body. If this substitute shall be adopted, it will create two different systems of mortgage banks, each having the same powers and limitations, discharging the same functions, and each receiving practically the same encouragement from the Government. It is true that the capital stock of the central banks, under the Hollis scheme, is to be subscribed by the Government; but the limitation is written in the bill, so this stock ownership is purely temporary, as this Government stock is transferred to the local associations as they may be formed under the growth of the system. No direct Government aid is extended to either of the proposed systems, but it is confidently believed that the bill will comprise the most favorable conditions with all the advantages and prestige which organization, supervision, and friendly administration of the United States Government can give. This legislation will permit the farmers of the country in every State in the Union to organize themselves into corporations and put their securities on the markets of the United States on as favorable terms as any other corporation in the Nation.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is to-day selling $40,000,000 of bonds at 4½ per cent interest. These bonds are taxable as personal property. This well illustrates the advantages which the corporate plan give to those who may wish to borrow large sums of money. This corporation is retiring an issue of 3½ per cent bonds which were issued some years ago on a more favorable money market. By this substitute we are proposing to permit the farmers in any county or State in the Union to organize their own corporation. Under such conditions they can sell their bonds at a lower rate than the railroads, because these securities are exempt from taxation under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. No; not at the present moment. I am proud to stand here as a sponsor for this bill, and I do not want any man in this Congress to understand that I am either a banker or that I have any interest in a bank. I am one of those who have borrowed at a bank, and that is the reason I am so intensely interested in this legislation. I am proud to stand on this floor behind a bill that will enable those who now work on farms and those who will work on the farms in the next generation to organize corporations that they may sell their credits on the markets of this country under as favorable conditions as any securities can be sold in the United States. [Applause.]

Upon that statement I am willing to go before the people of my district; I am willing to stand upon it before the people of my State, and I am willing here to say to this Congress that this legislation will give to agriculture the greatest advantage that legislation can possibly bestow. I deny the fact, and if I had time I could prove it, that Government aid has ever been able to reduce the interest rate of any country in the world below that which is afforded by private initiative. It is easily possible to show that banks, privately managed and endowed with private capital, without other vestige of Government aid than that which comes from governmental supervision and control, have been able to give the farmers of a nation as low an interest rate as any Government-aided institution in that nation was able to give them. I challenge any man to point out any concrete illustration of any nation on the face of the earth where governmental aid has been able to reduce the interest rate below that maintained by private initiative. This substitute is not a bill that has not been carefully considered.

I am glad my friend from Ohio admits that it had been carefully considered. Of course it has been carefully considered, and if section 30 were in the bill I have no doubt he would be willing to accept it. The gentleman says he proposes to offer an amendment to strike out section 17. This is the compromise section which harmonizes the ideas of the commission with those of the committee. The gentleman is very willing to accept the fundamental principles enunciated by us, but eagerly desires to take away all of the administrative features that have been adopted by the United States commission. He would deny the power to any individual or of any association of persons to organize an independent bank in any State of the Union. In this method and by this amendment he would stifle all competition among institutions which are organized to serve the interests of the farmers. Under the Hollis bill it is proposed to grant absolute territory, and when a bank is organized in a county it is made to assume the whole duty of loaning in that territory. Now, my friends, when you come——

Mr. BULKLEY. Will the gentleman yield? I desire to say to the gentleman that is inaccurate; there is no such proposition in the Hollis-Bulkley bill.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I recognize what my friend means to say. The gentleman means to say they could grant permission to two banks in the same county if they wanted to do so.

Mr. BULKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. But it is not intended to do it.

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; if needed.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I do not accept that interpretation of the language of the bill, but out of the very great deference I feel for the gentleman from Ohio I withdraw that statement, and I will say instead that under the Hollis bill the local association that takes the mortgage can not dispose of it by any other method except to sell it to another local association organized under this bill or send it to the central bank for rediscount; and if there was a man standing at the doors of one of these banks with gold in his pockets he could not buy a mortgage under this system. You take away absolutely all power from private initiative or private capital to engage in the business in any way except through the regular channel of the bill. There are other good reasons for their viewpoint why competition should be eliminated.

Read the Hollis bill, and you will find that under its provisions the bank must charge the farmers 1 per cent for administration. That rate is fixed in the bill, and can not be altered, and yet under the section he moved to strike out "These private banks are permitted to charge not more than 1 per cent." The Hollis bank is not permitted to charge less than 1 per cent, while the private bank may not charge more. In Europe the ordinary administrative charge is thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent. Under the Hollis bill the administration is fixed at 1 per cent, and it can not be lowered.

Mr. BULKLEY. Of course the gentleman knows that that all goes back to the borrower as an owner of the bank?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I know that the borrower has a remote chance to recover some part of only one-half of it. Then there is another remarkable provision in the Bulkley bill. Before any farmer can negotiate a loan, he must either put up 5 per cent of his loan in cash or else increase the mortgage on his farm to that extent. Any farmer who wants to borrow $2,000 under that bill must either make a cash stock subscription of $100 or he must give a mortgage for $2,100. Is it surprising that those who favor such a bill are opposing a proposal to permit private capital to loan a man $2,000 and take a mortgage for $2,000?

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Not at the present time; and because of the fact that we propose to permit a bank to fix its own charges—fixing a maximum rather than a minimum—thereby not compelling the farmer to pay a maximum rate of 1 per cent, because we propose to permit a bank to make a loan to a farmer without compelling him to add 5 per cent to the face of the loan and pay interest upon it, it is seriously contended here that such action is inimical to this wonderful State-aided institution which it is proposed to charter. It is an open confession that it can not stand competition and can not give the best possible service to our farmers. These provisions of the original Bulkley-Hollis bill have been under consideration for nine long months and by a unanimous vote of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate were stricken from the bill. The proposed amendment is to restore to the bill those sections which could not stand the test of criticism and which were eliminated in the process of perfecting the bill.

Now, my friends, in conclusion—how much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Let us take up the technique of this proposition. Under the Hollis administrative features—and I want you to remember that there are two separate and distinct administrative systems included in this substitute—there would be 12 central banks organized, one in each Federal reserve district, with a capital of $500,000; and unless that capital is subscribed by private initiative within 90 days it must be subscribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of our Government. This Treasury stock is transferred to newly formed local associations, so that the ownership of the United States Government in capital stock is only temporary. The functions of the central bank are chiefly that of rediscounting farm mortgages taken by the local associations, and the negotiation of land bonds based on these rediscounted farm mortgages. Local associations may be organized with a minimum capital of $10,000, to make loans in such territory as may be assigned to them under their charters. A single county or contiguous counties may be named in their charters. The only disposition which any local association can make of a mortgage is either to sell it to another local, or send it to the central bank for rediscount.

Thus, the central bank is given the power to issue bonds, while the local association is limited to appraising the land and arranging terms with the borrower.

Section 17 of this bill gives the authority to grant charters to independent banks. The words "private banks" have been used in this debate as though there were two classes of ownership. The stock ownership of all banks organized under this bill is purely private, and in no proper use of the term are any of the banks cooperative. It is proposed to permit an independent bank to organize with a capital of $250,000. These banks will make their loans direct to the farmers anywhere in the State where they may be organized under the supervision of the United States Government. The borrower is not compelled to purchase any capital stock or to assume any degree of liability beyond the face of his note. The bank also has the same right to issue bonds, dollar for dollar, on the security of their loans that the Federal reserve banks, under the other system, have. Thus the two systems are on a plane of absolute equality before the law. Does any Member desire to prevent private initiative, or deny to private capital and private initiative of this country all opportunity to assist in the great work of financing the agriculture of our Nation? Does anyone care to say that a man can not back his own capital with his own judgment? Do you want to say that you will, by provision of Federal law, make it impossible for any man or associations of men to organize a bank and take advantage of the exemptions from all taxation and other exemptions under this bill?

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman think these farm-bond banks, as taken from the Moss bill, would be organized alongside of the Federal land banks, which are allowed to have Government money?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The Federal land banks do not have Government money. It is not only my judgment that such banks will be organized, but it is my judgment that they will absolutely monopolize the field in this country, and that, in my opinion, is the reason the gentleman from Ohio wants to strike them from the bill. If it were not his opinion that the proposed independent banks will have decided economic advantages over the other, what would impel him to offer his proposed amendments? Is it solely his pride of authorship that not a single change shall be made in his individual offering?

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Are you in favor of equal interest in every part of the country? What effect will the rate of interest, being the same, have in different parts of the country?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Neither bill guarantees that there shall be equal interest; the statement is that there shall be nearly as equal rates as may be possible. My opinion is that this legislation will tend to lower rates of interest; to stabilize them, and in the end, to equalize them.

Now, just a word about the McCumber proposition. In addition to the defects which have been so ably pointed out by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], the measure is, in no proper sense of the term, a rural credit bill. It contains no proposition whatever for amortization. All that is possible under its terms is to negotiate loans for a term of 10 years. You can not borrow money under it for 9 years or for 15 years. Its system of administration is that of any broker in farm mortgages, who loans on coupon notes, with a provision for compound interest at the close of any interest period.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer an amendment until the McCumber amendment is read.

Mr. HOWARD. Will this bill be read section by section for the purpose of offering amendments to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. The McCumber amendment will be offered as a whole, and after it is read it will be read for amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I am speaking of the committee amendment, known as the Hollis bill.

Mr. MANN. The committee amendment, Mr. Chairman, presents itself before the House without being offered, under the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, you have first to read the Senate amendment and then the committee amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. Will it be in order to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the McCumber amendment? We read that this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the McCumber amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the McCumber amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the McCumber amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 89: Page 73, after line 10, insert:

"That there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the bureau of farm credits. Said bureau shall be presided over by an officer who shall be designated commissioner of farm credits. The Secretary of the Treasury shall provide for sufficient clerical force to perform the duties of said bureau.

"That there is hereby appropriated and set aside for the use of said bureau, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"That the said sum so provided shall be used for the purpose of purchasing notes secured by first mortgages on agricultural lands, as hereinafter provided, for stationery and clerical expenses, and such other expenses as may be incident to the business of said bureau.

"That every national bank and every State bank desiring to avail itself of the privileges herein provided are hereby created and declared to be agencies of the Treasury Department for the purpose of receiving from mortgagor notes and mortgages securing same, advancing the moneys to the said mortgagors and transmitting said notes and mortgages to the bureau of farm credits, and receiving in return therefor the amount advanced to the mortgagor by the said bureau.

"That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to apportion the sum hereby appropriated among the several States according to the agricultural population, importance of the agricultural productions of each State, and percentage of agricultural lands incumbered by mortgages or trust deeds, and to pay for such notes and mortgages as may be presented to the extent of the amount apportioned to any State.

"That any owner of agricultural lands within the United States, who is living upon and farming such lands, desiring a loan under the provisions of this act, shall execute a promissory note due in 10 years, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, interest payable annually, which interest shall be evidenced by 10 coupon notes attached to said principal note, and which coupons shall also bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of maturity until paid, payable annually. Said note shall also provide that the principal may be paid on any interest-paying day after the expiration of five years. Said note shall be secured by a first mortgage upon the lands so farmed by the owner, and executed and recorded in the manner provided by the laws of the State in which the land is situated, for the execution and recording of mortgages on real estate. Such mortgage shall be accompanied by an application for loan, which application shall recite the purpose for which the loan is desired, the market value of the land, the value at which it was last assessed for taxation, the value and kind of buildings thereon, the number of acres under cultivation, the character and quality of the soil, the number of acres capable of being cultivated, and such other information as may be required by the rules of the said bureau. Said application shall have attached thereto or made as a part thereof an affidavit signed by the owner and at least two neighbors who are thoroughly acquainted with land values in the vicinity, stating the market value of such lands and the market value of the particular lands to be mortgaged. Said note, mortgage, and application shall also be accompanied by an abstract of title duly certified by an abstract company, the register of deeds, or other officer authorized by the laws of the State to make and certify abstracts of lands, which abstract shall show no other mortgages, judgments, delinquent taxes, or other liens of any character against the said lands, unless the purpose of the loan is to secure money to cancel such liens. Said owner shall then present to any national bank or State bank accepting the provisions of this act the said loan papers. The said abstract and papers shall be carefully examined by the president, cashier, or other officer of the bank for the purpose of ascertaining whether the title is perfect in the mortgagor, whether the land is affected by any liens, who shall certify the result of his examination of the abstract, and who shall further certify what in his opinion and judgment is the actual cash selling price of the land. And no mortgage shall be accepted for a greater amount than one-half of the value of such lands, including improvements; nor in any event to an amount exceeding one-half of the actual market value thereof. The said bank may charge the borrower for its services in examining papers and abstract, and in forwarding the papers to the bureau of farm credits a sum not exceeding 1 per cent of the amount of the mortgage. No mortgage shall be less than $300 nor more than $10,000 to one person or company, and shall be in multiples of $100. The said notes and mortgages shall not be dated at the time they are executed and presented to the bank. The said bank shall forward all the said papers to the said bureau of farm credits, which bureau shall examine the abstract, note, mortgage, and application, and if said abstract shows the land to be clear or to have no liens of greater amount than the amount desired to be loaned, and all papers properly executed, it shall remit to the bank forwarding the papers the amount of the loan, and shall date the notes and mortgage the date on which the remittance is made, from which date interest shall begin to accrue; and all coupons shall be dated to correspond with the date affixed to the principal instrument; and said bureau shall return with the remittance, the abstract of title. Upon receipt of the said abstract of title by the bank, said bank shall require the abstract to be continued up to date of payment by said bank to the borrower, and if said abstract after being continued shows the land clear, the bank shall indorse over to the borrower the remittance made by the bureau of farm credits. If there are any liens upon the land, the bank, out of the remittance, shall first pay and have canceled such liens and pay the balance to the borrower. The bank shall be held responsible for any negligence in the performance of its duties as agent of said bureau. The principal and all interest coupons shall be payable at the bank where and through which the loan is negotiated and remitted by said bank to said bureau.

"That whenever the bureau of farm credits shall have received such mortgages to the extent of $1,000,000 it shall issue bonds in the name of the United States, payable in 20 years, and bearing 4½ per cent interest, payable annually, with the privilege and option of the said bureau to pay the principal at the expiration of 10 years. Said bonds shall be issued in denominations from $100 to $500 each, and the said commissioner of farm credits shall sell the said bonds for the face value thereof to any persons applying therefor, preference being given to those desiring small investments. Said bonds shall not be subject to taxation by the United States, a State, or municipality. All moneys received by the said commissioner in the sale of bonds and the principal and all interest paid on said mortgages shall be covered into the said fund of $10,000,000 and used in the payment of mortgages as they may be presented, the expenses of the bureau, the interest on bonds, and payment thereof at maturity.

"That all mortgages shall run to the commissioner of farm credits, and said commissioner shall have all the rights and authority of a mortgagee under the laws of the State wherein such mortgage is executed.

"That all taxes of every kind levied by a State or municipality which may become a lien prior to said mortgage shall be paid by the mortgagor at least 30 days prior to the time such lands could be sold for delinquent taxes. Upon his failure to do so, or to pay any other lien that may attach to said lands and become superior to said mortgage, the commissioner may pay the same, and the mortgage shall stand as security for such sums so paid and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum. And said mortgage shall further provide that in default of the payment of any interest or the payment of taxes, or other superior liens, as aforesaid, the commissioner may foreclose the premises pursuant to the laws of the State in which the land is situated. All papers necessary for the foreclosure proceedings shall be prepared and premises foreclosed by the proper law officer of the bureau. In lieu of foreclosure the commissioner may sell the mortgage to any person desiring to purchase the same, without recourse, and the money so received shall be covered into the said fund. Upon foreclosure the said commissioner may transfer and assign the certificate of sale to any purchaser, and after the period of redemption has expired may sell the lands. And any sum received therefor shall in like manner be covered into said fund.

"That it is the purpose of this act not only to secure and facilitate borrowing upon agricultural lands at a reasonable rate of interest, but also to afford a means for those who desire a safe investment, and so long as the said bureau shall be able to dispose of bonds at par it shall accept mortgages presented to any extent above the $10,000,000 hereby appropriated.

"That said bonds shall be negotiable in form and transferable by indorsement, and may be bought and sold by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, and may also be received as collateral for the issue of Federal reserve notes under the provisions of section 16 of said act.

"That the word 'mortgage' shall be construed to include deeds of trust or any other instruments of security on agricultural lands.

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall make all needful rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act.

"That this act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, is it not now in order to report the committee amendment first?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks if it is not in order to report the committee amendment first.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee amendment be reported.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-one Members are present—a quorum. The Clerk will read the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: In lieu of the matter presented by the Senate amendment, insert the following. "That the short title of this act shall be 'The Federal loan act'"—

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading in full of the amendment be dispensed with. I ask that it be read by title.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendment, and asks that it be read by title.

Mr. WINGO. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. While the Senate amendment is considered as one proposition, the amendment of the committee is such that we are entitled to consider it section by section and paragraph by paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not correct in that view.

Mr. WINGO. Do I understand we are obliged to vote a committee amendment up or down, or else offer "pot" amendments to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer amendments to the committee amendment or to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BATHRICK. Has the reading of the committee amendment been suspended?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] objected. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BATHRICK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire to offer a substitute. Can that be offered before the amendment is read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer a substitute until the committee amendment is read. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: In lieu of the matter submitted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the short title of this act shall be 'the Federal farm loan act,' and its administration shall be under the control and direction of the Federal Farm Loan Board created under the terms of this act.

"DEFINITIONS.

"SEC. 2. That wherever the term 'first mortgage' is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on real estate as shall be approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and the credit instruments secured thereby. The term 'farm loan bonds' shall be held to include bonds issued by Federal land banks or Federal farm bond banks, which are secured by first mortgages deposited as collateral security with a Federal reserve agent.

"FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

"SEC. 3. That a Federal farm loan board is hereby created which shall consist of three members, including the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be members ex officio, and a farm loan commissioner appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Said farm loan commissioner shall be a citizen of the United States, and shall devote his entire time to the business of said Federal Farm Loan Board. He shall receive an annual salary of $12,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses. He shall not be a stockholder or officer in any bank, trust company, or financial institution of any sort.

"Said farm loan commissioner shall act as chairman and active executive officer of said board. He shall be assigned offices for himself and his assistants and employees in the Department of the Treasury by the Secretary of the Treasury. Within 15 days after notice of his appointment he shall make and subscribe to the oath of office. The President shall have power to fill any vacancy occurring in the office of farm loan commissioner during the recess of the Senate by granting a commission which shall expire 30 days after the next session of the Senate convenes.

"Said Federal Farm Loan Board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, or other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board. All salaries and fees shall be fixed in advance by said board and shall be paid in the same manner as the salary of the farm loan commissioner. All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, and other employees shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, United States Statutes at Large, p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

"The said farm loan commissioner shall from time to time, as determined by the Federal Farm Loan Board, require examinations and reports of conditions of all national farm loan associations and Federal land banks established under the provisions of this act, and consolidated statements of the results thereof shall be published. He shall cause to be made appraisals of farm lands as provided by this act, shall prepare and publish amortization tables for use by national farm loan associations, and examine and give his opinions upon the laws of the several States relating to mortgage loans. He shall perform such other duties as said board may assign.

"The said commissioner shall prescribe a form for statement of condition of farm loan associations and Federal land banks, which shall be filled out quarterly by each such association or bank and transmitted to him, and such statements shall be public records.

"NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 4. That associations to be known as national farm loan associations for carrying on the business of lending on farm-mortgage security under this act may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than five. They shall enter into articles of association, which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association is formed and the county or counties within which its operations are to be carried on, and may contain any other provisions, not inconsistent with law, which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conduct of its affairs. These articles shall be signed by the persons uniting to form the association, and a copy of them shall be forwarded to the farm loan commissioner, to be filed and preserved in his office.

"Upon receiving an application to charter a national farm loan association the farm loan commissioner shall make an examination of the need for such association and of the land values and density of population of the county or counties named as the operating territory of the national farm loan association applying for charter. He may send an inspector to investigate and report thereon, and, if he shall deem best, may grant the said application. In such event he shall designate a county or group of contiguous counties as a farm loan district for such association under the provisions of this section.

"The persons uniting to form a national farm loan association under this act shall, under their hands, make an organization certificate, which shall specifically state:

"First. The name assumed by such association, which name shall be subject to the approval of the farm loan commissioner.

"Second. The State and county, or group of contiguous counties, within which its operations are to be carried on, and the particular city, town, or village at which its principal office is to be located.

"Third. The amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is to be divided.

"Fourth. The names and places of residence of the stockholders and the number of shares held by each of them.

"Fifth. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this act.

"The organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or notary public, and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, transmitted to the farm loan commissioner, who shall record and carefully preserve the same in his office, where it shall be at all times open to public inspection.

"Upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate the association shall become, as from date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have power—

"First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Second. To have succession for the period of 50 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association or by the act of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock or by act of Congress, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law.

"Third. To make contracts.

"Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, as fully as natural persons.

"Fifth. To elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to elect a president and a vice president, appoint a secretary-treasurer and other officers and employees; define their duties; require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof; by action of its board of directors dismiss such officers and employees or any of them at pleasure and appoint others to fill their places.

"Sixth. To prescribe, by its board of directors, subject to the oversight and regulation of the farm loan commissioner, by-laws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected, its officers elected or appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

"Seventh. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business herein described.

"But no farm-loan association shall engage in any transactions except such as are incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization until it has been authorized by the farm loan commissioner to commence business.

"CAPITAL STOCK.

"SEC. 5. That the capital stock of each national farm-loan association shall be not less than $10,000 and shall be divided into shares of $25 each.

"Every stockholder shall be entitled to 1 vote on each share of stock held by him at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of stockholders: Provided, That the maximum number of votes which may be cast by any one stockholder shall be 10.

"Whenever the board of directors of any farm-loan association shall so authorize, said association shall permit individuals to subscribe for shares therein on a partial payment, or building and loan association, plan, by making a cash payment of 10 per cent of the face value of such shares, and entering into a written agreement to make further payments for such shares at stated periods until such shares are fully paid for.

"Said written agreement shall provide in appropriate terms:

"First. That additional partial payments of a stated amount shall be made monthly, quarterly, semiannually, or annually, on definite days, to an amount not less in any one year than 10 per cent of the face value of the shares subscribed for.

"Second. That any subscriber who neglects to make payments as prescribed in said agreements shall be subject to a fine of 2 cents per month upon each dollar of arrears.

"Third. That if any member is in arrears for any payment for a period of six months, the board of directors may, upon 30-days' notice, in writing, declare his stock forfeited, and the value of his interest in said association shall be determined by reckoning the total amount of payments made, adding thereto any accrued dividends, deducting therefrom any fines imposed and unpaid, his equitable share of any losses, and a further sum equal to 10 per cent of his gross payments as a withdrawal fee. If the amount so determined is less than $25, it shall be forfeited to the association, unless said subscriber shall add thereto in cash a sum sufficient to make up $25, and in such event said subscriber shall receive a certificate for one share of stock. If the amount so determined is $25 or more, said subscriber shall receive a certificate for as many shares as said amount entitles him to, forfeiting any fractional part of a share, or at his option subscribing additional cash to make up the amount required for an additional full share, which he shall then receive.

"Fourth. That if any subscriber shall wish to avail himself of withdrawal privileges before his shares are fully paid in, he shall be entitled to do so by giving to the board of directors one month's notice in writing; upon the expiration of said month he shall be entitled to receive certificates of stock to which he is entitled upon the same basis herein provided for forfeiture of stock. The assignment of such shares may be permitted in the discretion of the directors.

"Except as herein specifically provided, no certificates of stock shall be issued to any subscriber unless fully paid in. Whenever payments and dividends on shares subscribed on the partial-payment plan amount to $25 each, the subscriber shall receive a certificate for the face value of such shares, together with an amount in cash equal to any excess that may be credited to said subscriber on account of said shares. Every such subscriber shall be entitled to dividends upon a number of shares whose value shall equal the total sum paid in by such subscriber prior to any dividend period, but no dividend shall be allowed on fractional parts of a share. The farm loan commissioner shall prescribe rules and regulations for partial-payment shares in each Federal land bank district, not inconsistent with this act, and containing equitable provision for—

"First. The adjustment of losses and of dividend credits;

"Second. The imposition of fines for default in payments;

"Third. The forfeiture and withdrawal of shares or of payments therefor upon default or failure to pay duly imposed fines;

"Fourth. Any additional provisions necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"At least 50 per cent of the capital stock of every farm loan association shall be paid in cash before any such association shall be authorized to begin business; and the remainder of the capital stock of such association may, at the discretion of its incorporators, be paid in first mortgages upon lands of the subscribers of the character described in section 8 of this act, without the restrictions provided in the sixth paragraph thereof.

"At least 5 per cent of said capital at the time of organization shall be invested in United States bonds.

"No person shall be permitted to borrow funds from a farm loan association unless he shall first become a member of such association, owning stock therein of a paid-in value amounting to one full share, at least, and not less than 5 per cent of the sum borrowed. If such person is not at the time of his application for a loan a member of said association, or if, being a member, his stock has not sufficient paid-in value to meet the requirements of this section, he shall make application for enough stock to fulfill said requirements. If such application for a loan and for stock is granted, the stock thus applied for shall be issued to the applicant simultaneously with the proceeds of the loan, and the face of the mortgage may, if desired, cover both the amount of the loan granted and the par value of the stock applied for. The par value of the stock applied for shall be in addition to the amount of the permitted maximum loan specified in section 8 of this act.

"Whether the applicant for a loan shall be at the time of the application the owner of sufficient paid-in capital stock to entitle him to a loan, or whether he shall apply for stock in order to meet the requirements of this section, his stock, to the amount of at least one share and not less than 5 per cent of the amount of the loan, shall be pledged to the association as a part of the security for said loan, but any dividends thereon shall be paid to the mortgagor. When said loan is paid in full the mortgage shall be discharged and the certificate of stock shall be delivered to the mortgagor.

"Every farm loan association formed under this act shall by its articles of association provide for an increase of its capital stock from time to time for the purpose of acquiring additional cash funds or of providing for the issue of shares to borrowers and others in accordance with the provisions of this act. Such increase shall be included in the quarterly reports to the farm loan commissioner.

"Any farm loan association formed under this act may, by the vote of stockholders owning two-thirds of its capital stock, reduce its capital to any sum not below the amount required by this act to authorize the formation of such associations; but no reduction shall be allowable which will reduce the capital stock of the association below one-twentieth of the amount unpaid on outstanding mortgages indorsed by it, nor shall any such reduction be made until the amount of the proposed reduction has been reported to the farm loan commissioner and his approval thereof obtained.

"OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

"SEC. 6. That every farm loan association shall elect, in the manner prescribed for the election of directors of national banking associations, not less than five directors, who shall hold office for the same period and under the same conditions as directors of national banking associations: Provided, however, That the ownership of five shares of stock, fully paid in, shall qualify for director. It shall be the duty of said board of directors to choose in such manner as they may prefer a secretary-treasurer, who shall receive such compensation as the said board of directors shall determine. The board of directors aforesaid shall elect a president and a vice president of the association, who shall serve without compensation unless the payment of salaries to them shall be approved by the farm loan commissioner. All officers and directors shall, during their term of office, be bona fide residents of the territory within which the association is authorized to do business.

"Every president, director, secretary, clerk, or agent of any farm loan association or Federal land bank who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits, or who without authority from the directors draws any order, assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such association or land bank with intent in either case to defraud such institution or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of a farm loan association or land bank or any agent appointed to examine into the affairs of any such association or bank, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or imprisoned not exceeding five years, or both.

"It shall be the duty of the board of directors of every farm loan association, within 30 days of its election, to appoint two of its members to serve as members of an 'appraisal committee.' The said committee shall consist of the two members aforesaid, and one to be appointed by the directors of the Federal land bank of the district, who shall be a resident of the farm loan district for which he is acting, but who shall not be a stockholder in any farm loan association or Federal land bank. The names of the said committee shall be transmitted to the farm loan commissioner and shall be kept on file in his office. Every farm loan association shall pay to the nonstockholding member of the appraisal committee a compensation which shall be determined by the farm loan commissioner. The farm loan commissioner, subject to appeal to the Federal farm loan board, shall have power at any time to remove any member of the appraisal committee of any farm loan association and to order the appointment of a successor. Such successor need not necessarily be a member of the board of directors.

"It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of every farm loan association to act as custodian of its funds and to deposit the same in such bank as the board of directors may designate, to disburse all payments which shall have been authorized in making loans to borrowers upon first mortgages on farm land situated as in this act prescribed, and to meet all other obligations of the association, subject to the orders of the board of directors, and in accordance with the by-laws of the association. The said secretary-treasurer shall likewise collect, receipt for, and in proper cases transmit to the Federal land bank all payments of interest, amortization installments, or principal arising out of the loans made by the association. He shall be the custodian of the securities, records, papers, certificates of stock, and all documents relating to or bearing upon the conduct of the affairs of the said association."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-five Members are present, a quorum. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the committee amendments, as follows:

He shall furnish a suitable bond to be prescribed and approved by the farm-loan commissioner for the proper performance of the duties imposed upon him under this act. He shall make a quarterly report to the farm-loan commissioner upon forms to be provided for that purpose. Upon request from the said commissioner the said secretary-treasurer shall furnish information regarding the condition of the farm-loan association for which he is acting and shall carry out the duly authorized orders of said commissioner. He shall assure himself from time to time that the loans made by the farm-loan association, of which he is an officer, have been applied to the purposes set forth in the application of the borrower as approved.

POWERS OF LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

SEC. 7. That every farm-loan association shall have power:

First. To make loans of current funds secured by first mortgages on farm lands situated within the farm-loan district in which such association shall be situated, subject to the provisions of this act.

Second. To buy from any other farm-loan association indorsed first mortgages of which such association may have become possessed under this act, or to sell to such association its own indorsed mortgages.

Third. To buy and sell farm-loan bonds in this act authorized.

Fourth. To buy and sell United States bonds.

Fifth. To acquire and dispose of—

(a) A suitable banking house for the transaction of its own business.

(b) Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it. But no such association shall hold title and possession of any real estate purchased or acquired to secure any debts due to it for a longer period than five years, except with the special approval of the farm-loan commissioner in writing.

Sixth. Against deposits of current funds, to issue certificates in any amount, bearing interest not to exceed 4 per cent per annum, after six days from date, convertible into farm-loan bonds when presented at the land bank of the district in any multiple of $100; such deposits when received shall be transmitted to the Federal land bank of the district, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm-loan bonds or first mortgages, as defined by this act; the mortgages thus purchased may be hypothecated with the Federal reserve agent against an issuance of farm-loan bonds, as provided for in section 18 of this act, but such bonds when received, either by purchase or for issuance, shall not be delivered or issued except in exchange for and upon the presentation for redemption and cancellation of an equal amount of convertible certificates issued by a farm-loan association, any difference under $100 in such exchange being adjusted in cash. When thus redeemed and canceled such certificates shall be returned to the loan association which issued them.

RESTRICTIONS.

SEC. 8. That no farm-loan association shall make loans except upon the following terms and conditions:

First. The said loans shall be secured by first mortgage on farm land within the farm-loan district in which the association shall be situated.

Second. Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement for the payment of interest and for the reduction of the face of the loan so secured through annual or semiannual amortization payments.

Third. Every such mortgage shall run for a period of at least 5 years and for a period not exceeding 35 years.

Fourth. Every mortgage loan made under this act, for whatever period, shall provide for its extinguishment, at the option of the borrower, in whole or in part, at any date set for the payment of interest after five years from the date upon which the said loan was made, by the payment of cash or by the tender of farm-loan bonds hereinafter provided for at their face value, all unmatured coupons being attached.

Fifth. The rate of interest charged for such loans shall not exceed the legal rate current in the State in which the farm land securing such loan is situated.

Sixth. Such loans may be made for the following purposes and for no other:

(a) To provide for the improvement of farm lands; the term "improvement" to be defined by the Federal farm-loan board.

(b) To provide for the purchase of equipment and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the farm; the term "equipment" to be defined by the Federal farm-loan board.

(c) To provide for the purchase of a farm home.

(d) To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged, existing at the time of the organization of the first farm-loan association established in or for the county in which the land mortgaged is situated, or indebtedness subsequently incurred for one of the purposes above mentioned.

Seventh. No such loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged, and 25 per cent of the value of the buildings thereon, the said value to be ascertained by an appraisal of the appraisal committee provided in section 6 of this act. In making said appraisal the actual earning power of said land shall be a principal factor.

Eighth. No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or shortly to become, a bona fide resident on the farm mortgaged, primarily engaged in the cultivation thereof. In case of sale of the mortgaged land the farm-loan association may, in its discretion, declare the mortgage thereon due and payable, or permit said mortgage to be assumed by a purchaser qualified to borrow in his own right under the provisions of this act.

Ninth. No such loan shall in any case exceed a maximum of $10,000 to any one borrower, nor 20 per cent of the capital and surplus of the association making such loan, nor shall the aggregate of outstanding loans indorsed by it be in excess of 20 times the capital and surplus of such association.

Tenth. Every applicant to a farm-loan association for a loan under the terms of this act shall make application on a form to be prescribed for that purpose by the farm-loan commissioner, and such applicant shall state, under oath, the objects to which the proceeds of said loan are to be applied, and shall afford such other information as may be required.

Eleventh. Every borrower shall undertake to pay when due all taxes which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgaged, and to keep insured to the satisfaction of the farm-loan commissioner all buildings the value of which was a factor in determining the amount of the loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the mortgagee as its interest may appear at time of loss, and, at the option of the mortgagor and subject to general regulations of the farm-loan commissioner, sums so received shall be used to pay for reconstruction of the buildings destroyed.

Twelfth. Every borrower who shall be granted a loan under the provisions of this act shall enter into an agreement in form and under conditions to be prescribed by the farm-loan commissioner that if the whole or any portion of his loan shall be expended for purposes other than those specified in his original application, or if the borrower shall be in default in respect to any condition of the mortgage, the said loan shall become due and payable forthwith.

No farm loan association shall buy or sell mortgages, or acquire title to real estate except as expressly authorized by section 7 of this act.

FEDERAL LAND BANK DISTRICTS.

SEC. 9. That for the purposes of this act the Federal farm loan board shall establish and announce districts in accordance with the principles laid down in the act of December 23, 1913, entitled "the Federal reserve act." Such districts shall be designated as Federal land bank districts, and the Federal reserve agent of each such district shall perform the duties herein assigned to him in carrying into effect the purposes of this act. The said districts shall be equal in number to the Federal reserve districts established under said act of December 23, 1913, but shall not necessarily be coterminous with the said Federal reserve districts. No land bank district shall contain a fractional portion of any State. The Federal land bank of each district shall have its home office in any city of such district which may be designated by the Federal farm-loan board.

POWERS OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

SEC. 10. That the Federal Farm Loan Board shall have power—

(a) To organize and charter Federal land banks and Federal farm bond banks, subject to the provisions of this act.

(b) To review and alter at its discretion the rate of interest to be charged by farm loan associations for loans made by them under the provisions of this act, said rates to be uniform so far as practicable.

(c) To grant or refuse to Federal land banks authority to make any specific issue of farm loan bonds, and to fix the rate of interest thereon.

(d) To require reports and statements of condition and to make examinations of Federal land banks and farm loan associations.

(e) To appraise farm lands through the farm loan commissioner as set forth in section 21 of this act.

(f) To exercise such incidental powers as shall be necessary or requisite to fulfill the duties and carry out the purposes of this act.

ADMISSION OF STATE INSTITUTIONS.

SEC. 11. That whenever the farm loan commissioner shall report to the Federal Farm Loan Board that associations have been organized under the laws of any State of the United States with authority to make loans upon unencumbered farm land situated in such State, and shall certify that the laws under which said associations are organized permit such associations to afford to holders of first mortgages on such lands protection and assurance of safety equal to that provided under this act and that such mortgages do afford such protection and assurance, the said board may issue an order permitting Federal land banks operating in land bank districts including such State to purchase such first mortgages from any such association with its indorsement, and to utilize the same as collateral security when applying through the Federal reserve agent for authority to issue farm loan bonds.

The Federal Farm Loan Board shall establish rules and regulations to which such associations organized under State law shall conform in making loans secured by first mortgages on farm land, if they desire to offer such mortgages to the Federal land bank of the district for purchase by said bank at its discretion, and shall require such associations or institutions to enter into agreements which shall obligate them to conform to the requirements by this act imposed upon national farm loan associations, so far as the said board shall deem necessary.

ORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

SEC. 12. That the farm loan commissioner shall select five farm loan associations of each Federal land bank district to act by an officer thereof designated for the purpose by the board of directors, who shall unite to form an association to exercise the powers conferred by this act and to be known as the Federal land bank of said district. The said Federal land banks shall be organized subject to the requirements and under the conditions set forth in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors of every Federal land bank shall consist of nine members, three of whom shall be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board for terms of three years each, and six of whom shall be chosen as herein provided for the election of directors of farm loan associations. Every director of a Federal land bank shall have been for two years preceding his selection a bona fide resident of said land bank district.

Every such farm loan association and every farm loan association making subsequent application shall subscribe for not less than $1,000 of capital stock of the said land bank.

Every farm loan association before transferring first mortgages to the Federal land bank of its district, under the provisions of sections 15 and 23 of this act, shall subscribe and pay for in cash or in approved first mortgages an amount of the capital stock of the said land bank equal to at least 10 per cent of its own capitalization.

CAPITAL OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

SEC. 13. That every Federal land bank shall have, before beginning business, a subscribed capital of not less than $500,000. The Federal farm loan board is hereby authorized to prescribe the times and conditions of the payment of subscriptions to stock and to require subscribers to furnish adequate security for the payment thereof. At least 50 per cent of the said capital shall be paid in cash when required by the Federal farm loan board, the balance to be either cash or first mortgages under the restrictions provided under section 8 and section 11 of this act. Five per cent of the capital stock of every land bank shall be invested in bonds of the United States.

The capital stock of each Federal land bank shall be divided into shares of $100 each, and may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the Government of any State or of the United States.

Stock held by farm loan associations shall not be transferred or hypothecated.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I see about 15 or 20 Democrats here.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PATTEN of New York). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight gentlemen are present—a quorum. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the committee amendment, as follows:

Stockholders shall share in all dividend distributions without preference. Each farm loan association and the Government of the United States shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders, and no other shareholder shall be permitted to vote. Stock owned by the United States shall be voted by the farm loan commissioner.

It shall be the duty of the Federal farm loan board, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, to open books of subscriptions for the capital stock of a Federal land bank in each Federal land bank district. If within 90 days after the opening of said books any part of the minimum capitalization herein prescribed for Federal land banks shall remain unsubscribed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the said unsubscribed balance of $500,000, said subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of the said land bank upon 30 days' notice, subject to the approval of the Federal farm loan board; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to take out shares corresponding to the said unsubscribed balance as called, and to pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said shares may be sold at not less than par.

Whenever subscriptions to stock by farm loan associations under the provisions of section 12 would increase the total capital stock of the Federal land bank beyond $500,000 if issued, and any stock of said bank is then held by the United States Treasury, an amount of such Treasury stock equal to such excess shall be paid for and canceled, and in lieu thereof a similar amount of stock shall be issued to the subscriber.

CANCELLATION OF SHARES.

SEC. 14. That if any farm loan association shall be declared insolvent and a receiver shall be appointed therefor by the farm loan commissioner, the stock held by it in the Federal land bank of its district shall be canceled without impairment of its liability; and all paid-in subscriptions on such stock, with accrued dividends, if any, since the date of the last dividend shall be first applied to all debts of the insolvent farm loan association to the Federal land bank and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the receiver of said farm loan association: Provided, That in estimating the said debts contingent liabilities incurred by farm loan associations under the provisions of this act on account of default of principal or interest of mortgages sold or transferred, shall be estimated and included as a debt, and said contingent liabilities shall be determined by agreement between the receiver and the Federal land bank of the district, subject to the approval of the farm loan commissioner, and if said receiver and land bank can not agree, then by the farm loan commissioner, and the amount thus ascertained shall be deducted in accordance with the provisions of this section from the amount otherwise due the said farm loan association for said canceled stock. Whenever the capital stock of a Federal land bank shall be reduced the board of directors shall cause to be executed a certificate to the farm loan commissioner, showing such reduction of capital stock, and if said reduction shall be due to the insolvency of a farm loan association, the amount repaid to such association.

POWERS OF LAND BANKS.

SEC. 15. That every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the limitations and requirements of this act—

First. To issue, subject to the approval of the Federal farm loan board, and to sell farm loan bonds of the kinds authorized in this act, to buy the same for its own account, and to retire the same at maturity.

Second. To invest such funds as may be in its possession in the purchase of first mortgages on farm lands situated within the Federal land bank district within which it is organized or for which it is acting, preference being given to mortgages taken by farm loan associations within the district.

Third. To receive by assignment from farm loan associations and to deposit in trust with the Federal reserve agent of its district, to be by him held as special security for farm loan bonds, first mortgages upon farm land situated within the Federal land bank district that are legally receivable by farm loan associations, and to empower farm loan associations or member banks of the Federal Reserve System as agents of the land bank to collect and immediately pay over to said land bank the dues, interest, amortization installments, and other sums payable under the terms, conditions, and covenants of the mortgages and of the bonds secured thereby.

Fourth. To acquire and dispose of—

(a) A suitable banking house for the transaction of its own business, which, however, may be in part leased to others for revenue purposes.

(b) Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security through a farm loan association.

(c) Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it. But no such bank shall hold title and possession of any real estate purchased or acquired to secure any debts due to it for a longer period than five years.

Fifth. To deposit its securities, and its current funds subject to check, with any Federal reserve bank, or for purposes of temporary convenience with any member bank of the Federal Reserve System, and to receive interest on the same as may be agreed.

Sixth. To accept deposits of securities or of current funds from farm loan associations holding its shares, but to pay no interest on such deposits.

Seventh. To buy and sell United States bonds.

Eighth. To hold in trust farm loan bonds to an amount equal to the outstanding convertible certificates issued by the loan associations of the district and for the redemption thereof, as provided in the sixth paragraph of section 7 of this act.

RESTRICTIONS ON LAND BANKS.

SEC. 16. That no Federal land bank shall have power—

First. To accept deposits of current funds except from its own stockholders or to transact any banking or other business not expressly authorized by the provisions of this act.

Second. To purchase or accept from farm loan associations first mortgages unless such mortgages were created subject to all limitations imposed by section 8 or section 11 of this act.

Third. To issue or obligate itself for outstanding farm loan bonds in excess of twenty times the amount of its capital and surplus or to purchase from any association additional mortgages when the amounts remaining unpaid upon mortgages already purchased from such association shall amount to twenty times the unimpaired capital and surplus of such association.

FEDERAL FARM BOND BANKS.

SEC. 17. That associations to be known as Federal farm bond banks for carrying on the business of lending on farm-mortgage security and issuing farm-loan bonds may be formed by any number of natural persons not less than five. They shall be organized subject to the requirements and under the conditions set forth in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors of every Federal farm bond bank shall consist of nine members, three of whom shall be appointed by the Federal farm loan board for terms of three years each, and six of whom shall be chosen as herein provided for the election of directors of farm-loan associations. Every director of a Federal farm bond bank shall have been for two years preceding his selection a bona fide resident of the farm-loan district in which such bank is situate.

Any director of a Federal farm bond bank may be removed at any time by the Federal farm loan board at its discretion.

In the business of lending on farm-mortgage security, said Federal farm bond banks shall be limited to a single State, and shall be subject to all the restrictions and conditions imposed on national farm-loan associations by this act, so far as such restrictions and conditions are applicable: Provided, however, That borrowers from such banks shall not be required to become shareholders in said banks.

In the business of issuing farm-loan bonds, said Federal farm bond banks shall be subject to all the restrictions and conditions imposed on Federal land banks by this act, so far as such restrictions and conditions are applicable: Provided, however, That the Government of the United States shall not be authorized or required to purchase or subscribe for any of the capital stock of any such bank; and each shareholder of any such bank shall have the same voting privileges as holders of shares in national banking associations.

No Federal farm bond bank shall be authorized to do business until capital stock to the amount of at least $250,000 has been subscribed and paid in cash.

Farm-loan bonds issued by such banks shall be so engraved as to be readily distinguished in form and color from farm-loan bonds issued under this act by Federal land banks.

Federal farm bond banks shall be subject to the provisions of section 10 and section 25 of this act as to interest rates, but any such bank may, by majority vote of its directors, make loans at less than the normal rate.

APPLICATIONS FOR FARM-LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 18. That any Federal land bank which shall have voted to issue farm-loan bonds under this act shall make application to the Federal farm-loan board, through the Federal reserve agent of the district, for approval of such issue. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the said Federal reserve agent of first mortgages on farm lands as collateral security, of the kinds specified under section 8 and section 11 of this act, not less in amount than the sum of the bonds proposed to be issued. The said agent shall thereupon transmit said application with or without his approval to the Federal farm-loan board, which may grant in whole or in part or reject entirely such application. The said farm-loan commissioner may at any time call upon a Federal land bank for additional security to protect the bonds issued by it. Every first mortgage shall, when tendered to a Federal reserve agent as collateral security to protect an issue of farm-loan bonds, be transferred to the said agent, by assignment, in trust, said assignment providing for the right of redemption at any time by payment, and reserving the right of substitution of other first mortgages qualified under section 8 or section 11 of this act.

Every Federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and by appropriate action of its board of directors, shall also obligate itself to become liable for interest payments due upon any farm-loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks with the approval of the Federal farm loan board, and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks, and every such bank shall likewise obligate itself to become liable for such portion of the principal of farm-loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed against solvent guaranteeing land banks in proportion to the amount of farm-loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

QUALIFICATIONS OF LOANS.

SEC. 19. That no mortgage shall be accepted by a Federal reserve agent as part of an offering to secure an issue of farm-loan bonds except first mortgages made subject to the conditions prescribed in section 8 or in section 11 of this act.

STATE LEGISLATION.

SEC. 20. That it shall be the duty of the farm-loan commissioner to make examination of the laws of every State of the United States and to inform the Federal farm loan board as rapidly as may be whether in his judgment the laws of each State relating to the conveying and recording of land titles, and the foreclosure of mortgages or other instruments securing loans, as well as providing homestead and other exemptions and granting the power to waive such exemption as respects first mortgages, are such as to assure the holder thereof adequate safeguards against loss in the event of default on loans secured by any such mortgages.

Pending the making of such examination in the case of any State, the Federal farm loan board may declare first mortgages on farm lands situated within such State ineligible as the basis for an issue of farm-loan bonds; and if said examination shall show that the laws of any such State afford insufficient protection to the holder of first mortgages of the kinds provided in this act, the said Federal farm loan board may declare the said first mortgages on land situated in such State ineligible during the continuance of the laws in question. In making his examination of the laws of the several States and forming his conclusions thereon, said commissioner may call upon the office of the Attorney General of the United States and upon the counsel of the Federal Reserve Board for any needed legal advice or assistance, or may employ special counsel in any State where he considers such action necessary.

APPRAISAL.

SEC. 21. That the farm-loan commissioner shall appoint appraisers, one or more of whom shall at stated periods visit every national land-bank district and shall make a general report regarding the values of the lands in each State. The said commissioner shall apply to every Federal land bank a schedule stating maximum acre valuations for each farm-loan district in such detail as he may deem necessary, and the said schedule shall not be exceeded in making loans. Said schedule shall be revised every five years.

SERIES OF FARM-LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 22. That farm-loan bonds shall be issued in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000, shall run for specified maximum periods, with interest coupons attached payable annually or semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $100,000, whose amount and term shall be fixed for each Federal land bank by the Federal farm loan board and shall bear a rate of interest to be established by the said board, not to exceed 5 per cent per annum.

In order to furnish suitably engraved bonds for delivery to Federal land banks, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeits and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantities of such bonds of the denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000 as may be required to supply the Federal land banks. Such bonds shall be in form and tenor as directed by the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of this act and shall bear the distinctive numbers of the several Federal land banks by which they are issued. They may be exchanged into registered bonds of any amount, and reexchanged into coupon bonds, at the option of the holder, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary.

When such bonds have been prepared, they shall be deposited in the Treasury, or in the subtreasury or mint of the United States nearest the place of business of each Federal land bank, and shall be held for the use of such bank subject to the joint order of the farm loan commissioner and the Federal reserve agent for the district for their delivery, as provided by this act.

The plates and dies to be procured by the farm loan commissioner for the printing of such bonds shall remain under his control and direction, and the expenses necessarily incurred in executing the laws relating to the procuring of such bonds and all other expenses incidental to their issue and retirement shall be paid by the Federal land banks. The Federal farm loan board shall levy semiannually against the respective Federal land banks in proportion to the issue of bonds by each a sufficient amount to cover such expenses.

The examination of plates, dies, bed pieces, and so forth, and regulations relating to such examination of plates, dies, and so forth, of national-bank notes provided for in section 5174, Revised Statutes, is hereby extended to include bonds herein provided for.

Any appropriation heretofore made out of the general fund of the Treasury for engraving plates and dies, the purchase of distinctive paper, or to cover any other expense in connection with the printing of national-bank notes or notes provided for by the act of May 30, 1908, and any distinctive paper that may be on hand at the time of the passage of this act may be used in the discretion of the Secretary for the purposes of this act, and should the appropriations heretofore made be insufficient to meet the requirements of this act, the Secretary is hereby authorized to use so much of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated as may be required for the purpose of furnishing the bonds aforesaid.

ISSUE AND REDEMPTION OF FARM LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 23. That whenever any Federal land bank shall present first mortgages to the Federal reserve agent of the district as collateral security for an issue of a series of farm loan bonds, it shall furnish therewith to said Federal reserve agent a schedule containing a description of said mortgages as prescribed by the farm loan commissioner. Said mortgages shall be deposited in the Federal reserve bank for the district subject to the control of said Federal reserve agent and in his name as trustee for said Federal land bank and the prospective holders of said series of farm loan bonds. Said Federal reserve agent shall thereupon satisfy himself that said first mortgages are at least equal in amount to the series of farm loan bonds authorized by the Federal farm loan board, and shall forthwith notify the farm loan commissioner thereof in writing. Said farm loan commissioner and said Federal reserve agent shall thereupon be empowered to direct by their joint order the delivery of said farm loan bonds to said Federal land bank. It shall be the duty of the Federal reserve agent in each district to see that the farm loan bonds delivered by him and outstanding do not exceed the amount of first mortgages pledged as collateral security therefor, but he may, in his discretion, temporarily accept in place of mortgages withdrawn securities other than qualified first mortgages, preference being given to farm loan bonds.

Whenever any Federal land bank shall receive any interest, amortization, or other payment upon any first mortgage pledged as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds, it shall forthwith deposit the same with the Federal reserve bank of the district to its own account, and shall notify the Federal reserve agent of the items so received. The Federal reserve agent shall thereupon cause such payment to be duly credited upon the respective mortgages entitled to such credit. Whenever any of said mortgages are paid in full, said Federal reserve agent shall cause the same to be canceled and delivered to said Federal land bank for transmission to the original maker thereof, or his heirs, administrators, or assigns.

Upon written application by any Federal land bank to the Federal reserve agent, it may be permitted, in the discretion of said Federal reserve agent, to withdraw from the Federal reserve bank any mortgage or mortgages pledged as collateral security under this act, and to substitute therefor other mortgages not less in amount than the mortgage or mortgages desired to be withdrawn, such substituted mortgages being qualified under section 8 or section 11 of this act.

Whenever any farm loan bonds, or coupons or interest payments of such bonds, are due under their terms, they shall be payable, at the Federal land bank by which they were issued, in gold or lawful money, and upon payment shall be duly canceled by said bank. At the discretion of the farm loan commissioner, payment of any farm loan bond or coupon or interest payment may, however, be directed to be made at any Federal land bank or any Federal reserve bank, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by said farm loan commissioner, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board. Upon the surrender of any farm loan bonds of any series, canceled or uncanceled, by any Federal land bank to the Federal reserve agent of the district, said Federal land bank shall be entitled to withdraw from the Federal reserve bank first mortgages pledged as collateral security for any of said series of farm loan bonds to an amount equal to the farm loan bonds so surrendered, and it shall be the duty of said Federal reserve agent to permit and direct the delivery of such mortgages to such Federal land bank.

Interest payments shall be at the disposal of the Federal land bank which shall deposit the same, and shall be available for the payment of coupons and the interest of farm loan bonds as they become due. Amortization or other payments on the principal of first mortgages held as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds shall constitute a trust fund in the hands of the Federal land bank receiving the same, and shall be applied or employed as follows:

(a) To purchase at not more than par farm loan bonds issued by itself or by some other Federal land bank, said bonds to be deposited forthwith with the Federal reserve agent as substituted collateral security for the payments indorsed on mortgages deposited with him; or

(b) If such farm loan bonds are not available at par or under, to deposit said trust fund with the Federal reserve bank of the district, or any member bank of the Federal Reserve System which shall be approved by the farm loan commissioner, or to make such investment thereof as may be approved in writing by said farm loan commissioner, subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal Farm Loan Board; or

(c) To pay off such farm loan bonds as may become due. Federal land banks, in the order of their applications, shall have a preference over other subscribers in purchasing the whole or any part of an issue of farm loan bonds.

Said Federal land banks shall notify the Federal reserve agent of the district of the disposition of all payments made on the principal of mortgages held as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds, and said Federal reserve agent is authorized, at his discretion, to order any of such payments, or the proceeds thereof, wherever deposited or however invested, to be transferred to the Federal reserve bank of the district to his account as trustee aforesaid.

RELATIONS BETWEEN LOAN ASSOCIATIONS AND LAND BANKS.

SEC. 24. That any farm loan association may offer for sale to the Federal land bank of its district first mortgages of which it has become possessed under the terms of this act, and said Federal land bank may, at its discretion, purchase the same when duly indorsed by said association.

Payment may be made in cash, current funds, or farm loan bonds, as may be agreed.

Every Federal land bank shall, from time to time, under regulations prescribed by the Federal farm loan board, pay to each farm loan association, assignor of first mortgages eligible for use as a basis for the issue of farm loan bonds and purchased by the said bank, a sum equal to one-half of 1 per cent per annum upon the total unpaid amount of the first mortgages purchased from said assignor, computing said one-half of 1 per cent from the date when the mortgages were purchased by said land bank to the date of the nearest annual or semiannual dividend period of the said land bank.

SPECIAL RESERVE.

SEC. 25. That, so far as practicable, the rate of interest on loans secured by first mortgages under this act shall be uniform, as provided in section 10, and the farm loan commissioner shall, from time to time, establish a specific rate of interest to be charged on all first mortgage loans in each land bank district. The normal rate of interest, not including therein any amortization payment, on first mortgage loans shall be established by adding 1 per cent to the rate of interest specified in the latest issue of farm loan bonds in said district. Whenever, because of local or other conditions, it shall be deemed wise by said farm loan commissioner, in order to provide a special reserve against losses, to establish a specific rate of interest in excess of said normal rate, the amount of interest thereafter paid by any borrower in excess of the amount which he would have been required to pay if his loan had been made at the normal rate of interest current when said loan was made shall be carried to a special reserve fund, which shall be specifically set apart by the association or the land bank then holding said loan for the purpose of meeting any losses incurred in the State where the land mortgaged to secure such loan is located. Every land bank shall establish a separate reserve fund for mortgages originating in each and every State of the United States included within the Federal land bank district within which such land bank may be authorized to operate, and each such reserve fund shall be first applied to the cancellation of losses due to nonpayment of principal or interest of mortgages on farm land situated in such State Whenever, after three years from the date of this act, in the opinion of the board of directors of the said Federal land bank, any one of such reserve funds shall be more than sufficient to provide for losses under the mortgages to which it is specifically applicable, such land bank may apply annually to the farm loan commissioner for permission to distribute such portion of said reserve fund as may be deemed wise, and in the event such permission shall be granted, said bank shall cause to be computed the percentage of annual payments which shall be returned by it to each borrower within said State, based upon the proportion paid into said reserve fund by every borrower, whether said payments have been made on account of said land bank or of farm loan associations; and said bank shall pay to each farm loan association for distribution among its borrowing members such portion of said special reserve fund as belongs to such members, and each farm loan association shall distribute such portion to the members who are entitled thereto, and each association shall also pay to its members whose obligations are held by it a like percentage on the payments made during the same period: Provided, That no payments shall be made under the provisions of this section to members who are in default for any reason at the time of such distribution.

The farm loan commissioner may, with the consent in writing of the Federal land bank of any district, together with the consent in writing of a majority in number of the farm loan associations of said district, fix the normal rate of interest at a point below that established in this section; and thereafter the sum to be paid over to farm loan associations by said Federal land bank under the provisions of section 24 shall be diminished in proportion to the decrease in said normal interest rate, said land bank always retaining one-half of the sum accruing from the payment of interest on indorsed mortgages after paying the interest on farm loan bonds secured by such mortgages.

GENERAL RESERVE AND DIVIDENDS OF LAND BANKS.

SEC. 26. That every Federal land bank shall, out of its net earnings, as ascertained after the deduction of all expenses of operation, semiannually carry to an account known as "reserve account" one-fourth of such net earnings until the said reserve account shall show in the aggregate a balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of the said Federal land bank. The said reserve account shall be debited with all losses due to default upon the first mortgages held by such Federal land bank, in so far as the same shall be proven irrecoverable from the mortgagor or assignor. For the period of two years from the date when such default occurs in the payment of the interest, amortization installments, or principal on any of the said first mortgages, the amount so defaulted shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the 2-year period specified shall be transferred to reserve account as a charge against the one-fourth of net earnings credited thereto.

Whenever the net earnings of any Federal land bank, after deducting the one-fourth hereinbefore directed to be deducted as a contribution to reserve account, shall amount to 2 per cent upon the face value of the capital stock of such land bank then outstanding, the said land bank may, at its discretion, declare a dividend to stockholders of 2 per cent. The said dividend may be increased whenever the residue of net earnings shall permit until it shall amount to 6 per cent, which shall be cumulative. Surplus earnings beyond the reserves herein required and the said cumulative 6 per cent dividend shall be paid to the Government of the United States, but this provision shall not apply to Federal farm bond banks. Every such land bank shall semiannually submit to the Federal farm land board a schedule showing the salaries or rates of compensation paid to its officers and employees, and the said board shall have power to disapprove such schedule, or any item in it, and to alter any or all salaries thereon shown.

DEFAULTED LOANS.

SEC. 27. That if there shall be default under the terms of any first mortgage transferred to a Federal land bank under the provisions of this act, and by it used as collateral security for farm loan bonds issued and sold in accordance therewith, and if the special reserve fund set apart by the said Federal land bank for the protection of loans secured by mortgages originating in the State wherein is situated the property upon which default has occurred is exhausted or unavailable, the farm loan association from which the said mortgages were originally purchased by the Federal land bank shall be notified of the said default. Said farm loan association shall thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to repurchase such mortgage by payment of the amount due thereon in cash, or by delivery of an equal amount of farm loan bonds with all unmatured coupons attached, or of first mortgages qualified under section 8 or section 11 of this act.

GENERAL RESERVE AND DIVIDENDS OF NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

SEC. 28. That every farm loan association shall, out of its net earnings, as ascertained after the deduction of all expenses of operation, semiannually carry to an account, known as reserve account, a sum not less than 2 per cent of its capital or than one-fourth of such net earnings until the said reserve account shall show a credit balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of the said farm loan association. The said reserve account shall be debited with all losses due to the return or repurchase of mortgages which have been retransferred to the said farm loan association by the Federal land bank of its district and upon which default has occurred under the provisions of section 27 of this act, or upon which such default shall have occurred while the said mortgages are still in the possession of the said farm loan association. For the period of two years from the date when default occurs upon loans secured by any such first mortgages as are still in the possession of the farm loan association, either with respect to interest, amortization installments, or principal of any of the loans protected by said first mortgages, the amount of such securities or installment payments due thereon shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the two-year period specified, if not meanwhile collected, shall be transferred to reserve account as a charge against the one-fourth of net earnings credited thereto.

Whenever the net earnings of any farm loan association after deducting the one-fourth hereinbefore directed to be credited to reserve account shall amount to 2 per cent upon the face value of the capital stock of such farm loan association then outstanding, the said farm loan association may, at its discretion, declare a dividend to stockholders of 2 per cent. The said dividend may be increased whenever the residue of net earnings shall permit until it shall amount to 6 per cent per annum, which shall be cumulative. Any subsequent surplus earnings above the reserve herein required and the cumulative 6 per cent dividend aforesaid shall be at the disposition of the board of directors. Whenever any farm loan association shall be voluntarily liquidated a sum equal to its reserve account as herein required shall be paid to and become the property of the Federal land bank in which such loan association may be a stockholder; but this provision shall not apply to Federal farm bond banks.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION AND INVESTMENT.

SEC. 29. That every Federal land bank and every farm loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein, and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by the said bank under the provisions of sections 7 and 15 of this act. First mortgages executed to farm loan associations or to Federal land banks under the provisions of this act, and eligible as security for the issue of farm loan bonds shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation.

Farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation, and such bonds shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds.

Any bank of the Federal Reserve System may buy or sell farm-loan bonds; any member bank of said system may accept time drafts against a deposit of such bonds as security; acceptances of a member bank thus made, or the direct obligation of such bank maturing within 60 days when accompanied by farm-loan bonds as collateral security not less in face value than the amount of such direct obligation, shall be eligible for discount by any Federal reserve bank.

POSTAL SAVINGS.

SEC. 30. That section 9 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositaries for deposting savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes," shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new paragraph at the close of the said section, such paragraph to read as follows:

"Federal farm-loan bonds authorized by the Federal farm-loan board and issued by any Federal land bank may be purchased by the trustees in lieu of United States bonds or other securities for the purpose of investing postal savings deposits under the provisions of this section. The trustees shall be, and they are hereby, directed, whenever funds shall be withdrawn from postal savings depositaries for such investment, to employ such funds in the purchase of Federal farm-loan bonds in the open market if at the time of such withdrawal the said farm-loan bonds can be obtained at par or less. At their discretion the said trustees may invest such sums as shall be withdrawn from postal savings depositaries by the purchase of new Federal farm-loan bonds direct from any Federal land bank authorized to issue the same."

EXAMINATIONS.

SEC. 31. That there shall be appointed by the farm-loan commissioner farm-loan association examiners, subject to the approval of the Federal farm-loan board. The said examiners shall be subject to the same requirements, responsibilities, and penalties as are applicable to national-bank examiners under the national-bank act, the Federal reserve act, and other provisions of law. The said examiners shall be required to examine the condition of every farm-loan association and report the same to the farm-loan commissioner at least once each year, and to examine and report the condition of every Federal land bank at least twice each year.

The said examiners shall receive salaries to be fixed by the Federal farm-loan board, which shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Any applicant for a loan from a farm-loan association who shall knowingly make any false statement in his application for such loan, and any member of an appraisal committee or other appraiser who shall willfully overvalue any land offered as security for loans under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not exceeding one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both. Any examiner accepting a loan or gratuity from any bank or association examined by him, or from an officer, director, or employee thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not exceeding one year or fined not more than $5,000, or both, and may be fined a further sum equal to the money so loaned or gratuity given, and shall forever thereafter be disqualified from holding office as an examiner under the previsions of this section. No examiner shall perform any other service for compensation while holding such office for any bank, or officer, director, or employee thereof.

Other than the usual salary or director's fee paid to any officer, director, or employee of a farm-loan association or land bank, and other than a reasonable fee paid by said association or bank to such officer, director, or employee for services rendered, no officer, director, employee, or attorney of an association or bank shall be a beneficiary of or receive, directly or indirectly, any fee, commission, gift, or other consideration for or in connection with any transaction or business of such association or bank. No examiner, public or private, shall disclose the names of borrowers to other than the proper officers of a farm-loan association or land bank without first having obtained express permission in writing from the farm-loan commissioner or from the board of directors of such association or bank, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States, or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress or of either House duly authorized. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Upon becoming satisfied that any farm-loan association has refused to repurchase mortgages or to substitute bonds or mortgages, as required by section 27 of this act, or upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any such loan association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description whatever when due, and is in default, the farm-loan commissioner may forthwith appoint a receiver and require of him such bond and security as he deems proper. Such receiver, under the direction of said commissioner, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and, with the approval of said commissioner, or upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like approval or order, may sell all the real and personal property of such association on such terms as said commissioner or said court shall direct. Such receiver shall pay over all money so collected to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the said commissioner, and also make report to the commissioner of all his acts and proceedings. Upon default of any obligation Federal land banks may be declared insolvent and placed in the hands of a receiver, to be appointed by the farm-loan commissioner under the direction of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and proceedings had in accordance with the provisions of this section regarding loan associations.

SEC. 32. That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Federal Farm Loan Board, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act and of furnishing the compensation of the farm-loan commissioner and his assistants, appraisers, examiners, and of other officers and employees herein provided for during a period of one year from the passage of this act.

SEC. 33. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and this act shall take effect upon its passage.

Mr. BATHRICK and Mr. ANDERSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] is recognized.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] offers a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK], as I understand it, is in the nature of a substitute. Would it not be in order and would not such an amendment take precedence——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, and then the Chair will hear what the gentleman from Minnesota has to submit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the Hollis bill, or to the committee substitute——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that.

Mr. BATHRICK. I offer that as an amendment to the committee substitute. The Hollis amendment is the committee substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MANN. That is no amendment. That is just some language. That is not an amendment.

Mr. BATHRICK. That is a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitute for the committee amendment?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not offer a substitute for a substitute. I have no desire to make a point of order; I do not care how the gentleman offers it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit me, the committee amendment is no doubt in the nature of a substitute for the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] offers his amendment as a substitute.

Mr. MANN. That would mean to strike out all after the word "that."

Mr. BATHRICK. That is what I propose to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Let the gentleman take his amendment and put it in proper form.

Mr. BATHRICK. All you have to do is to strike out all after the word "that" and insert the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out all after the word "that" in the amendment, and offers the following as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that" in the committee amendment, and insert the following:

"There is hereby created in the Department of Agriculture a bureau to be known as the Farm Credit Bureau, hereinafter referred to as the bureau, which shall be in charge of a commissioner, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum and shall hold office at the will of the President. The Secretary of Agriculture shall provide sufficient clerical force to perform the duties of the bureau.

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated and set aside for the use of said bureau, in the manner hereinafter provided, the sum of $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

"SEC. 3. That the said sum so provided shall be used for the purpose of purchasing notes secured by first mortgages on agricultural lands, as hereinafter provided, for stationery and clerical expenses, and such other expenses as may be incident to the business of said bureau. Wherever the term "first mortgage" is used in this act it shall be held to include any first lien on real estate approved by the bureau, and the instruments secured thereby.

"SEC. 4. That every national and State bank or building and loan association desiring to avail itself of the privileges herein provided are hereby declared to be agencies of the bureau, if so designated by the said commissioner, for the purpose of receiving from mortgagors notes and mortgages securing same, advancing the moneys to the said mortgagors and transmitting said notes and mortgages to the bureau, and receiving in return therefor the amount advanced to the mortgagor by the said bureau.

"SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the said commissioner to apportion the sum hereby appropriated among the several States according to the agricultural population, importance of the agricultural productions of each State, and percentage of agricultural lands encumbered by mortgages or trust deeds, and to pay for such notes and mortgages as may be presented to the extent of the amount apportioned to any State.

"SEC. 6. That there is hereby created a board to be known as the Farm Credit Board, hereinafter referred to as the board, which shall be composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of the Treasury, and the Postmaster General of the United States, who shall act without additional compensation, and two citizens of the United States who are farmers and who shall be fairly representative of the agricultural interests of different sections of the country. The said farmers shall be appointed by the President, to serve for a term of two years from date of their appointment. In the event of a vacancy upon the board of either of the farmer members, the President shall fill such vacancy within thirty days thereafter. Said farmer members shall receive a per diem payment of $20 for each day in which their services are required by said board, together with their expenses of traveling between their homes and the place where the board shall convene.

"The board is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe rules, procedure, regulations, and forms, not otherwise herein prescribed for the best means of carrying out this act.

"After consultation with the heads of the various Government departments the board may designate employees of any of these to assist in the administration of the purposes of the bureau, in any capacity, which shall not conflict with their regular duties.

"Within 30 days after the provisions of this act in sections 1 and 5, relating to the appointment of a commissioner and chief clerk of the bureau, shall have been complied with, the said board shall meet in the city of Washington, D. C., at a place designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, and perform the duties herein provided, and shall hold further meetings upon the call of its president. The Secretary of Agriculture shall be president of the board, and he shall appoint a chief clerk of the bureau, who shall also be secretary of the board, and shall receive a salary of $2,500 per year. The secretary of the board shall keep a record of all of its proceedings and of all rules and regulations, which shall be preserved in the archives of the Department of Agriculture and copies thereof shall be transmitted to the commissioner of the bureau. All decisions on matters coming before the board shall be by a record vote of the majority, each member having one vote, and three members present shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"SEC. 7. That any owner of agricultural lands within the United States, who is living upon and farming such lands, desiring a loan under the provisions of this act, shall execute a promissory note due in 10 years, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, interest payable annually, which interest shall be evidenced by 10 coupon notes attached to said principal note, and which coupons shall also bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of maturity until paid, payable annually. Said note shall also provide that the principal may be paid on any interest-paying day after the expiration of five years. Said note shall be secured by a first mortgage upon the lands so farmed by the owner, and executed and recorded in the manner provided by the laws of the State in which the land is situated, for the execution and recording of mortgages on real estate. Such mortgage shall be accompanied by an application for loan, which application shall recite the purpose for which the loan is desired, the market value of the land, the value at which it was last assessed for taxation, the value and kind of buildings thereon, the number of acres under cultivation, the character and quality of the soil, the number of acres capable of being cultivated, and such other information as may be required by the rules of the said bureau. Said note, mortgage, and application shall also be accompanied by an abstract of title duly certified by an abstract company, the register of deeds, or other officer authorized by the laws of the State to make and certify abstracts of lands, which abstract shall show no other mortgages, judgments, delinquent taxes, or other liens of any character against the said lands, unless the purpose of the loan is to secure money to cancel such liens. Said owner shall then present to any national bank or State bank or building and loan association accepting the provisions of this act the said loan papers. The said abstract and papers shall be carefully examined by the president, cashier, or other officer of the bank for the purpose of ascertaining whether the title is perfect in the mortgagor, or whether the land is affected by any liens, who shall certify the result of his examination of the abstract, and who shall further certify what, in his opinion and judgment, is the actual market value of the land. And no mortgage shall be accepted for a greater amount than one-half of the value of such lands, including improvements; nor in any event to an amount exceeding one-half of the actual market value thereof. The said bank may charge the borrower for its services in examining papers and abstract, and in forwarding the papers to the bureau of farm credits a sum prescribed by the board. No mortgage shall be less than $300 nor more than $10,000 to one person, and shall be in multiples of $100. The said notes and mortgages shall not be dated at the time they are executed and presented to the bank. The said bank or building and loan association shall forward all the said papers to the said bureau, which shall examine the abstract, note, mortgage, and application, and if said abstract shows the land to be clear or to have no liens of greater amount than the amount desired to be loaned, and all papers properly executed, it shall remit to the bank forwarding the papers the amount of the loan, and shall date the notes and mortgage the date on which the remittance is made, from which date interest shall begin to accrue; and all coupons shall be dated to correspond with the date affixed to the principal instrument; and said bureau shall return, with the remittance, the abstract of title. Upon receipt of the said abstract of title by the bank, said bank shall require the abstract to be continued up to date of payment by said bank to the borrower, and if said abstract after being continued shows the land clear, the bank shall indorse over to the borrower the remittance made by the bureau. If there are any liens upon the land, the bank, out of the remittance, shall first pay and have canceled such liens and pay the balance to the borrower.

"SEC. 8. That the board shall provide amortization tables which, by direction of the commissioner, shall constitute the terms of payment of mortgage notes, but no terms shall be made whereby the total cancellation of a mortgage shall not be effected within a period of 35 years, and it shall also prescribe regulations governing the responsibility of its agents.

"SEC. 9. That whenever the bureau shall have received such mortgages to the extent of $500,000 it shall issue bonds, based upon said mortgages, bearing the guaranty of principal and interest by the United States. The said bonds shall be issued in denominations of from $100 to $1,000 each, as the board may prescribe, and shall bear interest not to exceed 3½ per cent, payable annually. The bonds shall not be sold for less than par, and the said bonds and the mortgages held by the bureau shall not be subject to taxation or duties of the United States or in any form taxed by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

"All moneys received by the said commissioner in the sale of bonds and the principal and all interest paid on said mortgages shall be covered into the said fund of $5,000,000 and used in the payment of mortgages as they may be presented, the expenses of the bureau, the interest on bonds, and payment thereof at maturity. The board shall prescribe all procedure of issuing these bonds, printing, and selling them. Under these regulations the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue said bonds.

"SEC. 10. That all mortgages shall run to the commissioner of farm credits, and said commissioner, on behalf of the United States, shall have all the rights and authority of a mortgagee under the laws of the State wherein such mortgage is executed.

"That all taxes of every kind levied by a State or municipality which may become a lien prior to said mortgage shall be paid by the mortgagor at least 30 days prior to the time such lands could be sold for delinquent taxes. Upon his failure to do so, or to pay any other lien that may attach to said lands and become superior to said mortgage, the commissioner may pay the same and the mortgage shall stand as security for such sums so paid and interest thereon at 8 per cent per annum. And said mortgage shall further provide that in default of the payment of any interest or the payment of taxes, or other superior liens, as aforesaid, the commissioner may foreclose the premises pursuant to the laws of the State in which the land is situated. All papers necessary for the foreclosure proceedings shall be prepared and premises foreclosed by the proper officer of the bureau. In lieu of foreclosure the commissioner may sell the mortgage to any person desiring to purchase the same, without recourse, and the money so received shall be covered into the said fund. Upon foreclosure the said commissioner may transfer and assign the certificate of sale to any purchaser, and after the period of redemption has expired may sell the lands. And any sum received therefor shall in like manner be covered into said fund.

"SEC. 11. That it is the purpose of this act not only to secure and facilitate borrowing upon agricultural lands at a reasonable rate of interest, but also to afford a means for those who desire a safe investment, and so long as the said bureau shall be able to dispose of bonds at par it shall accept mortgages presented to any extent above the $5,000,000 hereby appropriated.

"That said bonds shall be negotiable in form and transferable by indorsement, and may be bought and sold by Federal reserve banks under the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913.

"SEC. 12. The board shall provide a reserve fund for the purpose of providing against losses and for the eventual liquidation of its obligations. In order that it may invest this fund in easily convertible securities, it may purchase municipal bonds bearing interest equal to or in excess of the interest paid on the said mortgage bonds. The money with which to purchase said municipal bonds shall be taken from the reserve fund.

"SEC. 13. That all applicants for loans under the provisions of this act, together with all appraisers who shall be appointed by the said commissioner to view and appraise the value of property upon which loans are requested, shall state under oath the true market value of the property offered as security and reply to all questions asked in the application blanks, and if it shall appear after the said loan is made that the said applicant or appraisers have made any misstatement of fact respecting the value of the said property intending to make it appear greater than it really is, or if the mortgagor shall by any act depreciate the value of the property given as security, at the option of said commissioner, notwithstanding any contract previously entered into, the principal and interest of the said loan shall immediately become due and payable, in whole or in part, and subject to all legal processes for collection.

"SEC. 14. That any person or persons who shall willfully make a misstatement respecting the value or title of any property upon which a loan is secured, or commit any act with the intent thereby to defraud the Government, or to prejudice the interests of the Government by procuring a loan of a greater sum than 50 per cent of the value of said property, or who shall in any way by such act or misstatement cause a loss to the Government, shall be fined not more than $5,000, which fine shall be paid into the loan fund, or shall be sentenced to not more than five years' imprisonment at hard labor, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 15. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage and approval, and all acts and parts of acts in conflict therewith are hereby repealed."

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that now.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this particular amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the Bathrick substitute close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BATHRICK. I want at least 15 minutes on this McCumber revision.

Mr. LEVER. Then I will make it 15 minutes.

Mr. BATHRICK. There are three or four more who want to speak on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on the Bathrick amendment close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas objects. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have taken the McCumber amendment and given it careful revision, and I have taken out of it every objectionable feature that I have heard of on the floor of this House, in the lobbies, or elsewhere where Members have discussed it. I have provided—which the McCumber amendment does not distinctly provide—for the appointment of the commissioner. I have arranged that the board shall work out the details of operation, instead of that being done by the Secretary of the Treasury. The McCumber amendment gave the Secretary of the Treasury the power to work out all of these details, but I have provided a board consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Postmaster General, and I have included the latter because we need to use the employees of the Post Office Department to work out any of these plans properly where the Government is connected with the work. Then I have put on the board two more members consisting of farmers, who will fairly represent the different agricultural sections of the country. I believe when we make up the details of the operation of a bill of this kind the farmers of this country, who know the practice of agriculture, should have something to say about it.

In conjunction with that I have further provided an amortization feature which the McCumber amendment does not distinctly do, as to that part of the McCumber amendment to which there seemed to be the most strenuous objection. The part that I refer to is that the Government bonds which the McCumber bill proposes shall bear 4½ per cent and sell at par. It was contended that this might depreciate the value of some 3, 3½, and 4 per cent Government bonds that are now outstanding. So I have provided that the interest rate shall not exceed 3½ per cent and that the bonds shall not be sold for less than par.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes; for just a question. I have a long way to go in the time allotted.

Mr. ANDERSON. Although the gentleman's amendment provides for selling the bonds at 3½ per cent, it still provides for charging the farmer 5 per cent.

Mr. BATHRICK. That is very true. I have made a fair rate of 5 per cent. No other bill offered here provides any idea of the rate of interest that the farmers shall pay in this country. I am going to touch upon that in connection with the Hollis bill in a moment.

I have added this: The McCumber bill says we shall use the present instrumentalities, which I think is very necessary. They are the State and National banks. There is little use in building up a great, cumbersome machine as does the Hollis bill. We should use the State banks and the National banks as agents, the same as the insurance companies do. At this time we should not lose the very simplicity and cheapness of operation of this plan. Whatever opposition some may have to any bank plan, we can well use banks as agencies to carry out this plan. I have added to that the proposition that we shall use also the building and loan associations, if they are designated by the commissioner, just the same as the manager of an insurance company would do if he were to select the agents. This provides that if the State banks and the national banks will not act as agents the farmers of the locality where these banks refuse to act may organize building and loan associations and themselves become the agents of the Government in the matter.

I have arranged for the appraisers especially to be more carefully selected. I have reduced the appropriation from $10,000,000 to $5,000,000. When the Government secures $1,000,000 worth of mortgages it issues bonds and gets the money back.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I thought I was to have 15 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I requested that debate be closed in 15 minutes, but the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] objected.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think that is all right for the gentleman to have 10 minutes on his own amendment, but I think that unless some other gentleman wants to speak on it the debate ought to be closed on that amendment at that time, and I ask the gentleman, if the 10 minutes additional is enough, that at the end of that time debate on his amendment shall be closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this particular amendment be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on this particular amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. There is a unanimous request pending.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not prevent the gentleman from South Carolina moving to close debate.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were 99 ayes and 13 noes.

So the motion prevailed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to use this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, in addition to these changes that I have referred to in the McCumber bill, I have fixed out the Texas boys, and I have done it in the same language used in the Bulkley bill that takes care of that proposition; that is, I provide for loans on vendor's liens, which covers the Texas situation. I have given the board, who is to arrange the details, power also to fix the responsibility of its agents. Now, this completed amendment makes a simple proposition. I consider it a "second-chance" opportunity for this House to give the farmers of this country a real Government-aid bill and to give them something which will work effectively at the least possible cost.

Compare the cost where you have an agent of the Government board to take care of the loans; compare that with 12 land banks and a myriad of land associations; and then put on top of that a bond bank, and you get some idea of what it will cost the farmers under the Hollis bill.

I am going to say something about the interest rate. My amendment gives the farmers a low rate of interest. It is specific at 5 per cent. What do you get out of the Bulkley-Hollis bill? You get, on page 66, at the top, this: "The rate shall not exceed the legal current rate in the State." That is indefinite and terrifying to those poor fellows who have dared to hope that we were intending to give them relief. The legal rate in the State may be 8 per cent—and it is in some States—and the current rate might be the contract rate, and that may be more, but it is the legal rate. No farmer under that bill will know what interest rate he is going to get. Further, they say, in the Hollis bill, "as far as practicable, the rates shall be uniform." Who is to decide whether it is uniform or not? The whole Hollis bill and the Bulkley bill provide that it shall be run by private investors who are in the business to make money. While I am in favor of section 30, to be proposed by Mr. BULKLEY, it will not decide the interest rate, and the farmers will not know what rate they are going to get.

These bills say further, on page 90, that the "normal" rate shall be 1 per cent over the latest bond price. Who shall say what the bond price will be?

On page 93 it says that the commissioners will decrease the interest rate if asked for in writing. Asked for by whom? By the men who put their money in it to make money.

And in order for the commissioners to decrease the rates, these new-style bankers who are in the business, out for making a profit, have got to ask them, in writing, to lower the rate before the commissioners will do it, and you know the profit seekers will not ask this. If these absurd things were not in the bill, there still remains this expensive, cumbersome proposition. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOSS] admitted it was a bank bill, that it was a new system of banks, and I tell you the people of this country will not stand for a new system of banks, and the first conception of that kind was cursed by every farm organization in this country. I stood for the Bulkley-Hollis bill, but it was with the reservation that it should contain real Government aid. I asked others to be for it when it appeared the best we could get. But I never dreamed it would reach this position. I admit I have been led too much by my sympathies for the mortgaged farmers.

Mr. NORTON. There are three systems of banks in the Hollis bill.

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I should like to know what the immediate liability of the Government is in the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BATHRICK. The liability of the Government is this. The Government acts as a guarantor and trustee as between the borrower and the lender. The Government does not furnish a cent of money, nor does the taxpayer, and the liability of the Government lies in the loss on the mortgages, and other countries have been lending money at 75 per cent of the value of the security for years, and have never lost a cent.

Mr. KENT. I want to know about the ultimate Government liability. As I understand the bill the primary liability is $5,000,000?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes; we just appropriate $5,000,000 to start it. It is continuous, and if we get $1,000,000 of mortgages in we issue bonds against them. We ask land buyers to furnish the money to lend to the borrowers. The Government does not furnish the money. The Government has its guaranty on the bonds, and that is its liability.

Mr. KENT. Up to the extent of $5,000,000 to begin with?

Mr. BATHRICK. No; just to the extent of the amount of the mortgages that come in. The Government is not liable beyond the amount of the mortgages they receive. For every dollar for which the Government is liable they have two dollars in a good farm. That five millions would never be used. It is a continuous proposition.

Mr. KENT. I am in favor of the gentleman's proposition, but I want to know where it goes?

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, my time will soon be up, and I offer this as a last chance—the only chance, I believe, for a Government-aid bill. You must vote this up, if you want Government aid, and instruct the conferees to stand by it. If you can not do that, you must stand by the McCumber amendment just as it is, and there is nothing in it to fear. It can not possibly go into operation before the next Congress. Can you not fix it then? Here we have a farm-credit bill halfway through Congress. I believe it may be another five years before you get as good as this that far again. I say that the only thing to do is to stand by the McCumber amendment, if you do not vote my amendment up.

The forces against a real farm-credit bill are getting strong. The interests affected by a lower interest rate are being lined up. The differences of honest opinion are becoming accentuated.

Let us take this splendid chance and pass the McCumber amendment. It is crude. Nothing in it but its simplicity is a credit to its author. It is a great pity he had not given it more care. Had he done this, our present parliamentary situation might be turned to a remarkable good for the people. I hope we will not let its shortcomings be turned to evil. If you can not vote strong for my amendment, vote all else down and vote for the McCumber amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 7, after the word "rate," insert the following: "To be fixed by the board, not exceeding."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized on that amendment.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, debate is closed on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate was closed on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this particular proposition be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. What particular proposition?

Mr. LEVER. The Bathrick proposition.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota and all other amendments to the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think it is quite proper to close debate on amendments as offered very quickly; but, after all, most of these amendments will be offered in one shape or another, and we might as well make up our minds we will be here fairly late, and I hope everybody will stay until we are through.

Mr. LEVER. I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma wants two minutes, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman from North Dakota wants five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. I would like to have five minutes on the Bathrick amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition close in 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from North Dakota to have 5?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Minnesota to have 5, the gentleman from North Dakota to have 5, and the gentleman from Oklahoma to have 2, and I reserve 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this pending amendment be closed in 15 minues. Is there objection.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does that refer only to the Bathrick amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No; debate on the Bathrick amendment is already closed. Is there objection?

Mr. BULKLEY. Does that cut out other amendments to the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It does nothing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BULKLEY. Then I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio is in many respects preferable to the so-called McCumber amendment. The worst feature about that amendment is the provision which fixes the rate of interest upon the bonds issued by the Government to be fixed at 4½ per cent arbitrarily. That difficulty is corrected by the Bathrick bill. One other great trouble with the McCumber proposition is the requirement that the bonds should be sold at par. The Bathrick amendment corrects that difficulty by providing that they shall be sold at not less than par. Another difficulty with the McCumber proposition was that it made no provision whatever for the appointment of the so-called loan commissioner. The Bathrick proposition provides for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will not yield now—yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Is not it a fact that the McCumber amendment provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make rules and regulations which would cover that?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; but that would not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a commissioner. Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered simply does this: It provides that the rate of interest to be paid by the farmers shall be fixed by the board provided by the Bathrick amendment, but shall not exceed 5 per cent. Its purpose is this: The Bathrick amendment having reduced the interest rate on the Government bonds to be issued from 4½ per cent, as provided in the McCumber bill, to 3½ per cent, as provided in his amendment, it seems to me unfair to require the farmer to pay at the rate of 5 per cent, and my amendment would simply permit the board authorized to be appointed by the Bathrick amendment to fix the rate charged to the farmer at a lower percentage than 5 per cent whenever that may be possible.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, the Bathrick substitute corrects some of the main defects in Senate amendment 89, and if this substitute could be adopted by this House with any certain assurance that it would be accepted by the conference committee I would cheerfully favor it, but, as I stated in substance a few minutes ago, I fear that if this rural credits legislation as presented to this House by Senate amendment numbered 89 is put in such a parliamentary position that it will be open to general amendment by the conference committee of the House and Senate the result will be that there will be no rural credits legislation enacted by this Congress. Now, Senate amendment 89, or the so-called McCumber amendment——

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman mean by that there must be a flat-footed concurrence in order to get legislation, in the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. NORTON. Yes; practically that. I will say to the gentleman that I firmly believe that if we are to have any Federal rural credits legislation by this Congress we will secure it only by a concurrence now in amendment 89 without amendments or with a few restricted amendments. I believe that if this Senate amendment is opened up by amendments here in the House, so that the conferees may have the right to substitute the Hollis bill or the Bulkley bill or the Hollis-Bulkley bill, the final result will be that there will be no rural credits legislation by this Congress. The whole subject will in such case be dropped out in conference by the Senate conferees receding from the Senate amendment or by the conferees putting this important subject in cold storage by some other subtle parliamentary procedure.

In listening to the statement just made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I could not be impressed otherwise than that he, for one, would not make any great, strenuous objection to dropping out rural credit legislation in the conference committee. Now, this Senate amendment 89 simply proposes a system of rural credits which provides direct aid by the Government. The rate of the bonds to be issued of 4½ per cent, I believe, is too high. If we should vote down every other proposed amendment or substitute, and then amend this Senate amendment by changing the rate of interest on the bonds to 3½ per cent, and provide that the bonds may be sold for not less than their face value, we will get, I believe, a fair rural credit bill.

We should also amend the rate to be charged to the farmer of 5 per cent to 4 per cent. These amendments, I suggest, are not such as will open up the Senate amendment to general amendments by the conference committee. I am thoroughly convinced that if we want rural credit legislation now there is only one thing to do—to vote down every amendment that has been proposed until we reach the McCumber amendment. Then it may be well to perfect it, as I have suggested.

There is no longer room for argument but that there is great and immediate need for the establishment of a Federal rural credit system in this country.

In discussing this subject President Taft, in his letter to the governors of the several States, dated at Beverly, Mass., October 11, 1912, said:

> The need for the establishment of an adequate financial system as an aid to the farmers of this country is not quite generally recognized. The governmental initiative taken by the Department of State under instructions issued by my direction to the diplomatic officers in Europe on March 18 last has been effectively supplemented by the American Bankers' Association, the Southern Commercial Congress, and by many other bodies by whom this question has been agitated, and valuable work has been done in studying and disseminating knowledge of those great instrumentalities which have been created in foreign lands to extend to their agriculturists credit facilities equal in benefits to those enjoyed by their industrial and commercial organizations. The handicap placed upon the American farmer through the lack of such a system and the loss sustained by the whole citizenship of the Nation because of this failure to assist the farmers to the utmost development of our agricultural resources is readily apparent.

By the pronouncements of the Democratic, the Republican, and the Progressive Party platforms of 1912 the farmers of the Nation were led to believe that this Congress would give them substantial relief from the exorbitant interest rates they are paying by the enactment of legislation providing for the organization and establishment of a practical system of rural credits similar to some of the successful systems that have been long in operation in other countries.

The Democratic Party declared thus on this subject:

> Of equal importance with the question of currency reform is the question of rural credits or agricultural finance. Therefore we recommend that an investigation of agricultural credit societies in foreign countries be made so that it may be ascertained whether a system of rural credits may be devised suitable to conditions in the United States; and we also favor legislation permitting national banks to loan a reasonable proportion of their funds on real estate security.

In the Republican platform it was said:

> It is of the greatest importance to the social and economical welfare of this country that its farmers have facilities for borrowing easily and cheaply the money they need to increase the productivity of their lands. It is as important that financial machinery be provided to supply the demand of farm credits as it is that the banking and currency systems be reformed in the interest of general business.

The Progressive Party, through its party platform, placed itself on record "to foster the development of agricultural credit."

President Wilson, through interviews and addresses since the beginning of this Congress, has attempted to lead the farmers of the country to believe that his real, earnest, honest, and active support would be given during this Congress to securing the enactment of practical Federal rural-credit legislation at the earliest possible time after the passage of the tariff bill and the Federal reserve act.

On August 13, 1913, the President gave a statement to the press of the country in which he said, among other things, speaking of rural credits:

> There is no subject more important to the welfare or the industrial development of the United States. There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmers directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. * * * This is our next great task. Not only is a Government commission about to report which is charged with apprising the Congress with the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture also has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive working together will certainly afford the needed machinery for relief and prosperity to the people of the countryside, and that very soon.

The Government commission referred to in this statement of the President has long since made its report to Congress. A year ago extensive and exhaustive hearings on this subject were held by subcommittees of the Senate and the House Committees on Banking and Currency. Copies of these hearings have been available to all Members of Congress for many months. The press of the country, particularly the agricultural newspapers and magazines, have given wide discussion to this subject since many months before the beginning of this Congress.

President Wilson in his message to the present Congress at the beginning of our second session on December 2, 1913, again professed in pleasing terms his allegiance to the establishment of a rural-credit system for this country. The President then said:

> We must add the means by which the farmer may make his credit easily available and may command when he will the capital by which to support and expand his business. We lag behind the many other great countries of the modern world in attempting to do this. Systems of rural credits have been studied and developed on the other side of the water while we left our farmers to shift for themselves in the ordinary money market. You have but to look about you in any rural district to see the results, the handicap, and embarrassment which have been put upon those who produce our food.

As is well known to many Members in the House to-night, the President during the consideration preceding the passage of the Federal reserve act gave different Members of the Congress to definitely understand if they withdrew their opposition to certain features of the Federal reserve act he would use his influence to have the subject of rural credits taken up by Congress as next on the administration's legislative program, after the passage of the Federal reserve act. In the light of all this, the opposition in the House during this session and during the second session of this Congress, by recognized leaders of the administration, to the enactment of any rural-credit legislation is strange indeed, to say the least. How much longer are the American farmers to be buncombed by the fulsome promises and pleasant sounding phrases of this administration? Do party platforms mean nothing? Do the President's declarations to the country on this subject mean nothing? Are the recognized and admitted urgent needs of the farmers of the country to be given no real relief by this administration and by the majority in this Congress? It would seem not. Has anyone in this Chamber discovered the slightest influence of the President being exerted during the past 10 months to bring about the enactment of rural credit legislation by this Congress? I think not. Rather such influence as has come from the Executive and his Cabinet during the past year has strongly tended to prevent this Congress from the enactment of rural-credit legislation and the establishment of a system of rural credits for this country.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston in his annual report for 1914, speaking of this problem of rural credits, says:

> The chief difference of opinion arises over whether there should be special aid furnished by the Government. There seems to be no emergency which requires or justifies Government assistance to the farmers directly through the use of the Government cash or the Government's credit. The American farmer is sturdy, independent, and self-reliant. He is not in the condition of serfdom or semiserfdom in which were some of the European peoples for whom government aid was extended in some form or other during the last century. He is not in the condition of many of the Irish farmers, for whom encouragement and aid have been furnished through the land-purchase act. As a matter of fact, the American farmers are more prosperous than any other farming class in the world. As a class, they are certainly as prosperous as the merchants, the teachers, the clerks, or the mechanics. It is necessary only that the Government, so far as geographic and physical conditions permit, provide machinery for the benefit of the agricultural classes as satisfactory as that provided for any other class, and this the Government has attempted and is attempting to do.

More pleasing phrases for the American farmer, who begins his daily toil long before the sunrise and who ceases not his labor until long after the sun has gone to its rest. The compliment Secretary Houston pays the American farmer in saying that he is sturdy, independent, and self-reliant is all well deserved. But it means nothing in particular. The same compliment might be paid to the bushman of Australia. Secretary Houston should have added that the American farmer is intelligent; that he is to-day thinking of the fact that in North Carolina he is paying interest on land loans at the rate of from 6 to 20 per cent; that in North Dakota he is paying interest on his land loans at the rate of from 7 to 12 per cent; that throughout these United States he is paying an average interest cost of about 8½ per cent per annum on his over $6,000,000,000 of indebtedness; and that in other countries where Government aid has been given to rural credits farmers are paying but from 3 to 4 per cent on land-mortgage loans and slightly higher rates on short-time credits. Yes; I would say to Secretary Houston the American farmer is sturdy, independent, self-reliant, and, in addition, it should not be forgotten that he is intelligent. His intelligence is such that he realizes that pretty compliments as to his sturdiness, independence, and self-reliance will not in any way assist in lessening the burden of exorbitant interest rates that he has been long obliged to bear. It has been heralded in the newspapers during the past few days, and we have been told even on the floor of this House to-day, that the President would veto any rural credit legislation that this Congress might pass containing a provision for direct Government aid to rural credits. Does anyone believe that reports and statements of this kind and character are permitted by the President and the administration leaders to be circulated and to go unchallenged for the purpose of assisting in the enactment of rural credit legislation by this Congress? Quite the contrary. If no rural credit legislation is enacted by this Congress, and it now appears to-night as if there would be none, it will be clearly because the President and the money lenders of the country are opposed to any Federal rural credit system providing for Government aid to the system.

But let me ask why should the President or the leaders of the administration be so fearful of extending Government aid and support to a financial system framed to serve the agricultural interests of this country? It must be conceded that our present banking and currency system is framed to serve commerce and the industries other than agricultural. That our banking and currency system has long discriminated against agriculture is well known. That there is need for a distinct system of finance to meet the requirements of the farmer is certain. It can be readily recalled that there was no opposition on the part of the President to lending the aid of the Government to the establishment of the present Federal reserve banking and currency system. Under this system the Federal reserve notes that are issued by the Federal Reserve Board, and turned over to the Federal reserve banks for their use and without any interest charge whatever, are made the direct obligations of the United States. No objection, so far as I have been able to learn, has been made by the President to thus lending the credit of the Government to the banking and commercial interests of the country.

When last year, under the provisions of the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, millions of dollars of currency, the payment of which was made the direct obligation of the Government, was loaned bankers, and at 2 and 3 per cent per annum, no protest against this Government aid to bankers and gamblers in bonds and stocks came from the President, his Cabinet members, or his spokesmen in or out of the Congress.

The President a few months ago was most active in having a War Risk Insurance Bureau established for the insurance by the Federal Government of ships engaged in foreign commerce, and millions were appropriated out of the Federal Treasury for the purpose of carrying on this business, which will chiefly benefit shipowners and commercial interests. More recently the President, members of his Cabinet, and recognized leaders of the administration program in Congress have been unprecedentedly active in endeavoring to have $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 appropriated out of the Federal Treasury to buy ships from the Shipping Trust and others. While it was claimed that putting the money of the Government into the purchase and construction of ships, as proposed in the so-called ship-purchasing bill, would indirectly benefit the whole country, it unquestionably would have been a direct and immediate benefit to the people living in towns and cities on the seaboard, to those merchants engaged in foreign commerce, and to the sailors and seamen employed on the ships.

Commercial interests, bankers, railroads, and the Shipping Trust have influence enough to have Federal legislation, involving Government aid, rushed through this Congress for their relief; but when the farmers of this Nation seek from the Congress the character of legislation that has been granted to the farmers of almost every other civilized nation of the world, they are told in effect to be patient and to watchfully wait for the future.

Government aid is not a new or untried experiment. The reports and evidence now before the Congress clearly show that in all the history of the success or failure of rural credit systems in other countries, there is not one single instance of the success of a land-mortgage system on the long-time amortization plan organized to encourage agricultural industry and the ownership of farm homes which has not had Government financial aid.

Direct Government loans are being made to farmers by Australian Provinces, Denmark, Great Britain, New Zealand, Russia, and Sweden. Bonds or debentures issued by land-mortgage institutions are guaranteed by the central or by provincial Governments in the following countries: Germany, Austria, Australia, Norway, Switzerland, Egypt, Mexico, Argentina, and Uruguay. These nations have given aid to their rural-credit systems by contributing endowments to the capital stock of land-mortgage institutions: France, Germany, Italy, Hungary, Roumania, and Sweden.

Subscriptions to the capital stock of land-mortgage banks have been made by Denmark, Switzerland, Hungary, Roumania, Norway, Chile, and the Philippine Islands. In France, Italy, Japan, Serbia, and Chile funds of the Government are loaned to land-mortgage institutions. At another time I have discussed more in detail the operation of some of the Government-aided rural credit systems in Europe, Australia, and New Zealand. I want now to call your attention more particularly to rural credit systems as found in South America.

The largest public-land credit institution in the Argentine Republic is the Banco Hipotecario Nacional, which was founded in 1886. Loans may be granted by this bank on any lands for sums not exceeding $1,930 and for a term not exceeding five years, repayable in lump or by installments. Loans may be made to farmers up to 80 per cent of the value of the mortgaged property as determined by the assessment for the land tax, the maximum loan not to exceed $2,895. The Government guarantees the interest and principal of the notes and debentures which the Banco Hipotecario Nacional is authorized to issue in financing its operations.

Ambassador Herrick in his recent book on Rural Credits makes this very interesting statement concerning the land-mortgage credit system in Chile:

> Land credit was organized in Chile while the Indian and buffalo in western United States could roam from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian border without crossing a railroad track or seeing the face of a white settler. Loans of 33 years, repayable by annuities, were being granted in Chile when the farmers of Kansas were losing their homesteads by the foreclosure of three and five year mortgages. Chilean mortgage bonds or debentures are officially listed on the Paris Bourse and have been made legal investments by the French ministry of finance for all purposes for which even Government bonds may be used. They are bought also by English bankers and find a ready market in other parts of the European Continent where offers of American mortgage bonds would be refused.
> The Chilean land-credit law was enacted in 1855, three years after that of France, and it has proved so satisfactory that very few amendments have been made. The law is a general one, allowing any persons who comply with its terms to form a company. A number of companies have been formed thereunder and are doing a good business. Nevertheless they operate at a disadvantage, because of the fact that the Chilean, like the French, Government organized a State bank under the general law, and although it has not given this institution a monopoly it has invested it with such privileges that no others can compete with it successfully. It holds two-thirds of the mortgages taken by bond-issuing land banks in Chile, and it is able to hold so many more than its competitors that it absolutely dictates the rate of interest.
> This institution is called the Caja de Credito Hipotecario or Chilean State Land Mortgage Bank. It has no capital stock or shareholders. It is owned and managed by the Government, and the net profits are used for the benefit of borrowers or for creating or supporting savings banks. * * * The Caja de Credito Hipotecario lends on the security of unencumbered real estate situated in the Republic up to a maximum of one-half its value for ordinary borrowers and three-fourths its value for the purchase or construction of cheap dwellings.
> * * * The bonds of the bank have been made legal investments for all persons and purposes and have been purchased in large amounts by the Chilean Government, not only because of their intrinsic soundness but in order to give them a popular currency. The bonds are guaranteed by the State, which has for its own protection the mortgages taken from borrowers and the reserve.

While we have given to the South American Republics many valuable lessons in science, invention, commerce, and trade, we may in turn well take to ourselves a lesson from the rural-credit systems long in operation in some of these countries.

The tendency to abandon agriculture and to seek the larger centers of population has in this country, as in Europe, become a serious problem for solution. This tendency not only increases the cost of living to all our people, but is a real menace to the stability and existence of the Nation. During the decade from 1900 to 1910 the percentage of increase of the urban population of the United States was more than three times as great as the percentage of increase of our rural population. In 1880 our urban population was 29.5 per cent of our total population, and our rural population was 70.5 per cent of the total population. In 1910 the urban population had increased to 46.3 per cent of the total population, and the rural population had decreased to 53.7 per cent. The nations of continental Europe have had to meet this problem, and each nation has proceeded to solve the same after its own manner, and in the way best adapted to its peculiar condition and customs. Modern and scientific methods of production, cooperative marketing, social farm organizations, personal-credit associations, and long-time land-mortgage institutions, have each contributed an important part in its successful solution. The importance that rural credit systems have taken in the solution of this economic problem is evidenced by the general acknowledgment that the teeming millions of many of these nations would not to-day find endurable existence were it not for the special means that have been taken for financing the farmer and the landowner so that credits necessary to carry on the industry of agriculture are obtained at comparatively low interest rates.

In 1910 our farm property in this country was valued at $40,991,449,090. The number of our people engaged in farming was 12,285,579.

The value of the farm products produced that year was $8,417,000,000. From the proceeds received from the sale of their farm products our American farmers, it is estimated, pay each year in interest $510,000,000, being interest at the rate of 8½ per cent on their indebtedness of $6,000,000,000. This heavy interest charge that our farmers are required to pay and which is one of the main causes tending to decrease our farm population amounts in the aggregate to nearly as much as the total value of the annual wheat crop of our Nation, the value of which, on the farm in 1910, was $561,051,000. This enormous interest charge was 60 per cent of all the farm products of every kind, both vegetable and animal, exported from this country in 1910. As the rural credit system, which the bill, or Senate amendment, before us proposes to create will, directly or indirectly, affect every man, woman, and child in this country, individually and collectively, since the benefits it will provide will result in largely increasing the food supply of the country, we should not be swerved from our plain and patriotic duty to support this legislation by the cry from the money lenders that it should be defeated because it extends Government aid to the farmers of the country. There is no class of our citizens that is so vital to the life of the Nation as our farmers; no class that is more worthy and more entitled to the encouragement and protection of this Government. Shall they longer be denied the governmental protection and encouragement that has long been granted to the farmers of other civilized nations? I trust not. The enactment of this land-mortgage rural credit legislation will be a long step in the direction of making American farm life more attractive, more happy, and more profitable. It should be soon followed and supplemented by legislation providing for a system of personal or short-time rural credits and by legislation providing for a nation-wide cooperative marketing system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is recognized.

[Mr. FERRIS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BATHRICK. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 36, noes 91.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman offering an amendment or a substitute?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers a substitute for the committee amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I submit there can not be a substitute for the substitute. There can be an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] offers an amendment.

Mr. MANN. There is a difference in the status. That is the reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to strike out all after the word "that."

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the McCumber amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma after a while. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the substitute:

Strike out all after the word "that" and insert the following:

"SEC. 1. That there is hereby created in the Department of the Treasury at Washington, District of Columbia, a commission to be known as a rural credits commission, said commission to be composed of five members, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. These commissioners shall be selected from the various sections of the United States, and three of whom shall be actual bona fide farmers, who have no other occupations. Two shall be men of business affairs and recognized financial ability. The said rural credits commission shall herein be referred to as the 'commission.' They shall elect one of their members chairman.

"SEC. 2. That at first said commissioners shall be appointed for one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively, and after that their terms of office shall be for five years each, unless removed by the President for cause. The salary shall be $7,500 each, payable quarterly.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall assign them rooms for the conduct of their business, and they shall have power to appoint clerks and employ assistants that may be necessary for the transaction of the business of the department.

"SEC. 4. That said commission shall have power to prescribe all rules and regulations necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act and for the conduct of the business of the department.

"SEC. 5. That all postmasters throughout the United States and Territories thereof and the District of Columbia, for the purpose of carrying this act into effect and for the proper conduct of its business, shall be the agents of the commission and perform whatever services may be required of them without pay.

"SEC. 6. That the purpose of this act shall be to enable farmers to procure long-time loans at low rate of interest, to purchase farms, or to develop and extend their agricultural productiveness. The word 'farmer,' as herein used, shall mean one who actually resides upon his farm and is engaged in the business of farming, and the benefits of this bill shall be applicable to farmers residing in any State or Territory of the United States of America or the District of Columbia. The loans herein contemplated shall run in series of 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and 30 years, at the option of the borrower, interest to be payable annually. The terms of such loan shall provide that at any interest-paying date beyond five years the borrower shall have the option to pay the principal, or to make payment of $100, or any multiple thereof, and upon such payment being made the interest on the amount so paid shall cease. Payment may be made at any post office or national bank. No person shall be entitled to a loan unless he actually resides upon his farm, or shall use the loan in payment of lands upon which he shall immediately fix his home. The amount of the loan shall be determined by the commission herein created, except anyone applying who is entitled to the loan shall, if he desires, receive as a loan as much as 50 per cent of the actual value of his lands and 25 per cent of the actual value of the improvements thereon, and as much more as may, in the judgment of the commission, be safe and prudent to extend him.

"SEC. 7. That all securities or deeds of trust executed by anyone to secure a loan hereunder shall be made payable to the chairman of the commission as the trustee for the United States of America. Said instrument shall recite the amount of the loan and date of maturity, but shall not name the rate of interest to be paid thereon. Said instrument must be executed by the borrower according to forms of the State or Territory in which the lands are situated and in conformity with the rules and regulations prescribed by the commission. In addition to executing the said instrument herein referred to the borrower shall execute notes with coupons attached for interest periods named in said deed of trust and in the form that may be prescribed by the commission. These coupons are redeemable or payable at any national bank or any post office of the first, second, or third class. These notes, securities, coupons, and obligations and funds shall not be subject to taxation—municipal, State, or national. The title to said lands shall be shown by a suitable abstract, which shall be forwarded with the application for the loan, except in those States where the Torrens system may prevail, and in those States the certificate of the State shall be sufficient evidence of title. There shall be proper officers appointed for the examination of titles, for which services no fee shall be charged.

"SEC. 8. That a farmer desiring to avail himself of the provisions of this act shall file with the local postmaster a written application under oath setting forth the security he has to offer, the amount of the loan he desires, and the purposes for which he desires it, and such other facts as may be required by the commission. Whereupon the postmaster shall appoint two committees, consisting of three members each; the first named of each shall act as chairman of his committee. The first committee shall consist of three farmers residing in the immediate vicinity of the farm upon which the loan is desired, and who shall be familiar with its value, and they shall make an appraisement of the value of the lands and the improvements thereon separately. Said appraisements shall be under oath and secret and shall be filed with the postmaster appointing said committee. The second committee shall consist of three men of affairs who are familiar with the land and improvements upon which the loan is sought and with the general conditions in that vicinity, as to whether values of real estate are advancing or declining and whether the applicant is a progressive farmer or otherwise. They shall likewise appraise the farm and improvements and give whatever other information may be necessary to determine the hazard of the loan. These appraisements shall likewise be secret and made under oath and filed with the postmaster appointing said committees. When these appraisements are received by the postmaster the postmaster and the chairmen of the two committees shall proceed to open the appraisements and to make therefrom a just and accurate appraisement of the property, both lands and improvements, and transmit the same to the chairman of the said commission at Washington, together with whatever other information may be necessary with reference to the applicant in the loan sought, to enable the commission to determine the amount to be loaned, if any. When the application is received and approved by the said commission it shall cause to be forwarded to the postmaster from whom it was received the necessary notes and instruments to be executed by the borrower, who shall execute them in the manner prescribed by the commission and return to said commission. Thereupon said notes and instruments for the loan shall be sold in the open market for par at the lowest rate of interest procurable. The proceeds of said sale shall be transmitted to the borrower. The borrower shall not only pay the rate of interest agreed upon in said sale, but shall pay whatever per cent may be necessary for the amortization of said loan at maturity thereof. The per cent for amortization shall be fixed by the commission.

"SEC. 9. That the moneys paid in order amortization herein provided for shall be a trust fund available for the payment of any interest or principal that may be due and unpaid on any loan made under the provisions of this act, and shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States or put out at interest, as may be determined by said commission.

"SEC. 10. That if any borrower shall make default in the payment of principal or interest under the provisions of his loan, then, under such rules and regulations as the commission may prescribe, his lands shall be seized and sold subject to the terms of the loan, and for the purpose of said seizure and sale suit may be brought in the name of the commission, and all district attorneys are hereby authorized and commanded to prosecute said suits without fee. Said suits shall be in the United States district court for the district in which the lands are situated. From the proceeds of said sale all costs shall be first paid, and accrued interest and principal, if due, and the residue, if any, shall be paid to the borrower. Real estate sold under the provisions of this act may be redeemed from said sale by anyone holding the equity therein within one year from the date of sale.

"SEC. 11. That the United States of America shall guarantee the payment of all interest and principal of loans procured under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 12. That no loan shall be in excess of $5,000. If the premises mortgaged under the provisions of this act shall pass into the ownership of anyone who is not a bona fide farmer the indebtedness shall at once become due and payable. If anyone shall acquire lands upon which there is a loan under the provisions of this act in excess of $5,000, the excess of $5,000 shall at once become due and payable.

"SEC. 13. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard just a few moments.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. And I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. LEVY. And I desire 5 minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. LEVER. I request that the debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and all amendments thereto be closed in 20 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest to the gentleman 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], 5 by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY], and 5 by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES], and 5 by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY]. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVY. I want 5 minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I had 10 minutes on that, Mr. Chairman, by the agreement.

Mr. LEVER. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. CARAWAY. I say I was to have 10 minutes of that time.

Mr. LEVER. Well, I will modify the request, Mr. Chairman, by making it 25 minutes, so that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] may have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if you will hear me patiently for a few minutes on this amendment, I should like to explain what I think are the essentials of a rural credits system. I think this Government will have performed its full duty to the farmers of this country when it has brought the farmer who wishes to borrow money into contact with the man who has money to loan at a rate of interest agriculture can afford to pay.

This bill undertakes to accomplish that and nothing more. It undertakes to create in the Department of the Treasury a commission to be known as the rural-credits commission, to be composed of five men, three of whom shall be farmers and two shall be men of affairs, business men. These men have plenary powers to prescribe all the rules and regulations for the putting into operation of the act and for the conduct of the business designed to be accomplished by this bill. This commission has the power to employ all agents and employees for the conduct of the business to be transacted.

It defines a farmer as one engaged exclusively in the production of agricultural products. No one shall enjoy the benefits of this act except farmers. This class of people shall be entitled to borrow money under the bill at the rate of interest that may be procured under its provisions. The farmer applying for a loan shall have a committee to examine his property and determine its value. When that has been ascertained the appraisement shall be forwarded to the commission in Washington, and that commission shall determine what amount, if any, the farmer is entitled to borrow. However, it is provided that if he is entitled to borrow at all, he is entitled to borrow 50 per cent of the value of the land and 25 per cent of the value of the improvements.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What rate of interest is proposed in your amendment?

Mr. CARAWAY. I will explain that in a moment. The idea I had in making a loan value upon the improvements is this: I realize that a piece of land without any buildings will produce as much corn or cotton as if it were highly improved with a brick mansion and a fine barn, but we know that a man can not raise his family under conditions like that; and I want, therefore, to incorporate a provision in the bill to the effect that the farmer may borrow money on his improvements. It suggests to him that improvements have value, and it provides him with the means of making them.

When the application is made and accepted the farmer executes his note and deed of trust or mortgage and returns it to the commission. The note names the amount that he wishes to borrow and the number of years it shall run, but leaves blank the rate of interest. This obligation is offered upon the open market to be sold at par, and the rate of interest is determined at the time of its sale, because, I undertake to say, the farmer has no right to have the Government say his rate of interest shall be 3 per cent or 6 per cent, but has the right to say that he shall be brought into contact with the men who have money to loan, and then he shall contract with them at whatever rate of interest they are willing to let him have the money, and nothing more.

Mr. COOPER. Suppose they would want to charge him 15 per cent?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think he would pay it.

Mr. COOPER. Does not the gentleman believe in a usury law or a law fixing the maximum rate of interest that can be legally charged?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I think I will show him the advantage of my plan. As I said, the rate of interest is left blank. The Government guarantees that the provisions of this contract made with the farmer shall be carried out; that is, that the interest shall be paid when due, and that the amount of the loan shall be paid at its maturity. There is an amortization feature with the loan. The farmer shall pay whatever per cent the commission shall fix, and shall pay it into a common fund out of which this commission may pay the interest when due and the mortgage at its maturity. Therefore the Government loses nothing by its guaranty, because every man who participates in the loan will be primarily liable. The interest of the man who loans the money will be paid promptly, because it is paid out of a common fund. He can take his voucher to a national bank and have it cashed. The guaranty of the Government is largely psychological.

Mr. NORTON. If it is psychological, it ought to meet with the President's approval. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. You have this condition: You have a bond issued by a farmer that is guaranteed by a common fund paid in by all who participate in the system, and back of that you have the Government guaranty. Therefore you have a bond that anyone will be willing to invest in who is willing to invest in a Government bond, and at the same rate of interest. It will make the rate of interest of a man living in Arkansas the same as it would be in Massachusetts.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. The only Government aid is the guaranty?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is the Government guaranty back of this common amortization fund. The Government can not possibly be compelled to pay a cent, yet it gives to the lender that sense of security that he realizes that back of all of it is the guaranty of the Government that every provision of his contract will be complied with.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Do you not think the farmer ought to get his money at as low a rate of interest from the Government as anybody else?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and I think under the provisions of this bill 3½ per cent would be the maximum rate he would have to pay. Now, if he does that, it has this advantage: It does not bring him into contact with commercial banks; it does not take from the commercial banks the money that heretofore has been invested in commercial or manufacturing enterprises. It does not disturb the local interest rate. It simply permits this great fund that is now accumulating in savings banks and in postal savings to be utilized for farm loans. That is all. It gives the farmer as low a rate of interest as this Government can command, and it does not cost the Government a cent. In addition to that, the farmer, under the provisions of this bill, is restricted to $5,000. If he borrows that, he can borrow no more, and if he purchases land upon which an amount in excess of $5,000 has already been loaned, under the provisions of this bill the excess must be due and payable; or if the premises upon which the loan is made has passed out of the hands of the farmer and into the hands of some man who is a speculator, the loan becomes due and payable. The reason that provision ought to be in the bill is that, as I understand it, rural credit is intended to render it possible for poor men to acquire homes, not to facilitate speculation in land. No system which does not carry this restriction ought to be enacted into law, because we want to make this a Nation of home owners, not of land speculators.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I think this House ought to pass a rural-credit bill, and conditions are such that it can now do so.

The farmers of this country pay a higher rate of interest than any other class of business men in this land. Only a few days ago, in the city of Washington, I was talking with a gentleman high in financial circles, and he presented to me a list of farmers who were borrowing money from banks. The lowest rate of interest exhibited to me was 25 per cent, and the highest rate was over 100 per cent. How on earth the farmers of this country have been able to sustain themselves, how they have been able to live, is a mystery, only explainable by the fact that they have used the most rigid economy.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I regret to say that I can not yield; I have only a few minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman has made a statement that ought not to go unchallenged.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I can sustain my statement.

I wish to say this, Mr. Chairman, that I favor the Caraway bill. I shall vote for it as a substitute. It is a bill that is short and comprehensive, and it covers the entire ground. It is so plain that you are not forced to employ an array of counsel to have it explained.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment of the bill as presented by the Agricultural Committee. When the bill is perfected, as it is said, I am in favor of placing dynamite under the bill with all the amendments and blowing it to atoms, and then agree to the Senate amendment, the McCumber bill. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the McCumber amendment was proposed solely as a political move to discredit the Democratic party. It is not sound from an economic standpoint, and if adopted would be, and should be, vetoed by the President. [Applause.]

The idea of allowing two or three individuals to get together and upon their own valuation of their property demand a loan thereon from the Government is absurd on its face. [Applause.] The bill goes further than this, and even requires the Government to borrow the money in order to make the loan [laughter], and then there is no limit to the amount which such borrowers can demand that the Government must borrow for their benefit.

It is a more absurd dream than the wildest "greenbacker" ever dared to indulge in, and if it should become a law would make the Democratic Party the laughingstock of the country and deservedly drive it from power. [Applause.]

The Hollis bill, on the contrary, is based on sound economic principles. No one can read it without being impressed with the care with which it has been drawn and the knowledge of the subject on the part of its authors. The principle involved is to provide the machinery by which permanent capital of the country may be made available to its agricultural interests, that the security which the farmer can offer, which is the best in the world, may be put in negotiable form whereby it may be utilized by investors, and the farmer thereby be benefited through a broad and national market. [Applause.]

This machinery under the Hollis bill provides the necessary safeguards to induce the holders of capital to invest in farm-loan bonds and does not seek through eleemosynary efforts to obtain the capital of the country by governmental intervention.

I heartily indorse the Hollis bill and consider it a fine piece of constructive work, as a companionable piece of legislation to the Federal reserve act, though I do not think this is the proper time to pass it. [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, this is the proposition we are up against: Some Members of this House believe in Government aid to rural credits. [Applause.] Some Members of the House do not believe in that character of legislation. Those who believe in Government aid to rural credits will not get any Government aid to rural credits unless we get the McCumber amendment. [Applause.] Those who do not believe in Government aid to rural credits can go off after the other side that want to lead us into the bogs and brier patches and lose us on the Bulkley-Hollis amendment. That is exactly the attempt of the forces in trying to defeat rural-credit legislation of this Congress. Their policy is, divide and conquer.

They know that we do not all know about this question. We have not studied it; we have been engaged in other matters, and they take advantage of the ignorance of the House on this question and bring in this Hollis provision which will divide us, throw the matter into conference, and they hope by that to get away from any rural-credit legislation at all at this session.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman understand that the only kind of rural credit which should be provided for is to lend the credit of the Government to the farmers?

Mr. CALLAWAY. That is the only kind that will do him any good. [Laughter and applause.]

I have been in the farm-loan business, a practicing lawyer and a farmer, too, since 1900, and we have got the same kind of a scheme in every considerable city in our country—that is, go out and supervise the farmer, show him how to organize himself into a company, and finance a loan concern where he can borrow his own money—and they are working it all over the country. They have gone into this kind of a scheme as much as they are going to, and the president of the Farmers' National Union, and the president of the Grange, at the Powhatan Hotel two weeks ago, told Members of this House that went to see them and talk about rural-credit legislation, that in their national meeting at Fort Worth, they went over the Hollis bill and decided that they could not use it, and did not want it at all.

This scheme reminds me of a nice bridge that Walter Lowdermilk built across a slough in Rush Creek bottom. There was an awfully bad lane running through the bottom and across it a slough. Walter Lowdermilk was ordered to build a bridge across the slough. He got up his plans and specifications, procured the material, and built the prettiest bridge you ever saw, but he forgot to make any provision to get on it; you could not get on it at all. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CARAWAY) there were 31 ayes and 82 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, evidently the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is a long amendment, and I ask unanimous consent, with his consent, that it be printed in the RECORD and that he be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD and that the gentleman from Oklahoma may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Oh, if we have to vote on this amendment, it ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I think I can explain it in a few minutes.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman can not, for I have listened to him for an hour or two, though I think that is not the gentleman's fault. If the gentleman is offering the amendment not to be adopted, it ought not to be offered. It is too late in the day to offer anything as bunk, and I am quite sure that the gentleman from Oklahoma is not doing that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma may have the amendment printed in the RECORD and may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MANN. If the amendment is to be voted on it ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

The members of the advisory board shall receive no salaries, but they shall be paid their actual expenses when attending meetings of said board, and shall be allowed $10 per day for time actually employed in attending meetings of said board. The advisory board shall meet annually at Washington, D. C., unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall be the duty of members of the advisory board to aid the directors of the national land bank by furnishing information relating to their respective States pertaining to the loan business, to present matters in behalf of applicants for loans in their respective States, and at the meetings of the board they shall discuss propositions for the betterment of the service rendered by the land credit system hereby established, and by resolutions may make such recommendations as in their judgment will contribute to the success of the business of the national land bank. BANKS AUTHORIZED AGENCIES.

SEC. 8. That all national banks are hereby required and all State banks, including trust companies and savings banks, are hereby authorized to act as agencies of the national land bank to receive and transmit applications for loans, to furnish information as to the value of lands covered by applications for loans, or as to other matters pertaining to said loans, to receive from the national land bank the proceeds of any loan and pay the same to mortgagors, to sell national farm-loan bonds, and to do such other acts as shall be authorized by the national land bank, under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

For services rendered by any bank in connection with any loan under the foregoing section the national land bank is authorized to pay to such bank any sum not to exceed one-fifth of 1 per cent on the face value thereof and a like amount for negotiating and securing the sale of national farm-loan bonds.

It shall be unlawful for any bank, or officer or employee thereof, to make any charge or to receive or accept any pay whatsoever from the mortgagor for any service rendered in securing a loan from the national land bank.

It shall be unlawful for any director, clerk, officer or employee of the national land bank, either directly or indirectly, to secure loans under the provisions of this act, or to be interested financially therein, or to purchase or own or have any interest whatever in any bond or other security issued under the provisions of this act, or to be in any way directly interested in any of the business transactions of the national land bank.

DEPOSITORIES.

SEC. 9. That prior to accepting any deposits as hereinafter provided the national land bank shall select one or more banks or trust companies, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, a depository or depositories in which the said national land bank shall deposit all its funds of every kind or character, and no part or portion of such funds shall be withdrawn from such depository or depositories except on check or order signed by the secretary-treasurer, countersigned by the president of such bank. Under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury additional depositories may be designated. Every bank acting as a depository for the funds of the national land bank shall pay to such bank upon such deposits 3 per cent annual interest, based upon the average monthly balances. Every bank acting as such depository shall secure the deposits of the national land bank by delivering to the Secretary of the Treasury, in trust for the use and benefit of the national land bank, national farm-loan bonds in such amount or amounts as shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That for the first year after the organization of the national land bank other securities, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, may be accepted in lieu of national farm-land bonds.

NATIONAL FARM-LOAN FUND.

SEC. 10. That to secure a working fund on which the national land bank shall conduct its business, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to receive deposits amounting in the aggregate to not less than $10,000,000, upon which he shall pay 3 per cent annual interest: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the maximum limit of said deposits may be increased from time to time to $20,000,000. Said deposits shall be set apart as a separate fund, and is hereby designated as the "national farm-loan fund."

Certificates of deposits, under form to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be given to depositors, and said certificates shall be transferable in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in the discretion of the Secretary may be made payable to bearer. Said deposits shall be payable at the end of 10 years or earlier, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be exempt from all Federal, State, and local taxation. Such certificates of deposits shall be available for all purposes for which national land bank bonds may be used as hereafter provided. Sixty days' notice shall be given of the time when such deposits will be first received and the terms upon which they shall be made.

During the first 60 days after the time fixed for receiving deposits no deposits shall be accepted except from farmers or persons actively engaged in agriculture or horticulture, and deposits shall be accepted in the order of time in which they are received. In granting loans the national land bank shall allow depositors the preference in point of time over all other applicants, provided that no depositor shall be granted a loan unless he meets all the conditions required generally of other applicants. Should any depositor secure a loan from said bank and shall thereafter pay the same in full, he shall be entitled, at his option, to have his deposit paid to him. If at the end of the 60 days after the time advertised upon which deposits would be received $10,000,000 have not been deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury, he shall accept deposits from the public generally, and if at the end of 60 days after notice is given that deposits will be accepted from the public generally the full amount of $10,000,000 shall not have been deposited, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to deposit in said fund the balance of said $10,000,000, and the amount necessary for such purpose is hereby appropriated out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and said deposit shall be upon the same terms as deposits made by individuals.

Thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit the said $10,000,000 in one or more of the depositories of the national land bank to the credit of said national land bank, which shall proceed to loan the same as herein provided.

The national land bank shall reimburse the United States for the amount of money expended in interest payments on the national farm-land fund, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix the date and conditions upon which such payments shall be made, and require a fund to be set aside for such purpose.

SINKING FUND.

SEC. 11. That all amortization payments shall be set apart into a separate fund, to be known as the sinking fund, and shall be used for no purpose except for the payment, redemption, and retirement of the bonds issued by said bank. The sinking fund shall be deposited in one of the depositories of the national land bank, and said depository shall pay 3 per cent annual interest thereon, which interest shall be credited to said fund, and the depository shall deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury, in trust, for the use and benefit of the national land bank, national land bank bonds equal in face value to the amount of the sinking fund to secure the payment of said fund.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe rules and regulations which shall control the method and manner of selecting bonds issued by the national land bank for the payment or retirement thereof.

RESERVE FUND.

SEC. 12. That for the purpose of creating a fund to guarantee the prompt payment of bonds and interest thereon issued under this act a special fund is created, as follows: One fifth of 1 per cent of all interest paid on notes and mortgages until the same amounts to $10,000,000 shall be set apart as a separate fund and shall be known as the reserve fund: Provided, That by order of the Secretary of the Treasury said reserve fund shall be increased from time to time, in the above manner, to such amount as may be necessary to provide ample security for the payment of said bonds and interest and to fully meet any and all losses by reason of the nonpayment of mortgages and notes secured thereby.

The reserve fund shall be placed in one or more of the depositories of the national land bank and held as a trust fund to be used in the payment of any bond or interest thereon when due in case at any time the regular payment on notes and mortgages shall be insufficient therefor.

The depository or depositories holding the reserve fund shall pay on such deposit 3 per cent annual interest, based upon the average monthly balances in said fund, and the interest derived therefrom shall be credited to and placed in the reserve fund and shall become a part thereof.

The banks receiving any portion of the reserve fund as deposits shall secure the same by depositing with the Secretary of the Treasury national farm-loan bonds of face value equal to such deposits.

Should any portion of the reserve fund be used to pay the interest or any part of the principal on any note secured by mortgage upon which there has been a default in the payment of any part of the principal or interest, any payment made on such note or mortgage thereafter or collection thereon shall be applied first to reimburse the reserve fund in the amount of money used to make good the default aforesaid, and the balance of such payments or collections shall be placed in the national farm-loan fund.

LOANS AND INTEREST.

SEC. 13. That when the national farm-loan fund shall amount to $10,000,000 the national farm land bank shall proceed to loan said fund to bona fide farmers of the United States or to citizens of the United States desirous of becoming actual farmers. All such loans shall be made under the restrictions and limitations hereinafter set forth, and upon such other restrictions and limitations and under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury under the authority herein given. Loans shall be classified as follows: Class A shall include all loans exceeding 10 years and less than 35 years; class B shall include all loans for not less than 3 years and for not more than 10 years; and Class C shall include all loans exceeding 35 years and less than 65 years. Class C loans shall be designed to aid tenants, farm laborers, and persons residing in towns and cities desirous of becoming farm owners, to purchase and pay for farms, and the national land bank, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby directed to arrange the terms and conditions of such loans, not in conflict with any provision herein, on such plan as will increase the number of farmers in the United States, develop more intensive methods of farming, reduce the number of tenants, check the movement of our population from the farms to our cities, increase the number of farm-home owners, and maintain and increase in the production of food products corresponding to the increase of population. Loans in class C may be equal to two-thirds of the value of the land mortgaged, but loans in class C shall be made only upon lands of a highly productive character.

The national land bank shall give due notice of the time and terms upon which loans will be made. In making loans the same shall be equitably apportioned among the States, and the funds fairly distributed as between the two classes of loans. Loans in class A shall be made at not to exceed 3½ per cent per annum interest and an annual amortization fee paid on the principal sufficient to pay the same at the expiration of the loan. Loans in class B shall be made at not to exceed 4 per cent annual interest, without any amortization fee, but the borrower shall have the privilege of paying any portion of the principal at the time of any interest payment.

NATIONAL FARM-LAND BONDS.

SEC. 14. That whenever the national land bank shall have made loans in any class to the amount of $500,000 or more it shall deposit the mortgages and notes secured thereby with the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall issue a certificate to the national farm-land bank, certifying to the fact that such notes and mortgages have been delivered to him as security for the bonds to be issued thereon, and authorizing the national land bank to issue to the amount of the face value of said mortgages and notes secured thereby bonds in series corresponding to the classes of loans, and said bonds shall be issued in the name of the national land bank and shall be known as "national farm-loan bonds." Class A and class C bonds shall bear 3 per cent interest payable annually, and class B bonds shall bear 3½ per cent interest, payable annually. The national land bank, under the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe the form of such bonds, and the same shall be printed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. Said bonds shall be issued in denominations of from $25 to $1,000 each, and the said national land bank shall sell said bonds for the face value thereof to any persons applying therefor, preference being given to those desiring small investments. He may sell the same direct to the purchaser or utilize banks or other agencies therefor, but in no case shall he allow more than one-fifth of 1 per cent upon the par value thereof as commission for selling said bonds. The proceeds from the sale of said bonds and the principal and interest paid on notes and mortgages shall be covered into the national farm-loan fund and used in making additional loans and in the payment of interest on bonds, or in the payment of such bonds at maturity, or for such other purposes as may be provided for herein.

BONDS.

SEC. 15. That all national farm-loan bonds issued under this act shall be payable at a date specified, and shall be subject to call at par at any interest period after the date of issue or after a specified time by such proper notice and advertisement as may be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury.

All national farm-loan bonds issued under this act shall be protected by deposits with the Secretary of the Treasury, as security therefor, of at least an equal amount on the face value of first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans and notes secured thereby.

That as the amortization payments are credited upon the first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans deposited as security, the national farm-loan bonds issued by the national land bank and secured thereby shall be called and paid, or purchased in the open market and retired to the extent of the credits made upon such first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans held as security for the same.

When any mortgage and notes secured thereby upon which bonds have been issued shall be paid before due, the national land bank shall, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, withdraw the same and deliver the same to the mortgagor and release said mortgage on the record: Provided, That before withdrawing said notes and mortgages he shall deliver to the Secretary in lieu thereof notes and mortgages of at least equal face value falling due not earlier than the notes and mortgages so withdrawn.

Such loans to be made and held by the national banking association making the same as being within the provisions of section 24 of the Federal reserve act, so as to permit national banking associations to lend to individuals or corporations on their obligations secured by their national farm-loan mortgage bonds in place of making the loan directly on farm lands, as provided for in said section.

Such examination shall be made by a national bank examiner, and the purpose of such examination shall be to ascertain the conditions of the business of said bank, the value of its notes and mortgages held as security for bonds issued thereon, the safety of its business methods, and to obtain such other information as in the judgment of the Secretary may be necessary to insure a wise and safe administration of said bank, protect the interests of both mortgagors and bondholders, give confidence in securities issued by the bank, and promote the success of the system of farm credits established by this act. Said inspectors shall be paid such salaries as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $1,500 per annum, and a reasonable allowance for traveling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Oklahoma proceeds, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Oh, I want more time than that. I think we ought to have at least 25 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. And that the gentleman from Oklahoma control 10 minutes of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the Members of the House for a few minutes in order that I may explain this amendment to them. The amendment I offer is H. R. 21474, introduced in the House February 16, 1915. It creates a single bank, located at Washington, D. C., called the national land bank. It is a bank without capital stock, a bank that pays no dividends, a bank that distributes no profits. You say that is strange, and yet the best system of land credit in the world is the landschaft of Germany, which has absolutely no capital stock and distributes no profit, a system that furnishes the best credit and the cheapest interest of any system in the world. Why is it necessary that the United States, in establishing a system, should establish a large number of banks to draw interest, to create dividends, to distribute profits, to be controlled by private interests, and run for profit? The Landschaft, the best system of land credit in the world, is not run for private gain, but it is run for the public good, and if we create a system of land credits that is worthy of this great Nation we will create a system that is not run for profit. My amendment creates a system of land credit directed, managed, and controlled not for the gain of private capital, not for the profit of shareholders, but for the public good. I use the same provision for machinery that is used in the McCumber bill. That is, I utilize State and National banks as agencies to take the loans, and use them as agencies to sell the bonds, so that the central bank created by my bill already has 27,000 agents to take the applications for the loans and transmit them and close up the loan and sell the bonds. These bonds are issued not in the name of the Government but in the name of the national bank. How do I get an operating fund? Instead of appropriating money out of the Treasury I provide that the Secretary of the Treasury shall for 60 days accept deposits from the public generally up to an amount of $10,000,000 and issue certificates of this deposit, which will be transferable. Three per cent interest will be paid on these deposits.

If at the end of 120 days the $10,000,000 is not deposited, then I authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make this balance of the deposit. This $10,000,000 is then transferred to the national land bank, and it proceeds to business. Now, that is the only Government aid in it, and that is no more than was provided in our national reserve system, our new banking system, namely, that in case national banks do not subscribe to the capital stock the Government should subscribe it. So we have $10,000,000 as an operating fund. The bank loans the $10,000,000 and issues bonds, turning it over and over, without limit. Now, then, under the Hollis system the amount of loans that the bank can issue is limited to 20 times its capital stock. The landschaft issues its bonds over and over again, and has no capital stock; so I take the $10,000,000 and turn it over and over again, issuing bonds, selling the bonds, and making additional loans. The idea that the security of the farmer depends upon the capital stock of the bank is not sound. It is the farmer that furnishes the security, and the little bank stock is comparatively insignificant. So I provide for an unlimited issue of bonds, based upon mortgages equal to only half the value of the land. Under the provisions of my bill any amount of loans may be made.

Now, I provide a reserve fund. A certain percentage of the interest is set apart every year to accumulate as a reserve fund up to many million dollars, so that that reserve fund would stand amply good to meet any losses that occurred from defective loans. I create a reserve fund that is as good as Government credit. A proper reserve fund makes these bonds as good as Government security. While I will vote for any Government aid that may be necessary, however, if we have a proper system, if we throw around it the proper safeguards, we can have a system of land credit that will provide ample credit, with interest just as low as we would get through any Government guaranty. That is what I believe. Now, there are other considerations. Mr. Herrick, in his book on land credits, says the key to every land-credit system of any importance is the land bond or debenture.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. I know the gentleman from Oklahoma has given this matter very considerable thought. I do not desire to embarrass him, but I would like to know whether in any of these bills there is any provision by which a man who wanted to start a business, not a farming business, but, say, the oil-well business or wanted to start a mercantile establishment, could go and get any help at all from the Government?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Of course the gentleman knows that this is a system entirely to provide a land credit. Now, then, I am in favor of a system of personal credits that would help the farmer or help the poor people in any way that is possible, but the personal-credit system we have not begun on. That has to be worked out. I know the gentleman is not serious, however [applause], in his proposition. Now, I propose a system of land credit, say, that contains every necessary element without Government guaranty, and without the issue of Government bonds. Now, one of my objections to the Hollis bill is that it is not economical. It can not be economically administered. There are too many banks to be supported. More than this, securities issued by one bank will sell better on the market than the securities issued by a dozen banks. Now, think about that.

The United States has better credit than the small republics of the south. The Steel Corporation has better credit than its insignificant competitors. The great department stores can borrow money cheaper than the small groceries around the corner, and so one central bank, issuing bonds of a standard character, with supervision over loans by authority of the United States, will soon acquire a standing, reputation, and prestige among investors that you never will have with these 10, 20, 40, or 50, or 100 banks issuing these debentures and bonds. If you pass this bill you have many banks issuing bonds; one bond may be red and another white and still another blue. These debentures go out to the investing public. Investors will not know who to trust. They will not know which bond is best; but if these bonds are issued from one great bank, a central institution, they will have a prestige that the bonds issued by these other various banks will not have.

Gentlemen, France started out to establish many banks, but after a trial she changed her system, and that one great land bank of France, the Crédit Foncier, with $45,000,000 capital, is the only bank in France that is making loans upon farm mortgages of any consequence. You will discredit the farmer's security by sending it out by numerous obscure banks. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary situation upon the matter of rural-credits legislation is a rather peculiar one at this juncture on account of the eleventh-hour amendment that Senator MCCUMBER succeeded in placing on the Agricultural bill. Personally, I have always believed and advocated sane rural-credits legislation, and on account of the great importance of the subject I would prefer to see this matter come into the House direct from the Banking and Currency Committee and to be treated and considered by the House with plenty of time for debate and deliberation, so that the best possible measure could be evolved in the interests of the public. Now, I wish to make some observations in answer to some of the criticisms of those who are not familiar with farm-mortgage securities by stating that the general experience in Iowa, and in many other States where this class of security is standard, has been highly satisfactory to the investor. And there are many banking institutions and loan agencies that have never lost a dollar in principal or interest in loans upon Iowa land. I think that this class of investments, properly safeguarded, offers more substantial safety than some of the securities that meet with particular favor in eastern banking centers, and the record of safety of farm mortgages when properly safeguarded will compare very favorably with any class of investments.

It is possible that in the State of Iowa there are a great many farmers who are no longer in the borrowing class, but, on the other hand, there are the young men on the farms who have the ambition to acquire their own farms and homes and who have the energy and character, if they are provided with an opportunity, to successfully carry though such a proposition. And there are many farmers who are now tenants, who have accumulated a sufficient sum to make a substantial payment on a farm, who would be greatly encouraged under facilities that could be offered in a proper rural-credits bill that would insure them a low rate of interest and, under the amortization plan, a long number of years in which to pay off the obligation.

Legislation of this character will stimulate the farming industry and give an impetus to a more intensive system of farming. Again, while a great many farmers have benefited from substantial appreciation in the value of their acreage, yet many of these have been seriously set back through the visitation of hog cholera and the foot-and-mouth disease. Many of them have lost their entire herds, and, in some cases, the ravages of these diseases present an economic tragedy. Therefore, a rural-credits legislation of the proper character will prove a boon to many of these so situated.

During my term of Congress I have been very much interested in problems and legislation that affect the farmer. And, although I am personally interested in farming, I do not look at this question from a selfish viewpoint, but rather from the broad plane that the betterment of agricultural conditions builds up the Nation as a whole. Moreover, provision for and the feeding of our American people are fast becoming serious problems, and an encouragement of the farming interests will tend to a wider production that will eventually be felt by the laboring class of the cities as well as the country in bringing about conditions that will tend to relieve the question of the high cost of living.

Generally speaking, legislation should be regarded by every Representative in the broad sense, and a Member of the Congress should address himself to legislative problems not in a narrow, partisan, or sectional sense, but bearing in mind those principles that sustain and make for the greatest good to the greatest number. In this present session of Congress we have been confronted with impressive and perplexing problems and situations. We have felt the reflection of influences and conditions that are world-wide. It is a time that calls for the broadest and highest standards of patriotism, and I am frank to say that if I were serving as a Democrat under a Republican administration, my sense of partisanship would disappear in my desire to accord to the administration of my country in such a crisis a support and loyalty that would represent the highest ideals of patriotism to which I could aspire, for, after all, what signifies the prestige of a party as compared to the perpetuity of the Republic?

With so many of the powerful nations of the earth engaged in a death grapple and situations of the most delicate nature arising that might possibly involve us in difficulties, we should all repair to the old-fashioned and splendid principles of our fathers and rally to the support of our Chief Executive, the President of the United States, in these moments of trial. But few of the Presidents have had such serious conditions to analyze and to handle as has Woodrow Wilson. And, added to the weight and burdens of the high office, there came that shadow into the White House, and which fell upon the entire Nation, when the wife of the President passed sweetly and courageously into the setting sun of life. The heart of the country has gone out to him in this sad visitation. And now, with the European war and the Mexican problem, there is a call for fealty from every element of the citizenship of this country.

It is not a time for narrowness or small and petty influences. The big, broad Americans who can "see and think continentally" must give their best efforts and labors to bear down on disintegrating forces, of whatever character, that this Nation may come safely through her crisis and attain to the ideals and purposes for which the Republic was founded. As a native of Iowa, and trained by parents who loved this land of ours with a broad devotion, and as one who received his first impressions and conception of patriotism at the knees of a mother who herself was born, you might say, within the shadow of Bunker Hill. I feel an intense and abiding affection for my country, and I yield to none in reverence for her free institutions. And I trust the day is not far distant when, under the leadership and unselfish influences of great and loyal Americans, there shall develop a splendid unity and harmony in the varied and cosmopolitan element of our citizenship, so that if the exigency should arise or a crisis develop that this country would present a solid front and exhibit to the world a standard of Americanism of which we could all feel proud. What a blessing it is that in these days of international conflict we find our own Nation at peace. And mingled with this sense of gratitude of our own condition I can not help but feel a peculiar sense of depression and sadness at the situation that now exists in Europe, because not many years ago I happened to be a student at the University of Oxford and later lived as a student in the old German university at Heidelberg. I had already been graduated from two of our foremost American universities, but, having in mind to pursue a special line of work, decided on postgraduate work in England and Germany. And so I have a great many very dear and intimate student friends fighting under the colors of the allies and equally dear and close associates who are offering their young lives under the flag of the Kaiser.

Many of these friends have already given the last full measure of devotion to their country. Others have been wounded, and others overcome by the sickness of camp and battle field. And knowing the intense patriotism that these universities have developed, I feel that these men are respectively presenting their services in ungrudging measure. And even as many of them lie now upon the field of battle, when the eyes grow dim and the heart beats wane, a sight of their colors induces the thrill of patriotism. But sometimes I feel that if beside the flag of their own country they could see in the bright sunlight the Stars and Stripes they would appreciate that after all they represent the one great Nation of the world that is at peace with the rest of the world, and that the stars of this flag are sending out the same old message that came from the star of Bethlehem, a "Peace on earth and a good will toward men"; and that that flag to-day represents the custodian of the different belligerent nations in their diplomatic and consular affairs. Let us pray that the influence of this flag may in the near future bring the spirit and glory of peace to these nations now at war. Let us pray also that this flag will continue to grow in power, because, after all, the power and influence and character of the flag is only what we ourselves make it. And it will stand for greatness and prestige and liberality and tolerance only as we, the units of citizenship, in our own characters represent these attributes.

During my membership in this House some of the leaders of my party in Iowa presented to me, as a matter of party service, that I should make the race for the United States Senate. It was against my own judgment and inclination. Good fortune attended my contest for the nomination, and in a State-wide primary my party selected me as its standard bearer, although opposed by one of the most distinguished citizens of Iowa.

In the November elections, while I was the recipient of a splendid and impressive vote, the State of Iowa, as has been her custom, returned a Republican, the present senior Senator, and one of the possible nominees of his party for the Presidency of the United States.

I bear no ill will toward him or any other political opponent. May God guide all toward a lofty standard of service to the country. It has been a privilege to serve in the Congress, and I leave it with a higher appreciation of the duties of American citizenship and the character of American representation, and a solemn renewal of the sacred vows of my American allegiance.

May the spirit of "charity toward all and malice toward none" pervade our lives and sentiments. Let us address ourselves to our neighbors and to the various elements of our citizenship in the spirit of high-minded and broad Christianity, that we may the better understand and labor for each other, so that our patriotism will spell a unity and harmony that will sustain the Government in any crisis and the attainment of its highest ideals; for the flag belongs to all of us—not to any particular section nor to any particular class.

I trust that the East may learn to know and to love the West in increasing sincerity, and the North and the South continue to cement the bonds of our national brotherhood; that "all may be for one and one may be for all." Then will the power and glory and prestige of our flag be wafted to the remotest corners of the globe as the emblem of the most beneficent and successful form of government that has ever been conceived by the mind of man.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is recognized.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the McCumber amendment. [Applause.] It must be perfectly clear to every Member of this House that if we hope for rural-credit legislation we must adopt either the Hollis amendment or the McCumber amendment. Now, the Hollis amendment means nothing to me and means nothing to my people. The latter understand rural-credit legislation to involve Government aid, and that is the kind of legislation we have talked from every stump in the South and the West. I am not disposed to vote for the so-called Bulkley amendment to the Hollis amendment. If we put the Bulkley amendment on the Hollis amendment it will never get through the United States Senate. You might just as well make up your minds now as later that you must take either the Hollis amendment or the McCumber amendment; and, faced by that kind of a situation, I am for the McCumber amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a proposition to this House. We have had a sort of baby show here to-night, and Members who introduced rural-credit bills have been exhibiting their offspring to the Members of this House without any hope whatever that those bills will be seriously considered or adopted. Now, I introduced a rural-credits bill. It was a perfectly good system, and I should like to have it read from the Clerk's desk to-night, but I have some sympathy for my friend, Maj. Williams, the Reading Clerk. I want him to remain with us yet a while; and, if we compel him to read all these bills, he will be in the hospital to-morrow. So I suggest that each of these fond "papas" be permitted to address the House for five minutes in explanation of his particular "pet." And then, if he wishes, he may print the "pet" in the RECORD. That will satisfy me and should satisfy my colleagues. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question before he takes his seat?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Would the gentleman make that statement in view of the fact that the McCumber amendment was the result of a conspiracy between certain Democrats and Mr. MCCUMBER to get that amendment attached as a rider upon the Agriculture appropriation bill?

Mr. KEATING. Well, if the gentleman knows of a conspiracy between certain Democrats and——

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman know that when a point of order was attempted to be made by a Democratic Senator, Senator MCCUMBER told him that if he would withdraw his motion——

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be protected from the gentleman from Georgia. [Laughter.] The version I heard of that incident was that the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol were asleep, and I am inclined to believe that was true, because that seems to be their normal condition. [Laughter.] But I do not care whether there was a conspiracy or not. I know, as a reasonable man, that I must make my choice to-night. I must take either the McCumber amendment or the Hollis amendment, and I shall take the McCumber amendment.

I refuse to play fast and loose with my platform obligations. I believe the people of this country want a rural-credits system which will force a radical reduction in their interest rates.

More than a year ago I introduced such a bill. It provided that we should take the limit off the amount which an individual might deposit in the Government's postal savings banks, and that the money thus turned over to the Government should be loaned to the farmers of this country at 4 per cent.

In operation, the system I suggested would be marvelously simple and marvelously effective as well.

The man who wanted to safeguard his savings would place them in a Government savings bank and would receive a moderate rate of interest, say 2 per cent. These deposits would amount to tens of millions of dollars, and the Government would be authorized to invest the money thus secured in first-class farm loans at 4 per cent. The difference between the 2 per cent paid the depositors by the Government and the 4 per cent received from the farmers would constitute a fund which would pay all the expenses of the system and leave a substantial balance for a surplus fund to guarantee against the possibility of loss.

The parliamentary situation to-night renders it difficult for me to offer my bill as an amendment. Under the circumstances, I intend to vote for the proposition which offers the farmers of this country the greatest measure of relief. I will vote for the McCumber amendment as it passed the Senate, and I will vote to strike the Hollis amendment from this bill.

It is not a rural-credits system, as the people of this country understand the term. In my judgment, it would be a great thing for the bankers of this country but a poor thing for the farmers of this country. I think we have legislated sufficiently for the bankers, and it is about time we did something for the farmers.

In this connection I wish to submit a telegram which I have just received:

DENVER, COLO., March 1, 1915.

Hon. EDWARD KEATING, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

We want you to support Senate rural-credits amendment. This is what we want. Oppose bankers' substitute.

COLORADO FARMERS' STATE UNION,
W. R. CALLICOTTE, Chairman.
LOUIS ROETHER, Secretary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, that Members who have introduced rural credits bills be permitted to address the House for five minutes and extend their remarks in connection with their bills.

Mr. MANN. That would mean everybody in the House.

Mr. LEVER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to those who have any idea of voting for a bill involving the principle of an organization, of a bank which is assisted by the Government, which may make loans directly to the farmers, that they should support the bill presented by way of amendment by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN]. I had the pleasure of reading that bill, as incorporated in his remarks, last Friday, and I have read it carefully since. It is a well-considered, carefully prepared bill, and not such a makeshift as was presented by the Senator from North Dakota and incorporated in the Agriculture appropriation bill.

Now, it has been asked here, if this law is passed, and banks such as this act provides for are organized, whether one wishing to borrow money for the development of an oil well can borrow money from such a bank. No; but I will say that for the last 50 years there have been banks in this country, fostered by the Federal Government, into which the Federal Government has poured its money without stint, by which oil wells have been developed [applause], and by which every other kind of business in the country has been assisted and fostered except the farming industry of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. No; I can not. In five minutes I can not yield. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me.

And now, when it is suggested that the Government provide for the organization of another kind of bank, a regular business organization, to take charge of the business of making loans to the agricultural interests of this country, these gentlemen stand here and raise their voices in holy horror against Federal aid, against putting any money into those banks from the Federal Treasury, or against the Government lending its credit in order to assist in the establishment and operation of those banks. But the Federal Government takes the money from the Postal Savinks Banks and loans it to the national banks, and charges only 2½ per cent interest, when that money is to be used for every purpose—oil-well business and every other line of industry, except farming. It puts $75,000,000 in cold money into the national banks of this country, charging them only 2 per cent interest, leaving it there permanently—because the President told us from that desk yonder that that money could not be withdrawn—for use in every line of business except for the development of agriculture.

Until a year ago, until the passage of the Federal reserve act, it was impossible for the national banks or any financial institutions recognized by national law and receiving aid from the National Government, to loan money upon real estate. Here is a proposition to organize regular Government institutions, Government-inspected, Government-controlled banks, in which a limited amount, in the first instance not to exceed $10,000,000, of Federal money shall be placed, and thereafter those who interest themselves in and obtain the advantage of them shall furnish the sinews of war and carry on the work of those organizations.

Some of you would prefer to support the amendment that has been offered by the Committee on Agriculture, for which I, as one of the committee, do not vouch just as it is presented, and organize a dividend-paying organization for personal advantage and personal profit, for speculation by private interests, starting out with paying the commissioner $12,000 a year, 66 per cent above the amount Members of this House receive for their services.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FOWLER was recognized.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, has all the time been allotted by agreement for the discussion of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FLOOD). Yes. There will be five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE. Will there be any opportunity for any one opposed to the amendment to speak?

The CHAIRMAN. There will be five minutes more debate on the amendment.

Mr. MOORE. But no one has been heard in oposition to the amendment. I call the attention of the Chair to that fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know how gentlemen stood with reference to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE. But the time has been allotted by agreement, so that the Chair has no discretion in the matter?

The CHAIRMAN. None at all.

Mr. MOORE. So there will be no opportunity for debating the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, for four years agitation has been going on in this Congress for the enactment of a system of rural credits, and we have had various bills proposed in the House, but none have been reported favorably. Now, on the eve of adjournment, when we have a bill which comes from the Senate, as an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, apparently giving relief to the farmers, we find the House divided on the question as to whether we shall have Government aid or a system of land money-loaning organizations throughout the country. Mr. Chairman, a rural-credit system without the aid of the Government and Government control of the stock is nothing but Greek to the farmers of this country. We already have loaning organizations throughout the country, and the farmers have been imposed upon by all of them to a greater or less extent. What the farmer needs is a system with a low rate interest. Any system which does not begin with the farmer, stay with the farmer, and end with the farmer is not worth the paper it is written on. Any "pussy footing" around in this House for the purpose of devouring national aid to a rural-credit plan will not be tolerated by the farmers and their friends.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; in a minute. We passed a Federal reserve act for the purpose of giving aid to the banks of this country in time of distress, so that panics may be avoided. In that we provided a section for long-time loans to the farmers of this country. But the banker, like every other business man, will invest his money where he can get the greatest returns from it, and so the farmers are not getting and will not get very much benefit from that section of the Federal reserve act. Mr. Chairman, it is no time for us to quibble here on the question as to whether the Senate or the House initiated this legislation, or whether the Republicans or the Democrats initiated it. The only question that should be considered is the question of immediate and permanent relief. The home builders and the home-seekers have been wading through the bogs of high rates of interest long enough, and the time has come now when they should have permanent relief.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. I take it that the gentleman's position is simply this on rural credits, that at this time it is the McCumber bill or nothing.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, before I leave Congress I want to vote for a measure which will become a law, and, in my opinion, the only measure which has a shadow of a chance of becoming law is the McCumber amendment. [Applause.] I promised to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Where is your authority for the statement that the farmers are the only ones who want to borrow money at a low rate of interest?

Mr. FOWLER. I did not so state, but the farmers, home-seekers, and home builders are entitled to relief. They demand it and will not accept no for an answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and upon a division (demanded by Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma) there were 27 ayes and 93 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "that," and insert the following:

"The President of the United States is authorized, empowered, and directed to establish and put in operation a system of farm land credits for the purpose of promoting farm home ownership and increasing the productiveness of agriculture, by enabling citizens, both male and female, engaged in tilling the soil and raising farm products, or who may wish to procure farm homes for the purpose of engaging in such occupation, to procure capital funds on long terms at a low rate of interest, to be repaid on the amortization plan.

"For such purposes the President is authorized and directed to establish in the Department of Agriculture a separate division, to be known as the Farm Land Credit Bureau, hereinafter called the bureau, to be controlled and operated by a Farm Land Credit Board, hereinafter called the board, to be appointed by the President, a majority of whom shall be practical farm citizens, and who for more than five years immediately preceding their appointment shall have been actually engaged in farming. The salaries and terms of the members of said board and all agents and employees thereof shall be fixed by the President on a basis of terms and salaries of similar officials and employees in other departments of the Government.

"The Farm Land Credit Board shall be authorized and empowered:

"(a) To establish, prescribe, and fix, subject to the limitations of this act, such rules, regulations, requirements, limitations, and forms and use such agencies and exercise such further powers as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, No speculative or profit-making agency shall be used, nor shall a system of banks and their attendant expense be established, nor shall any rule or regulation be made requiring any farmer to subscribe to any stock in any corporation or association, or incur any collective liability in order to procure a loan.

"(b) To fix such limitations and make such requirements as will prevent the use of the system for land speculation and limit its benefits to the national economic need of fostering farm home owning and development by actual bona fide farmers.

"(c) To make amortization loans to citizens of the class hereinbefore described, to run in series of from 5 to 35 years, at the option of the borrower, such loans to be secured by first mortgages on farm lands owned by the applicants and used by them in raising farm products, or lands to be bought for such purpose, and partly paid for by such loans. The borrower shall have the privilege of paying the entire principal at any annual interest-paying date after five years, or make payments thereon of $50 or any multiple thereof. Such loans shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent. The date on which the borrower receives the money from his loan shall be the date from which the interest runs. The board shall determine the amount of each loan, but any person who is entitled to a loan shall, if such person desires, receive as a loan as much as 50 per cent of the actual value of the land and 25 per cent of the value of the improvements thereon and as much additional as the board may deem safe and prudent. In addition to the annual interest payment and annual amortization payment there shall be collected annually on each loan a sum not to exceed one-fifth of 1 per cent, which shall constitute an indemnity fund to meet any loss that may be occasioned by default in payment of any loan, or for the purpose of carrying the annual payments of any borrower who by reason of drought, flood, famine, or other unavoidable disaster may be in temporary default.

"(d) To issue and sell bonds, using the proceeds thereof in making the loans provided for by this act, buying said bonds at par when deemed best, and retiring said bonds at maturity. Such bonds shall be of the tenor and form and for a term prescribed by the board and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, whose duty it shall be to cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against fraud and counterfeiting. The plates and dies and bonds prepared but not sold shall be under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall not permit an issue of such bonds at any time in any amount in excess of the amount of notes and first mortgages deposited with him in trust by the board to secure the bonds outstanding; nor shall he permit the issuance of any bonds against any of such mortgages unless the amortization payments to be made on the notes secured by such mortgages are sufficient to retire said loans at maturity. Such bonds shall state on their face that they are based upon farm mortgages and that the principal and interest thereof are guaranteed by the United States. Such bonds shall be sold at not less than par at the lowest possible rate, not to exceed 4 per cent, due notice of the proposed sale being given. Such bonds shall be in denominations of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, a sufficient number of small denominations to be sold to meet the demands of the small investors, preference being given to that class of bidders in the sales thereof. Such bonds shall be registered and issued by series. Such bonds shall be exempt from all taxes and dues—Federal, State, and local—and shall constitute a legal investment for all fiduciary or trust funds, for postal savings funds, and for all national banks, including the Federal reserve banks.

"(e) To employ such examiners, assistants, clerks, or other employees or agencies as may be deemed necessary to conduct the business of the bureau and to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, however, That in the selection of appraisers local persons, including farmers, well acquainted with the particular tract of land upon which a loan is sought shall be designated: Provided further, That the board may employ general appraisers and inspectors, familiar with lands in the territory in which they work, for the purpose of gathering general information as to the land values and conditions, and for the further purpose of inspecting each loan annually, or oftener if necessary, to ascertain fraud, changed conditions, waste, overvaluation, or other facts necessary, upon which the board may take such action as will protect the system against loss or fraud. All funds received by the board shall be trust funds to carry out the purposes of this act, and shall be deposited, held, and paid out as may be directed by rules and regulations established by the President.

Any person entitled to a loan under this act may make application through any postmaster on blanks to be provided by the bureau through the postmaster, such application to be sworn to before the postmaster, who shall mail the same to the bureau or to such examiner or agent as the board may direct. All local appraisers shall be selected by the postmaster upon direction of the board and pursuant to rules and regulations of the board, such appraisers to be without interest in the proposed loan, and make their sworn appraisal on forms to be furnished by the board. If in the judgment of the board the applicant is entitled to a loan, that the purpose for which the loan is procured is within the purposes of this act, and that the title to the land is clear and constitutes a safe security for the amount sought, the applicant shall execute a mortgage in the form provided by the board. Such mortgage shall contain proper provision for foreclosure in case of default or for fraud or misrepresentation in procuring the loan: Provided, That in case of foreclosure by default the borrower shall have one year in which to redeem from sale. State courts shall have the same jurisdiction of all proceedings based on the loans made under this act that they would have were the loan one made to the borrower from a source other than the bureau.

That no fee or charge of any kind whatsoever by way of commission shall be exacted or demanded or paid for granting or obtaining loans from said bureau, and any official or other person, except abstracters and registers of mortgages, who shall charge any commission or fee, or any other person who shall, directly or indirectly, exact, demand, or receive any fee for service in obtaining a loan, or any applicant for a loan who shall knowingly make any false statement in his application, and any appraiser who shall willfully overvalue any land, or any person who shall knowingly make any false statement in any application, appraisal, or report made under the operations of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined in any sum not to exceed $1,000, and may be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both.

That the sum of $100,000, or such part thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want a little time.

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 10 minutes, then.

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, are all of these speeches to be on one side of the question?

Mr. LEVER. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Will not the gentleman make an allowance of five minutes for some one in opposition? Some of us on this side have heard all these speeches on one side only.

Mr. LEVER. The time is controlled by the Chair, and the Chair usually recognizes gentlemen on alternate sides.

Mr. MOORE. May I control five minutes in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman desire five minutes himself?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; I would like to control five minutes, because I think that after four or five hours' debate something should be said on the side of the great industrial and commercial interests of the country.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], 10 minutes by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. NEELEY], and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, there is embodied in the amendment I have just offered a modification of the rural credits plan which I have been advocating. The amendment as presented does not represent my views in detail, as I have taken out some of the things from my original plan which I did not like to take out and I have put in some provisions that I did not like to put in, but I have taken out those things and put in others in an effort to try to harmonize the differences of those of us who believe in rural credits. I recognize, Mr. Chairman, that at this late hour and in the peculiar parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves there is no hope to have my plan considered to the extent necessary to have you adopt it as a substitute for the pending proposition. I recognize that owing to the peculiar parliamentary situation Members are necessarily compelled to choose between what is known as the McCumber amendment, which was put on this bill in the Senate, and what is known as the Hollis amendment, which has been reported to the House from the House committee, to which the Senate amendment was referred. I regret that the situation is such that the friends of rural credits are compelled to choose between these two propositions, because, to my mind, neither one is a practical rural credits measure. One of them, the McCumber amendment, recognizes the principle of Government aid, while the Hollis proposition is nothing more than a competitive, profit-making land-mortgage bank scheme, too cumbersome to use, too limited and complicated in its terms to be of any practical benefit to the American farmers, who are in need of proper rural credits facilities.

Being compelled to choose between these two measures, and recognizing that neither of them stands any chance of being put to a practical test by being put into operation, I shall vote to concur in the McCumber amendment in order to express my conviction that Government aid is necessary for the establishment of a rural credits system in this country. Then, again, I am led to vote to concur in the Senate amendment, because I believe it more nearly meets the needs of the American farmer and is in keeping with his demands. The Hollis bill, if enacted into a law, would be of no benefit to the farmers of Arkansas except in a few isolated instances. Under the Hollis plan, if a farmer wishes a loan upon his land he must get four of his neighbors to join with him in organizing a $10,000 bank, to be known as a farm-loan association, and each of them must take $2,000 worth of stock. Of the $10,000 capital thus put up they must first take $2,000 and invest this amount in United States Government bonds, and take the remaining $8,000 and deposit the same in a national bank. This local bank thus formed will be authorized to make loans to the farmers in its community, but before any farmer can get a loan he must purchase capital stock of this bank to an amount equal to 5 per cent of the amount he wishes to borrow. In other words, the Hollis bill simply authorizes the farmer to loan his own money to himself, provided he will organize a corporation and buy $2,000 worth of Government bonds.

This gives the farmer no additional right, because he has a right to use his own money now. In other words, the Hollis bill in effect tells the farmer that he needs "lifting," and that the Federal Government very graciously extends to him the privilege of lifting himself by his own boot straps. I wish to say to those who propose the Hollis land-bank scheme that the American farmer has been fleeced too often in being induced to subscribe to stock in some corporation, which he is told is organized for his benefit, but which to his sorrow he has found is organized for the sole purpose of taking his money away from him. He does not intend to subscribe to any more stock schemes nor will he be satisfied with a profit-making, speculative land-banking system, by being told that it is a rural-credit system. He knows that such a scheme is not a rural-credit system and will have nothing to do with it. I know that some farmers have been led into indorsing the Hollis-Bulkley bill by explanations of it which have appeared in some of the farm papers. I have one of these indorsements to-day, which inclosed a newspaper clipping describing the Hollis-Bulkley bill. This clipping states that under the Hollis-Bulkley bill the rate of interest shall not exceed 5 per cent. This statement is false, for the limit that the Hollis-Bulkley bill places on the interest rate is the limit of interest fixed by the law, which in my State would be 10 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, those who propose an expensive, cumbersome, speculative, profit-making land-bank scheme to meet the demand for rural-credit legislation have not grasped the theory of rural credits. The only justification that the Government has for legislation of this character is that justification, which is based upon meeting a great economic national necessity, which in this case is represented by the national need to promote farm-home ownership in this country, and increasing the productiveness of American farms, so as to check the dangerous tendency which the census reports show is on the increase in the number of tenants in the country, and the passing of the farm lands into the hands of the large holders. A proper rural credit plan will be one that will enable the poor farmer who is struggling to get a home and develop a farm to procure his capital funds at a reasonable rate of interest and upon such terms as not to be burdensome. What chance is there under an expensive land banking scheme like the Hollis plan for a young farmer who is starting out in life and wishes to purchase a piece of land upon which to make his home and clear up and develop a farm? Where can the tenant farmer get a home under the Hollis system? Take the farmer who has only 80 acres, and has five sons all growing up, and he wishes for these five sons to purchase and develop and make farm homes for themselves. I ask you what assistance can these boys get under the Hollis plan? Absolutely none.

But, Mr. Chairman, why discuss the relative merits of these two plans? The only interest in discussing them is for the purpose of determining which of the two plans you will vote for to-night, for the sole purpose of expressing your sentiments, because, I take it, that no man here is so foolish as to believe that any rural-credit legislation by this Congress will come out of this situation to-night. None of you regard this performance other than a legislative game of hide and seek being played between the Senate and the House for the purpose of placing the blame each upon the other for failure to carry out the pledges we have made to the American farmer. Each one of you know that the only possible chance to get rural-credit legislation at this session is to vote for the McCumber amendment, because if you vote for that and the House adopts it, it goes into the law, because the Senate has already passed it, and it would then be beyond the control of both Houses and of the conferees, as they could not eliminate it from this bill when they go into conference; but, on the other hand, if you vote down the McCumber amendment and you vote for the Hollis amendment, that action will send this bill to conference and give the conferees an opportunity to eliminate rural credits from this bill and kill all hope of legislation at this session.

It is the same old game of hide and seek that has been played between the two Houses many times in the past, and the American farmer will know it. You can not deceive him by telling him that the Senate would not concur to the House amendment, and then have the Senate tell him that the House would not concur in the Senate amendment, and each try to place the blame upon the other. [Laughter and applause.] He has heard that excuse too often and knows that it is nothing more than excuse given to justify a neglect to legislate.

How did this situation arise, Mr. Chairman? Was it because that a majority of either House wished to consider rural-credit legislation at this session? No, Mr. Chairman; it is not by premeditation and design that we are now considering rural credits, but it is because somebody went to sleep in the Senate, when those who oppose rural-credit legislation thought they had it killed for this session of Congress. How did it happen, Mr. Chairman, that the Senate passed the McCumber amendment by unanimous consent? I will describe the scene for you. There were six tired and sleepy Senators sitting in their seats the other night, and one of their distinguished number, Senator MCCUMBER, was delivering a speech on rural credits, which, I believe, all of his colleagues thought was being made for home consumption.

But he wound up his speech by offering this amendment. Three of the six Senators were asleep, one of the others was the distinguished and able blind Senator from Oklahoma, and these four, with Senator MCCUMBER and Senator HOLLIS, constituted the Senate upon that occasion. Senator HOLLIS at first objected to the amendment, which objection would have killed it, but after a few words whispered in his ear by the Senator from Oklahoma he withdrew his objection. I know not what the Oklahoma Senator said to the New Hampshire Senator, but, no doubt, the Senator from New Hampshire withdrew his objections because he saw an opportunity to have his bill—that is, the Hollis bill—adopted in conference. So the McCumber amendment was adopted as a rider to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and to the surprise of everybody, and especially to it, the United States Senate passed a bill of great import by unanimous consent and without debate. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, for over a hundred years this Government has been fostering the manufacturing and industrial interests of this country. In the beginning of our history we were an agricultural people and had no manufacturing enterprises, and were therefore at the mercy of the manufacturers of Europe, and our forefathers very properly determined by wise legislation to foster manufacturing enterprises in this country, and we have pursued this policy of fostering the manufacturing interests down to the present time.

All of our energies and most of our legislation have had for their central aim the building up of great industrial enterprises and the fostering of our commercial interests to the neglect of agriculture. That is the history of this country, but you know that the time has arrived when agriculture, which has been so long neglected, must be taken into consideration, and equal attention be given it in the framing of our laws and in the development of our governmental policies. The one thing needed to do this is to pass a practical, simple, bona fide rural-credit bill, and sooner or later you will be compelled to do it. You can dodge this issue if you want to. You can play with it to-night, as you are playing with it. You can vote down the McCumber amendment, as those who are opposed to this legislation intend to do, and adopt the Hollis land-bank scheme, thinking that by sugar-coating it with the Bulkley so-called Government-aid provision you can deceive the American farmer, but you are mistaken. Why not face this question like statesmen, and not like politicians? Why not meet this great economic problem and solve it as men who think of the future, and not like politicians who think alone of their present political interests. The only chance you have for rural-credit legislation at this Congress is to vote for the McCumber amendment. It is not what we would like to have, but it is a step in the right direction. If you vote down the McCumber amendment and substitute for it the Hollis land-bank scheme and throw this bill into conference, you lose your only chance to get legislation at this session. The issue is clear-cut, so let no man be deceived. Those who oppose rural-credit legislation, as well as those who oppose Government aid, will vote solidly against the McCumber amendment and for the Hollis land-bank scheme; so let no man who favors rural-credit legislation be misled into following in their footsteps. [Applause.]

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to indorse the most of what my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has said, but I also desire to both congratulate and apologize, to congratulate the Republican Party that one of its Senators found six Senators so sleepy that he was able to startle the Senate and attract the attention of this House and the country to an unfulfilled Democratic promise and to felicitate that party upon the fact that it has thrown into this House six or eight undigested farm-loan bills and has forced an issue of rural credits upon the country. [Applause.] A year ago last August we held a prolonged Democratic caucus in this very room, and I then offered a motion to open the doors of that caucus so that every man or woman who wanted to hear the proceedings could do so and might know exactly what took place. [Applause.] That motion was voted down. I said then that I thought it was bad politics, that the bill should be framed in the white light of public criticism, and the situation confronting us to-night is additional proof of the fact. We made a fight in that caucus to secure the adoption of certain amendments which, if adopted, would have laid a deep foundation for rural-credit legislation, and which we believed should be incorporated in the currency bill, and finally, after we had been here three weeks, lacking one day, a compromise was effected and certain gentlemen came upon the floor of that caucus and stated that they were authorized to state that if this rural-credits proposition that was then ready to be offered was withheld that the subject would be taken up in due time and in regular order, so that it might be given the consideration which the importance of legislation of this character demanded that it should receive before being enacted into law. The advocates of rural-credit legislation believed that pledge was offered in good faith, and they accepted the offer in that spirit and kept their part of the pact. The President of the United States came out in a newspaper interview in which he stated that rural credits was the next great project to be taken up, and he stated that at the proper time he would call the attention of Congress to this most important matter and urge its enactment. The President did exactly as he stated he would do, and when Congress convened in December he appeared before the two Houses and urged rural-credit legislation. This matter has never been considered by the Banking and Currency Committee as a committee. Certain members of this committee have been insisting for over a solid year that this question of rural credits that we are now being charged with having neglected be presented to this committee and that they be given an opportunity to take it up and consider it. During the time we were considering the currency bill in the caucus a year ago last August a motion was made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY]——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. I can not yield now; I am sorry, for I have only five minutes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I wanted to ask who kept you——

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. I am coming to that. A motion was made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] that a committee be appointed to take up this matter and to report before the end of this Congress. I offered an amendment to that motion that this committee be instructed to report before the beginning of the last session of the present Congress, and the motion as amended was adopted. A subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee was appointed. It began its deliberations in the fall of 1913, and finally, in May, 1914, a bill, supposed to embody the result of the deliberations of that subcommittee, was introduced in the House. There has never been any action on the part of that committee from that day to this looking to the enactment of rural-credit legislation, and six weeks ago the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], in an open session of the Banking and Currency Committee, made a motion that the committee immediately proceed to take up and consider the question of rural credits, with a view of reporting a bill to this House for passage, but that motion was voted down. Every Republican member of that committee, if my recollection serves me aright, voted against the motion, and reenforced by three Democrats, who joined hands with them, they then and there ended all opportunity for deliberation on the subject of rural-credit legislation during this Congress.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. I do.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And that was done in the face of a Democratic caucus here, directing us to bring out rural-credit legislation?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Yes; an explicit instruction and direction. I am glad that Senator MCCUMBER has put this amendment on this bill. [Applause.] I know that it is not perfect. It looks to me as though its author had simply called in a stenographer and dictated it in an hour or so without giving the matter very serious consideration. But with all of its faults, with all of its failures, and with all of its shortcomings I am ready to vote for it and really start the ball of rural credits to rolling. [Applause.] And if you Democrats do not like that kind of hit-and-miss legislation, why, in the name of heaven, do you not help us to get a committee organized for business and get a bill that is decent? [Applause.]

We could not get that committee together.

Only six weeks ago they came to our committee with a resolution to create another committee, this time to investigate the subject of personal credits, and I made the statement then in the committee room, and I believe it now, that all this personal-credit agitation was designed and intended to kill rural-credit legislation. I believe it was conceived in sin and born in iniquity, and I propose to do my part as I see it by endeavoring to at least make a start here and now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the farmer is certainly "in the hands of his friends" to-night. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But there is no one here to speak for the great industrial interests. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] We must swallow this bill. Nobody dares to speak against it for fear he will be accused of representing the trusts, the oil companies, the great monopolies, such as recently induced our Democratic President to urge the passage of a ship-purchase bill in order that we might employ foreign labor to build ships at American expense.

But even so, the farmer may yet ask to be "saved from his friends," because they are not unitedly representing his case. Some of them are proving too much. They are proving the farmer to be too downtrodden, too tax ridden. While there is nonemployment in the great cities, due to the fact that we are suffering from low tariffs and are paying more for farm products than we ever paid before, "the poor, downtrodden farmer" is apparently paying less for everything that comes out of the mill districts than he ever did before. While we are voting relief to the farmer, we are imposing increased taxation upon the man who dares to start our enterprises in the great cities.

We are making his burdens heavier and heavier. Some one has indicated that the Republican Party has done nothing for the farmer, but has specialized in the interest of the industrialist. The fact is the Republican Party started the Bureau of Agriculture which has developed into the present Department of Agriculture. It was established under the immortal Abraham Lincoln. [Applause on the Republican side.] The Republican Party also gave the farmer free rural delivery, and we are paying for it out of the common Treasury, and the industrialist pays his share, at a loss of probably $40,000,000 a year. That service was established under President Benjamin Harrison.

I do not know what the Democratic Party has done except to come here and wail over the condition of the American farmer; and yet to-day, when the people in my city who have employment, are fabricating goods for the farmer, and getting less for them than they ever got before, the farmer is getting more for what he sells to us—and we must have three meals a day—than ever before. The farmer is riding in automobiles to-day while we are beating the asphalt streets on foot. [Laughter and applause.] What are you giving to the industrialists? I find very little in any of the appropriation bills. You talk about "the special interests," and charge them up to the great cities. I challenge you to show what you are doing for the manufacturing interests of this country. You say we have the tariff. We do not have much, but such as we have is also enjoyed by the farmer. On the tariff proposition we stand to rise or fall together. Do not forget that.

Talk of appropriations to the great industrial interests. Where are they? I fail to find them. But take up the Agricultural bill. The cities contribute to that. We appropriated $26,000,000 only a few days ago for the purpose of taking care of the farmer from the time he goes out to brush the bugs off the berries in the garden to the time he gets into his automobile to run along the macadam road we are providing for him in order that he may get the prevailing high prices for his goods in the city. [Applause.] Why, in the sundry civil bill we have just voted $8,500,000 for forestry.

The city man has no special interest in that. In this same sundry civil bill we gave $14,500,000 for irrigation. That is at the rate of about $7,500 per farm irrigated. Come into Pennsylvania or New Jersey and I will sell you all the farms you want, with fine buildings on them, under cultivation, near a market, for less than you are spending on your irrigated farms in arid or semiarid country. Talk about what you have done for us. Look at your river and harbor bill. There is $31,000,000 in it this year, and one-half of it goes down the Mississippi Valley to protect farm lands against inundation. You are doing very little for us in the great cities except to make us pay. Bear that in mind. My friend from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] reminds me that the bankers get money from the Government. Yes; they get from the Government about $75,000,000—that is a mere bagatelle—and they buy Government bonds and pay interest on them in order to get even this small sum to lend to the farmers of the country. I presume they would still survive even if the Government withdrew the money. You passed a Federal reserve bill here recently, and said you were going to provide a credit system for the farmer. You did take care of the farmer in that bill and permitted him to come in like other men and get loans on such credit as he had. But what can one say on a great topic like this in five minutes? I should like to tell you a few more things about what has been done for the farmer. In the campaign to please the farmer you have depopulated the mills and deprived the farmer of many of his best customers. You have thrown the mill workers out on the streets, but out in the country we are building roads, taking care of the forests, providing for the farmers' colleges, administering medicine to his cattle, destroying his bugs, and much else. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Then, I shall extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] is recognized.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute by striking out all after the word "that" and inserting the following:

"The short title of this act shall be 'National farm-land bank act.'

"DIVISION OF FARM-LAND BANKING.

"SEC. 2. That there is hereby created in the Department of Agriculture of the United States a separate division, to be known as the 'division of farm-land banking,' to be under the general direction and charge of a farm-land banking board, which is hereby created, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture (who shall be chairman), the Secretary of the Interior, and the Attorney General. The work of the division of farm-land banking shall be directed and its rules enforced by a director of farm-land banking, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve for a term of five years or until his successor is appointed and qualified, and he shall be eligible for reappointment. Such director of farm-land banking shall receive a salary of $7,500 per year, payable in equal monthly installments. There shall also be an assistant director of farm-land banking, similarly appointed, serving for a similar term, and receiving a salary of $6,000 per year, payable in equal monthly installments; and such assistant shall have all the powers of the director in case of his absence or disability. The director of farm-land banking shall employ from time to time the necessary clerks and assistants, to be appointed and classified by the Secretary of Agriculture, to discharge such duties as the director shall designate. Both the director and assistant director of farm-land banking shall furnish and execute a bond for the faithful performance of their duties in such amount as may be required by the farm-land banking board. Neither the director nor assistant director shall own any stock in, or receive any salary or emolument from, any national farm-land bank organized under this act. The director of farm-land banking shall annually make a report to Congress, giving a list of the national farm-land banks organized under this act, with the list of the officers and directors of each, and a detailed statement of their resources and liabilities, together with such other information as the farm-land banking board may require or as Congress may request. All salaries and operating expenses of the farm-land banking board, and of the director of farm-land banking, his assistants and employees, shall be provided for by special appropriation of Congress, to be included in and counted as part of the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS FOR FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 3. That within 90 days after the approval of this act, or as soon thereafter as may be, the farm-land banking board shall formulate and adopt the rules and regulations governing the operations of farm-land banks organized hereunder, in accordance with this act, which rules and regulations shall be enforced by the said director of farm-land banking and by his assistant, who shall likewise be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, within said 90 days, or as soon thereafter as may be.

"POWERS OF DIVISION OF FARM-LAND BANKING.

"SEC. 4. That the Division of Farm-Land Banking is authorized and empowered, upon proper application, and upon the recommendation of the director of farm-land banking, to issue charters or certificates of incorporation for the establishment of local national farm-land banks and State national farm-land banks, as herein provided for; and to exercise supervision and control over, and to make examinations of, all of the national farm-land banks established under this act, under such general rules and regulations as may be by it provided; and to withdraw or forfeit the charters of such local and State national farm-land banks, or liquidate such banks whenever necessary, in accordance with rules to be by it provided; subject in all respects to the requirements and provisions herein contained.

"SEC. 5. That the said Division of Farm-Land Banking is hereby authorized by general rules and regulations, applicable alike to all the local and State national farm-land banks organized hereunder, to specify the conditions under which the privileges, or certain of them, herein authorized to be granted to said local and State national farm-land banks, shall be extended to such banks; and particularly to provide for the extension of such privileges, or certain of them, only to local and State national farm-land banks operating in those States, which, by the passage of suitable laws, have met the requirements of the said Division of Farm-Land Banking.

"First. As to the simplification of land title registration and conveyancing;

"Second. As to the simplification and economy of methods of securing farm-land loans and of foreclosing the same;

"Third. As to the removal of any species of taxation, direct or indirect, which may exist upon farm-land mortgages or deeds of trust and the obligations secured thereunder, or upon collateral trust bonds (or national land-bank bonds against the same) issued by the United States farm-land bank; and

"Fourth. As to withdrawing or canceling the right under State laws to claim exemption or providing for the waiver of such exemption, whether homestead or otherwise, against the mortgages or deeds of trust and bonds or obligations secured thereunder, representing the loans made on farm lands by the local national farm-land bank, and as to the insertion of such waiver of exemptions in such mortgages, deeds of trust, and bonds or obligations secured thereunder wherever the laws of the State permit such waiver, all as more fully provided elsewhere in this act.

"The said division of farm-land banking shall have the power to specify the time when such rules and regulations will go into effect and the time within which such conditions must be complied with, and to extend and enlarge such time, and to withhold such privileges from the local and State national farm-land banks operating in any State failing to comply with such provisions and regulations until the same are fully complied with.

"SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the director of farm-land banking, shall furnish a seal for the farm-land banking board, shall furnish vaults and storage room for the preservation of its records and papers, shall supply offices for its operations and for the use of its officers and employees, and shall furnish current supplies.

"SYSTEM OF NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS AUTHORIZED.

"SEC. 7. That there is hereby authorized the creation of a system of national farm-land banks, as hereinafter more fully set out, embracing:

"First. Local national farm-land banks, such as 'Doeville national farm-land bank.'

"Second. State national farm-land banks, such as 'Virginia national farm-land bank.'

"Third. The United States national farm-land bank.

"All as hereinafter set forth.

"GENERAL POWERS OF ALL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 8. That every local and State national farm-land bank, and the United States farm-land bank, upon being properly organized as herein provided, and from the date of such organization, shall, in addition to the specific powers hereinafter conferred on the several national farm-land banks, have the following general powers:

"First. To be a body corporate.

"Second. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Third. To have succession for a period of 50 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association (or in the case of local and State national farm-land banks by the act of its shareholders owning two-thirds of the capital stock), or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law: Provided, That the charters of all local and State national farm-land banks shall be at all times subject to change, amendment, or repeal under laws enacted by Congress, and that the charter of the United States farm-land bank shall be at all times subject to change, amendment, or repeal by act of Congress: Provided further, That no such change, amendment, or repeal shall in any way affect the rights of the creditors of such national farm-land banks.

"Fourth. To make contracts.

"Fifth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law and equity, as fully as natural persons.

"Sixth. To elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to appoint officers, to define their duties, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, dismiss such officers or any of them at pleasure, and appoint others to fill their places, subject, however, to the conditions and restrictions contained in this act.

"Seventh. To prescribe by its board of directors by-laws, not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected or appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed, subject to the requirements and provisions set out in this act.

"Eighth. To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of farm-land banking.

"Provided, That the foregoing general powers are subject to the modifications, restrictions, limitations, and conditions elsewhere provided in this act for the specific institutions created hereunder, and are exercised under the direction, supervision, and control of the division of farm-land banking in accordance with general rules and regulations adopted and promulgated by it in conformity with the provisions of this act.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS REGARDING ALL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 9. That the following provisions shall apply to all national farm-land banks incorporated under this act, including the United States farm-land bank, except as otherwise provided herein:

"First. The capital stock of all local and State national farm-land banks, and of the United States farm-land bank, and the income derived therefrom, and the mortgages and deeds of trust and notes and bonds secured thereunder held by said banks, and the collateral trust bonds or national land-bank bonds issued by the United States farm-land bank shall be forever exempt from all Federal, State, local, or other taxation.

"Second. No national farm-land bank shall at any time loan any money upon the faith or credit or upon the assignment of its own stock or of the stock of any other national farm-land bank; nor shall any national farm-land bank loan to or on the credit of any one individual or institution, either on the security of land or on any other security, an amount in excess of 20 per cent of the sum of its then paid-in capital and surplus: Provided, That this latter provision shall not apply to the guaranty by local and State national farm-land banks of long-term real estate loans, as hereinafter provided.

"Third. Each director of each national farm-land bank, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves on him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of such bank, and will not knowingly violate or willing permit to be violated any of the provisions in this act. Such oath, subscribed by the director making it and certified by the officer before whom it is taken, shall be immediately transmitted to the director of farm-land banking and shall be filed and preserved in his office.

"Fourth. At least once in each three months, the directors of each national farm-land bank shall make a careful examination and verification of the affairs of the bank, entering the result in their minutes and forward a copy of the same, signed by a majority of the directors who made the examination, to the division of farm-land banking.

"Fifth. The director of farm-land banking, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall, as often as shall be deemed necessary or proper, appoint a suitable person or persons to make an examination without notice of the affairs of every national farm-land bank, who shall have power to make a thorough examination into all the affairs of the bank, and, in doing so, to examine any of the officers and agents thereof on oath, and who shall make full and detailed report of the condition of the bank to the director of farm-land banking. The person assigned to the making of such examination of the affairs of any national farm-land bank shall have the power to call together a quorum of the directors of such bank, who shall, under oath, state to such examiner the character and circumstances of such of its business as he may designate. All national farm-land bank examiners shall receive fixed salaries, the amount whereof shall be determined by the farm-land banking board, and annually reported to Congress; but the expense of the examinations herein provided for shall be assessed by the farm-land banking board upon the banks examined, in proportion to assets or resources held by such banks, upon a date during the year on which such examinations are held, to be established by the farm-land banking board. The director of farm-land banking shall so arrange the duties of these examiners that no two successive examinations of any bank shall be made by the same examiner. The provisions of section 22 of the Federal reserve act, prohibiting the making of any loan, or the granting of any gratuity to the examiner of a national bank, shall apply with equal force to examiners of national farm-land banks, and the penalties and punishments therein provided shall be equally applicable to such examiners of national farm-land banks.

"Sixth. The director of the farm-land banking shall, at the time of organization of each national farm-land bank, designate some individual who is not an officer or director of the bank and who is not objectionable to the directors of the bank, as a Federal fiduciary agent for that bank, and such agent shall be the representative of the division of farm-land banking. As such Federal fiduciary agent he shall have the following powers and duties:

"A. IN THE CASE OF LOCAL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"1. He shall certify on each mortgage or deed of trust that such mortgage or deed of trust has been properly recorded or registered in the proper land registry office and that the same is a first mortgage or first deed of trust upon the land thereby conveyed. Upon each note or bond secured under such mortgage or deed of trust he shall certify that such note or bond is so secured by such mortgage or deed of trust. No mortgage or deed of trust or note or bond secured thereunder shall be guaranteed by a local or State national farm-land bank, or shall be used as security for collateral trust bonds or national land-bank bonds issued by the United States farm-land bank, as hereinafter set out, unless and until the certificates above provided have been entered on the same by such Federal fiduciary agent for the local national farm-land bank making the loan.

"2. He shall have joint possession and control with the local national farm-land bank of all amortization payments or other payments made by the borrower upon the principal amount due on first mortgages or first deeds of trust, and upon the notes or bonds secured thereunder, held by the said bank as evidencing long-term loans, so long as such amortization or principal payments remain in the possession of the said bank. And he shall see that all proper credits are made upon the mortgages or deeds of trust, and the notes or bonds secured thereunder, when such payments are made; and that proper entries of such payments are made in the mortgage ledger as hereinafter provided; but no disposition shall be made of the funds derived from such amortization or principal payments except by and with his consent in writing.

"3. He shall have the supervisory control of all entries in the mortgage ledger kept by the bank, in which ledger shall be kept a detailed statement of all mortgages or deeds of trust, and notes or bonds secured thereunder, taken and held by the bank as an evidence of long-term loans, as well as such other information as may be required by the division of farm-land banking.

"And no entries shall be made in said mortgage ledger indicating the acceptance of mortgages, the withdrawal or substitution of mortgages, or credits on mortgages so held by the bank, except by and with his approval in writing, which approval may be signified by signing his name on the margin of the page in the mortgage ledger where such entries are made.

"B. IN THE CASE OF STATE NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"1. He shall have joint possession and control with the State national farm-land bank of the mortgages or deeds of trust, and of the notes or bonds secured thereunder, which are sent to the said State national farm-land bank by any local national farm-land bank, after being guaranteed by it, so long as such mortgages or deeds of trust and the notes and bonds secured thereunder are in the possession of said State national farm-land bank. And no mortgage or deed of trust, or note or bond secured thereunder, so coming into the joint possession of himself and the said State national farm-land bank, shall be disposed of in any way except by and with his consent in writing.

"2. He shall have joint possession and control with the bank of all amortization payments, or other payments made by the borrower upon the principal amount of first mortgages or first deeds of trust, and upon the notes and bonds secured thereunder, which shall come into the possession of the said State national farm-land bank through any local national farm-land bank; and no disposition shall be made of such amortization or principal payment funds except by and with his consent in writing.

"3. He shall have the supervisory control of all entries in the mortgage ledger kept by the said State national farm-land bank, in which ledger shall be kept a detailed statement of each mortgage or deed of trust, and of the notes and bonds secured thereunder, forwarded to said State national farm-land bank by any local national farm-land bank, together with a statement of the date of its receipt, a description of the same, and the statement as to whether such mortgage or deed of trust or the notes or bonds secured thereunder was indorsed or guaranteed by said State national farm-land bank, and what disposition was made of the same; together with such other information as may be required by the division of farm-land banking. And no entry shall be made in the said mortgage ledger indicating either the receipt of mortgages or deeds of trust or notes or bonds secured thereunder, or the withdrawal or substitution of the same, or credits on the same, when so held by the State national farm-land bank, except by and with his consent in writing, which approval may be signified by signing his name on the margin of the page in the mortgage ledger where such entries are made.

"C. IN THE CASE OF THE UNITED STATES FARM-LAND BANK.

"1. He shall certify to each collateral trust bond (to be known as national land-bank bonds) issued by the said bank, and no collateral trust bond issued without his signature shall be binding upon the said bank.

"2. He shall have joint possession and control with the bank of the mortgages or deeds of trust, and of the notes or bonds secured thereunder, together with any and all guaranties thereupon executed by State or local national farm-land banks, which are deposited as security for national land-bank bonds issued by the United States farm-land bank; and no mortgage or deed of trust or note or bond secured thereunder, so placed in the joint possession of himself and the said bank, shall be withdrawn or changed or have any credit made thereon, except by and with his consent in writing.

"3. He shall have joint control with the United States farm-land bank of all amortization payments, or other payments made by the borrower, upon the principal amount of first mortgages or first deeds of trust, and upon the bonds or notes secured thereunder, which are held as security for the national land-bank bonds issued by the United States farm-land bank, whether such payments are received directly from the borrower or through the State and local national farm-land banks. And no disposition shall be made of the funds derived from such amortization or principal payments except by and with his consent in writing.

"4. He shall have the supervisory control of all entries on the mortgage ledger kept by the United States farm-land bank, in which ledger shall be kept a detailed statement of each issue of national land-bank bonds or debentures made by the bank showing the date of issue, the rate of interest, the date of maturity, and the provisions for calling in and paying the same, together with a record of all mortgages or deeds of trust, and the notes or bonds secured thereunder, held by the said United States farm-land bank and himself, jointly, to secure the national land-bank bonds of the United States farm-land bank. The mortgage ledger shall also give a description of such mortgages or deeds of trust, giving the date of making, date of recording, a short description of the property conveyed, a description of the notes or bonds secured thereunder, with their date of issue and maturity, and a statement and description of the guarantee of the local and State national farm-land bank through which such mortgages or deeds of trust, and the notes or bonds secured thereunder came into the possession of the United States farm-land bank. And said mortgage ledger shall also show such other information as may be required by the division of farm-land banking. No entries shall be made in the said mortgage ledger indicating either the deposit of mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, the withdrawal or substitution of the same, or any of them, or any credits on any of such mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, so held by the United States farm-land bank, except by and with his approval in writing, which approval may be signified by signing his name on the margin of the page in the mortgage ledger where such entries are made.

"D. IN THE CASE OF ALL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"He shall perform such other duties as the director of farm-land banking shall prescribe and shall execute such bond, with such security as may be required by the director of farm-land banking. The salaries and expenses of such Federal fiduciary agent shall be fixed by the joint agreement of the bank for which he is acting and of the director of farm-land banking, and shall be paid by the farm-land bank with which such agent is acting.

"Seventh. Every local and State national farm-land bank and the United States farm-land bank may each purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no other:

"(a) Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business.

"(b) Such as shall be mortgaged to it by way of security for loans made by it.

"(c) Such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts contracted in the course of business dealings.

"(d) Such as it shall purchase at sale under judgments, decrees, or mortgages or deeds of trust, held by the bank, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it. But no such bank shall hold the title and possession of any real estate conveyed to or purchased by it to secure any debts due to it for a longer period than five years.

"CAPITAL STOCK.

"Eighth. The shares of stock of each national farm-land bank shall be of the par value of $100 each, and each stockholder in a local national farm-land bank shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock standing in his name. Shareholders in local national farm-land banks may vote by proxies duly authorized in writing; but no officer, clerk, or employee of such bank shall act as proxy, and no shareholder whose liability is past due or unpaid shall be allowed to vote; nor shall any one person vote in person or by proxy more than 10 per cent of the outstanding stock at any meeting of stockholders.

"At least 50 per cent of the capital stock of every local national farm-land bank shall be paid in before it is authorized to do business, and the remainder of the capital stock of said bank shall be paid in, in installments of at least 10 per cent each on the whole amount of the capital, as frequently as one installment before the end of each succeeding month from the time it shall be authorized by the director of farm-land banking to commence business, and the payment of each installment shall be certified to the director of farm-land banking, under oath, by the president or other officer of the bank.

"Whenever any shareholder or his assign fails to pay any installment on the stock of a local national farm-land bank when the same is required by the preceding paragraph to be paid, the directors of such bank may sell the stock of such delinquent shareholder at public auction, having given three weeks' previous notice thereof in a newspaper of general circulation published in the county where the bank is located (or if no newspaper is published in said county, then in a newspaper published nearest thereto) to any person who will pay the highest price therefor, to be not less than the amount due thereon with the expenses of advertisement and sale; and the excess, if any, shall be paid to the delinquent shareholder. If no bidder can be found who will pay for such stock, the amount due thereon to the local national farm-land bank and the cost of advertisement and sale, the amount previously paid shall be forfeited to the said bank, and such stock shall be sold, as the directors may order, within six months from the time of such forfeiture, and if not sold it shall be canceled and deducted from the capital stock of the said bank. If any such cancellation and reduction shall reduce the capital of the local national farm-land bank below the minimum of the capital required by law, the capital stock shall, within 30 days from the date of such cancellation, be increased to the required amount, in default of which a receiver may be appointed, according to the provisions of section 5234 of the Revised Statutes, so far as it may be applied hereto, to close up the business of such bank.

"Ninth. Any bank formed under this act may, by its articles of association, provide for an increase of its capital from time to time as may be deemed expedient, subject to the limitations of this act. But the maximum of such increase to be provided in the articles of association shall be approved by the director of farm-land banking; and no increase of capital shall be valid until the total amount of such increase is paid in, and until notice thereof has been transmitted to the director of farm-land banking; who shall thereupon issue to such bank his certificate, specifying the amount of such increase of capital stock, with his approval thereof, and after it has been duly paid in it shall be treated as part of the capital stock of such association.

"Tenth. Any local or State national farm-land bank under this act, may, by the vote of shareholders owning two-thirds of its capital stock, reduce its capital to any sum not below the amount required by this act to authorize the formation of such bank; but no such reduction shall be allowed which would reduce the capital and surplus of such bank below the proportion which such capital and surplus is required hereunder to bear to the mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes, or bonds secured thereunder, guaranteed by such bank, in accordance with the provisions herein contained. Nor shall any such reduction be made until the amount of the proposed reduction has been reported to and approved by the director of farm-land banking.

"Eleventh. The affairs of each local and State national farm-land bank shall be managed by not less than five nor more than nine directors. All directors shall be elected by the shareholders at a meeting to be held at any time before the association is authorized by the director of farm-land banking to commence business and afterwards at meetings to be held on any such date in January of each year as is specified therefor in the articles of association. The directors shall hold office for one year and until their successors are elected and qualified.

"Every director of every national farm-land bank must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States. All the directors of every State national farm-land bank must reside in the State or Territory in which the bank is located for at least one year immediately preceding their election and must be a resident therein during their continuance in office. Every director of a local national farm-land bank must reside in the county or other political subdivision in which the bank is authorized to do business for at least one year immediately preceding their election and must be a resident therein during their continuance in office. Every director of a local national farm-land bank must own, in his own right, at least two shares of the capital stock of the local national farm-land bank of which he is a director. Any director of a local national farm-land bank who ceases to be the owner of two shares of stock, and any director of any farm-land bank who becomes in any other manner disqualified, shall thereby vacate his place.

"Any vacancy in the board shall be filled by appointment by the remaining directors, and any director so appointed shall hold his place until the next election.

"If, from any cause, an election of directors is not made at the time appointed, the bank shall not for that cause be dissolved, but an election may be held on any subsequent day, 30 days' notice thereof in all cases having been given in a newspaper published in the city, town, or county in which the bank is located; and if no newspaper is published in such city, town, or county, such notice shall be published in a newspaper published nearest thereto. If the articles of association do not fix the day on which the election shall be held, or if no election is held on the day fixed, the day for the election shall be designated by the board of directors in their by-laws, or otherwise; or if the directors fail to fix the day, shareholders, representing two-thirds of the shares may do so.

"Twelfth. One of the directors shall be the president of the board. One or more vice presidents shall likewise be chosen.

"Thirteenth. The shareholders of every local national farm-land bank shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares.

"Fourteenth. Persons holding stock as executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees, shall not be personally subject to any liabilities as stockholders; but the estates and funds in their hands shall be liable in like manner and to the same extent as the testator, intestate, ward, or person interested in such trust funds would be, if living and competent to act and hold the stock in his own name.

"INCORPORATION OF LOCAL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 10. That the local associations for carrying on the business of farm-land banking under this act may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than 10. They shall enter into articles of association, which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association was formed, and may contain any other provisions not inconsistent with law which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conduct of its affairs. These articles shall be signed by the persons uniting to form the association, and a copy of them shall be forwarded to the director of farm-land banking, to be filed and preserved in his office.

"SEC. 11. That the persons uniting to form such a local national farm-land bank shall, under their hands, make an organization certificate, which shall specifically state—

"First. The name assumed by such association. The words 'National farm-land bank' shall be a part of the title of every local and State national farm-land bank, and these words shall not be used by any institution other than those incorporated under this act. In the case of local institutions these words shall be prefixed by such descriptive title or name as the applicants may indicate, and shall be followed by the name of the county and State in which the said local bank is to operate. Each said local national farm-land bank shall be designated by an official number, provided by the director of farm-land banking.

"Second. That State or county (or other political subdivision) in which the operations of such local national farm-land bank are to be carried on, and the place in said county or other political subdivision where its principal office is to be located, which place may be changed from time to time upon the request of such local national farm-land bank with the approval of the director of farm-land banking.

"Third. The amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is to be divided: Provided, That such capital stock shall in no case be less than $10,000: Provided further, That such capital stock may be increased or decreased from time to time, as elsewhere herein provided, subject to the approval of the director of farm-land banking; but at no time to be less than the minimum herein set forth.

"Fourth. The names and places of residence of the shareholders and the number of shares held by each.

"Fifth. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this act.

"SEC. 12. That the organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or before a notary public, and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereto, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary public, transmitted to the director of farm-land banking, who shall record and carefully preserve the same in his office.

"SEC. 13. That upon duly making and filing the articles of association as above described and an organization certificate the local association or local national farm-land bank shall become as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate a body corporate, and as such and in the name designated in the organization certificate shall have power—

"First. To accept and pay interest on postal savings deposits and other time deposits from the National Government; and the provisions of section 15 of the Federal reserve act, so far as they are in conflict with this provision, are hereby repealed; to accept and pay interest on any State time deposits or time deposits of public funds; to accept and pay interest on time deposits from individuals or corporations.

"Second. To guarantee the payment, both as to principal and interest, of loans made upon farm land located within the county or other political subdivision in which such local national farm-land bank is operated: Provided—

"(a) That such loans are made for not less than five years.

"(b) That such loans are secured by a first mortgage or first deed of trust on farm lands located within such county or are used to retire existing mortgages or deeds of trust, so as to make them a first lien on such farm lands. But this shall not prohibit the local national farm-land bank from accepting a mortgage or deed of trust on lands lying outside of the county or political subdivision where it is operated as additional security for any such long-term loan made by it, nor shall it prevent such local national farm-land bank from guaranteeing loans secured by first mortgages or first deeds of trust on land lying partly in the county in which it is operated and partly in another county.

"(c) That such loans do not exceed 50 per cent in amount in the case of productive farm lands, and do not exceed 40 per cent in amount in other cases, of the value of the said lands, to be determined by an appraisement, as provided in this act.

"(d) That every such long-term farm loan contain a mandatory provision for the amortization of such loan or reduction of the same by annual or semiannual payments on amount of principal.

"(e) That every such loan may be paid off in whole or in part by the borrower, upon reasonable notice, in accordance with rules to be prescribed by the division of farm-land banking, at any interest period after such loan has continued for five years, by the payment of the balance due on such loan as of the date of such payment, after crediting the amortization payments on the same as and when they were made.

"Third. To sell and dispose of, and to buy back and trade in mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, so guaranteed by it.

"Fourth. To invest its deposits in loans upon farm lands maturing within five years: Provided, That such loans comply with all the requirements outlined in subdivisions (b) and (c) under '2' next above. To guarantee such short-term loans running for less than five years, both as to principal and interest; and to sell, buy, and trade in the same.

"Fifth. To use its capital stock, surplus, and deposits as a revolving fund for the temporary purchase or holding of long-term first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans, running for five years or more, under '2' above; or for the temporary purchase or holding of short-term first deed of trust farm loans under '3' above; or to use the same for the purpose of buying in and holding temporarily national land-bank bonds of the United States farm-land bank issued against first mortgage or first deed of trust long-term farm loans, guaranteed, first, by local national farm-land bank and then by a State national farm-land bank, as elsewhere herein specified: Provided, That such capital and surplus shall not be permanently invested in such first mortgage or first deed of trust long-term farm loans running for five years or more; or in such first mortgage or first deed of trust farm loans running for less than five years; or in such national land-bank bonds of the United States farm-land bank; but can only be permanently invested in United States Government bonds, in bonds of the State in which such bank is operated, or in such other securities as may be provided by the division of farm-land banking.

"Sixth. To buy and sell gold and silver coin and bullion; to collect notes, drafts, and bills of exchange; to keep reciprocal accounts with other banks; to keep its reserves, either in cash or as a deposit, with its State national farm-land bank or with the United States farm-land bank; to borrow money on its notes or obligations, or to rediscount short-term farm loans held by it with other banks; and to keep on deposit for the accommodation of its borrowers the money derived from the sale of long-term or short-term farm loans, until the said money is used. Such sums may be held by the local national farm-land bank on a check account for the benefit of the borrower until the same is fully drawn out; but in such case the balance due to the borrower shall be kept by the local national farm-land bank in cash or in the shape of a deposit or balance in the State national farm-land bank or with the United States farm-land bank.

"SPECIFIC LIMITATION.

"SEC. 14. That every local national farm-land bank shall be subject to the following specific limitations:

"First. The amount in long-term mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, running for five years or more under terms of section 13, No. 2, above, that can be guaranteed as to principal and interest at any one time by such local national farm-land bank shall not exceed 15 times its capital and accumulated surplus, nor shall the amount of short-term loans guaranteed by it under section 13, No. 4, exceed 5 times its capital and accumulated surplus.

"Second. The capital stock and surplus of each local national farm-land bank shall be primarily liable to secure and make good its indorsement or guaranty upon the long-term farm loans, evidenced by mortgage or deed of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, running for five years or more, guaranteed by it under this act, and shall be then liable to secure and make good its guaranty upon short-term loans under this act, and thereafter shall be held liable for its deposits on other obligations.

"Third. The charges of administration imposed by a local national farm-land bank upon the borrower for handling long-term real estate loans, running for five years or more, as above described, shall not exceed an annual charge of 1 per cent upon the amount unpaid on the loan, as evidenced by the first mortgage or first deed of trust, and the notes or bonds secured thereby, executed by the borrower. All of such administrative charge may be retained by the local bank if such guaranteed loan is then sold. But if forwarded to a State bank to be guaranteed, then of such 1 per cent one-half shall be retained by the local national farm-land bank as its administrative charge and as payment for its guaranty of such loan. One-fourth shall go to the State national farm-land bank as payment for its administrative charge and its guaranty and one-fourth shall go to the United States farm-land bank for its administrative charge and its guaranty or services in selling national land-bank bonds against such loan.

"Fourth. The payments provided to be made annually or semiannually by the borrowers upon long-term farm-land loans, secured by first mortgage or first deed of trust and guaranteed by local national farm-land bank, shall in all cases be sufficient to pay the interest charge upon the loan, the administrative charge, and an amortization payment, to be paid annually or semiannually, sufficient in amount to retire and pay off the amount of the principal borrowed (as evidenced by the face of said first mortgage or first deed of trust and the notes or bonds secured thereunder) at its maturity.

"Fifth. The dividends to be paid to the stockholders of any local national farm-land bank shall in no case exceed 6 per cent per annum on the amount originally invested, although such dividends may be, at the option of the bank, paid in equal semiannual, quarterly, or monthly installments, and shall be cumulative. Surplus earnings of such bank, after the payment of dividends, shall be used to create an earned surplus until such earned surplus shall equal double the amount of paid-in capital. When such earned surplus has equaled this amount, then the capital stock of the local national farm-land bank shall be bought in at par from the holders thereof, and thereupon such stock shall be canceled and retired, and the said local national farm-land bank shall thereupon become a mutual bank, its earnings to be distributed among its depositors and borrowers in proportion to the amount of business transacted with such bank; all under such rules and regulations as the division of farm-land banking may provide: Provided, That no such use of the surplus of said local national farm-land bank to buy in and retire its capital stock shall be made which will reduce the capital and surplus to less than one-fifteenth of the amount of outstanding long-term farm loans and one-fifth of the amount of outstanding short-term farm loans guaranteed by the said bank: And provided, That no dividends shall be paid which will impair the capital stock of said institution, or which will reduce the capital and surplus of the bank to less than one-fifteenth of the outstanding long-term mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, and one-fifth of the amount of outstanding short-term farm loans guaranteed by the said bank.

"APPRAISEMENT COMMITTEE OF LOCAL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANK.

"SEC. 15. That the board of directors of each local national farm-land bank shall immediately, upon its organization and before making any loans upon farm lands, appoint an appraisement committee, which shall be composed of not less than three members of the board of directors. The names of said appraisement committee shall be at once filed with the director of farm-land banking, and any change in the said committee shall be at once communicated to him. The duty of said committee shall be to appraise, or cause to be appraised, and report on the value of real estate offered as security for loans. All the reports of the appraisement committee shall be made in writing, signed by a majority of the committee, and shall give a description of the property, the value at which it is appraised by them, the value at which it is assessed for taxation, and such other information as may be required by the directors of the bank or by the director of farm-land banking. Such report shall be filed and preserved with other papers relating to such loans, and no loan shall be made on any farm land unless and until such report in writing has been filed with the said bank.

"DESTRUCTIBLE PROPERTY TO BE INSURED.

"SEC. 16. That wherever the value of the building or destructible property attached to the land is a part of the security for any loan, such buildings or destructible property shall be properly insured against loss by fire, and policies representing such insurance shall be deposited along with the mortgages under the joint control of the said bank and the Federal fiduciary agent. In such case, provisions shall be made in the mortgages or deeds of trust for the payment by the borrower of an amount sufficient to pay the premiums on such insurance policies, in addition to the interest, amortization, and administration charges to be paid by him as herein set out. In appraising property for long-term loans, the buildings and destructible property shall not be valued at more than 20 per cent of the total appraisement.

"SEC. 17. That no local national farm-land bank shall be authorized to operate any branches.

"CONVERSION OF EXISTING LAND-MORTGAGE COMPANIES AND OTHER STATE INSTITUTIONS INTO LOCAL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 18. That any land-mortgage association or corporation, or any similar institution or bank now incorporated under the general or special laws of any State, may become a local national farm-land bank under this act, under a suitable name, upon complying with the provisions of this act, and in such case the articles of association and the organization certificate may be executed by a majority of the stockholders of the existing institution, and the certificate shall declare that the owners of two-thirds of the capital stock of the old institution have authorized the directors to make such certificate and to change and convert the institution into a local national farm-land bank. The majority of the directors, after executing the articles of association and organization certificate, shall have power to execute all other papers and to do whatever may be required to make its organization perfect and complete as a local national farm-land bank. The directors of the old company may continue to be the directors of the local national farm-land bank until others are elected or appointed in accordance with the provisions of this chapter. When the director of farm-land banking has given to such association a certificate under his hand and official seal (after the provisions of this act have been complied with), and after it is authorized to commence the business of farm-land banking, the bank shall have the same powers and privileges and shall be subject to the same duties, responsibilities, and rules in all respects as are prescribed for other banks originally organized as local national farm-land banks and shall be held and regarded as such a local national farm-land bank; but no such bank shall have a less capital than the amount prescribed for local national farm-land banks organized under this act, and no such corporation shall be authorized to do business as a local national farm-land bank until the amount of mortgages or deeds of trust, or notes or bonds secured thereunder, guaranteed by it is so adjusted that it does not exceed 20 times the capital and surplus of the said bank and until it complies in all other respects with the provisions of this act.

"POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITS IN LOCAL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 19. That every local national farm-land bank is authorized to receive postal-savings deposits under the postal-savings act as it now exists or as it may hereafter be changed, and to deposit as security for the same the collateral trust bonds or national land-bank bonds of the United States farm-land bank issued against long-term mortgages or deeds of trust on lands in its State: Provided, That such long-term mortgages or deeds of trust and the notes or bonds secured thereunder, so held by the United States farm-land bank as security for such national land-bank bonds, are guaranteed, both as to principal and interest by both the local national farm-land bank and the State national farm-land bank. In such case the said local national farm-land bank is authorized, out of any funds available, to buy such national land-bank bonds of the United States farm-land bank at the market price, for the purpose of depositing them with the Government as security for such postal-savings deposits. And such national land-bank bonds of the United States farm-land bank will be thereupon received as security for such postal savings deposits with the local national farm-land bank on the terms and conditions elsewhere herein provided. The provisions of section 15 of the Federal reserve act and of section 9 of the postal savings act, so far as in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

"RESERVES OF LOCAL NATIONAL FARM-LAND BANKS.

"SEC. 20. That on all time deposits the local national farm-land bank shall maintain a reserve of at least 5 per cent. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to present just a word or two on that. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. LEVER. I would like to ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], 2 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. VAUGHAN], and the balance of it by the gentleman from South Carolina, my colleague [Mr. RAGSDALE].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the committee understand that I did not consume much time in reading my amendment. This is a question to which I have devoted a good deal of study, and is a different proposition than any of the propositions that have been submitted; and I would like to have 10 minutes in which to explain the proposition to the House. I think this would settle the whole question. We can all come together and agree on it. That is the reason I want 10 minutes, and I hope the gentleman will agree to give me that amount of time. I will make it 10 short minutes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. VAUGHAN] will come in on another amendment, and the gentleman from Georgia will control 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes, to be apportioned as indicated by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] is recognized.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, ordinarily I would not, of course, consume any time in discussion of this proposition at this late hour, but, gentlemen, let me call your attention to one thing. I think a great many of us have forgotten that we run away entirely from what the object of the establishment of a system of rural credits was intended for. I do not believe that we are dealing with this question as we intended to deal with it when we started out. There is not any reason for establishing a system of rural credits at all if the beneficent effects of that system do not reach the waste places in this country so that the farmer who has a small amount of land can have the benefits of the system.

Now, the system that I advocate does not call for the expenditure of one single penny on the part of the Government of the United States. It is a system that puts the farmers' system on the same plane with the Federal reserve system and with the banking and commercial interests of this country. I wish to say that any system that does not start with the farmer and end with the farmer and is controlled by the farmer is not going to do the farmer any good. Now, the farmers in my section of the country have been praying for 50 years to be delivered from the skinflint banking and money lending institutions that seek to rob them. What does the Hollis bill do? It allows these banks to charge the current rates of interest in the various States.

Now we propose to give the farmer a cheap rate of interest, to wit, not in excess of 6 per cent, including the 1½ per cent amortization for 30 years. Here you propose to give to the farmers a bill that can exact from them the current rate of interest within the State where the land is located.

Under that proposition, in the first place, you have 48 different institutions issuing bonds in competition with one another, the bonds being placed on the market to be sold. Now, under these conditions you can not possibly put the farmers of this country and their securities on an equal basis. You have too many banks of issue. The gentleman from Oklahoma has the right idea about this banking proposition. All that the farmers want is a system by which they can go in and bring the collective credits of all the farmers together in one great institution, and have their debentures issued to the investing public, and those debentures be as sound and good as State, municipal, county, or railroad bonds, and be sold at as low a rate of interest. The trouble about this method of procedure is that you can not explain any system. You have no time to deliberate about this. Men are voting here to-night for measures that have not amortization in them.

If mandatory amortization is not contained in the measure that passes here, with the further requirement that the money borrowed shall be expended upon the plantation or farm of the borrower for the improvement and enhancement of its value, the system is not worth the snap of your finger, and it will not help but will, on the contrary, hinder the farmer. You propose here to create a system under which the farmer who has a farm can go and mortgage it, and you do not restrict him in his expenditures. He may spend his money somewhere else. Instead of building up the farming interests of this country, the first thing you know you will have a whole lot of foreclosed mortgages, and we will be back in the old age of landlordism. We are in that deeply enough now, and the Lord knows it! Why do you want the Government of the United States to start the machinery over at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing grinding out securities, when the farmer has got the best security on earth? Why do you want to put the Government into the direct loaning of money? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] proposes to appropriate $50,000,000 a year to buy the debentures of the farmers.

Mr. BULKLEY. The gentleman is just as inaccurate about that as he has been about the other things.

Mr. HOWARD. That is my understanding of section 30.

Mr. BULKLEY. I know what the gentleman understands, and I know he has studied the bill for eight hours. If he would spend a little more time on it, he would understand it better.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand, it carries an appropriation for an amount that the Government is permitted to expend out of the unexpended balance in the Treasury, to buy $50,000,000 worth of bonds. If it does not mean that, it does not mean anything and the gentleman does not know anything about the English language. [Laughter.] That is what it means. It does not mean anything else. I can understand the English language as well as the gentleman from Ohio can. Now, when you appropriate that $50,000,000 you have got a great rush of the farmers to get the $50,000,000. What is going to become of it and who is going to get it? Is Ohio going to get it, is Oklahoma going to get it, or is Georgia going to get it? Then, when you exhaust the public funds the debentures either go below par or the interest rates mount, and everybody who knows anything about the subject knows that is true.

This is a serious proposition; it is one that I think you all ought to stop and think about a little. Take the ill-considered manner in which the Hollis bill has been brought before us. When Senator McCUMBER slipped up on the blind side of a lot of sleepy people at the other end of the Capitol the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate got together and said, "O Lord, help us; we have got to do something." What did they do? Between the time that the McCumber amendment was put on the bill and this morning they got together and brought out the Hollis bill. And now you ask us to swallow it, hook, sinker, line, cork, and two-thirds of the pole. [Laughter and applause.]

For one I represent a farming constituency; four of the best agricultural counties in Georgia are in my district, and I am not going to be cowardly enough to stand up here on the floor of this House and swallow any such a conglomeration, and I can justify myself before any fair-thinking farmer in this country. It is time for the people of this country to understand that they run the Government and that the Government does not run them. The quicker you instill that thought into the minds of the people of this country the better off the country will be.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. This bill is practically the American commission bill, is it not?

Mr. HOWARD. It is. I divide with Mr. Moss. He leaves me with the State institution, and I take him up one step and bring in the collective credit, in but one institution, and that one issues the debentures. In other words, it stabilizes the interests of the country and puts them all on an equal footing. The man that buys the debenture does not know who is the owner—whether it is in Florida, Oklahoma, or Oregon. He buys because the Government of the United States, through its supervisory officer, looks it over and says it is a good, honest security for the investment of your money. That is as far as the farmer in my district wants me to go, as far as the farmer in your district wants you to go, and as far as we ought to go in justice to the people of the country, and in view of the burdens now being laid on the people by the ill-considered things that have been done here under the guise of wise legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is enormously to the credit of the representatives of the people that in this time of stress and strain men of the Democratic Party, men of the Progressive Party, men of the Republican Party have uniformly, with one exception, put partisan politics out of the entire day's debate.

When I was a young man 17 years old I left the backwoods of Kentucky, where I was reared, and went to the frontier of Texas, where I taught school, on the banks of the Red River. Across the Red River lived three tribes of Indians—the Kiowas, the Comanches, and the Apaches. They had a functionary among them called "Anumpa-secopa," whose business it was to be a common scold.

She was selected because she had the least brains, the homeliest face, the sharpest tongue, and the greatest self-assurance of all of the squaws in the tribe. I thought when I left that land of barbarians upon the frontier, then in the Indian Territory, I would never again see Anumpa-secopa, but I have found one here to-night. [Laughter.] The Democratic Party, at a time when we are trying, in conjunction with the brains and heart of the Republican and the Progressive Parties, to construct a great rural credits measure, is held up to partisan scorn and ridicule by that Anumpa-secopa purely because the Democratic Party is trying to extricate the farmers of the country from a condition of servitude to the creditor class of the Nation.

I will not willingly hurt any gentleman's feelings or call any names; and in that respect I am in the attitude of a gentleman who was playing a little game of poker, which in former days gentlemen in Texas might with respectability occasionally play. It so happened there was a one-eyed man in the game; and it came about that somebody in the game was cheating. Finally the gentleman to whom I refer said, "Now, gentlemen, I don't want to hurt anybody's feelings nor call any names, but one thing is certain, if there is any more cheating I am going to shoot that other eye out." [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out all after the word "that" in the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Associations for carrying on business under this act may be formed by any number of natural persons engaged in practical farming, not less in any case than 25.

"They shall enter into articles of association which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association is formed and may contain any other provisions not inconsistent with law which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conducting of its affairs.

"Sixth. That each shareholder has paid to the cashier of the association 10 per cent of the par value of the shares subscribed for by him in cash and has executed and conveyed to certain trustees for the use of the United States his certain promissory note for the sum of the par value of the shares subscribed for by him with interest at — per cent, payable annually, to be secured by a mortgage upon improved unencumbered farm lands owned by the mortgagor in fee simple, that for three years last past have been assessed for taxation purposes at a valuation double the amount of said mortgage and within 30 miles of the place wherein the association is to carry on its business, which said mortgage shall have a term not less than 3 nor more than 25 years, and shall be a collateral security for the payment of said note. And said mortgage may provide for the payment of said principal sum with interest or it may provide for the payment of annual installments of a fixed percentage of the face of said mortgage to the said trustees for a specified number of years, and shall also provide that in case the said mortgagor shall make default in the payment of any installment of payment of interest or principal or amortized sum at the time it may become due and payable the whole unpaid principal sum with interest shall immediately become due and payable, and said mortgage shall contain a scire facias clause with warrant of attorney to confess judgment for the principl sum remaining unpaid, with interest and proper costs, upon said mortgage in favor of said trustees, or such other provision permitted or required by the laws of the State wherein such mortgage is made for the immediate collection of said unpaid principal and interest with costs of the proceedings and without exemption or stay of execution.

"Seventh. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this title.

"SEC. 4. That the organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or notary public, and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, and a copy of the articles of association duly signed by the associators, transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, who shall record and carefully preserve them in his office.

"SEC. 5. That upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate the association shall become, as from the date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have the power—

"First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Second. To have succession for the period of 20 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association or by the act of the association, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some provision of the law or by the act of two-thirds of its shareholders.

"Sixth. To prescribe by its board of directors, subject to the provisions of this act, by laws, not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected or appointed, its officers appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

"Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on its business by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt of its shareholders; by loaning money and borrowing money according to the provisions of this act. But no shareholder shall be permitted to become indebted to the association for a sum greater than the par value of the share held by him. The association shall not lend its funds or credit to any person not a stockholder, except that in case the association may have loanable funds not desired by any of its shareholders it may loan to other persons for terms not exceeding one year. Whenever, at any time, funds of the association can not be safely loaned at the rates fixed by the association said trustees will immediately pay such funds into the Treasury of the United States, and extinguish by so much the liability of the association to the United States.

"But no association shall transact any business, except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization, until it has been authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence its business.

"SEC. 6. That whenever the articles of association and organization certificate are transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency, as provided by its title, and the association transmitting the same notifies the comptroller that such association has complied with the provisions of this title required to be complied with before an association shall be authorized to commence its business, the comptroller shall examine into the condition of such association, ascertain especially the amount of money paid in on account of its capital, the name and place of residence of each of its directors, and the amount of the capital stock of which each shareholder is the owner in good faith, and generally whether such association has complied with all the provisions of this title required to entitle it to engage in business; and especially the character and standing and the undertaking of the persons named as trustees and the form of the official bond which they propose to give; together with the form of the promissory notes payable to the said trustees for the use of the United States with the form of the mortgages proposed to be given to secure said notes; and shall cause to be made and attested by the oaths of the directors of the association a statement of all the facts necessary to enable the comptroller to determine whether the association is lawfully entitled to commence its business, and if upon a careful examination of the facts so reported and of any other facts which may come to the knowledge of the comptroller, whether by means of a special commission appointed by him for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of such association, or otherwise, it appears that such association is lawfully entitled to commence its business, the comptroller shall give to such association a certificate, under his hand and official seal, that such association is authorized to commence such business. But the comptroller may withhold from an association his certificate authorizing the commencement of business whenever he has reason to suppose that the shareholders have formed the same for any other than the legitimate objects contemplated by this title.

"SEC. 7. That upon the deposit with the Treasury of the United States by any farmers' loan association of the promissory note of the said association attested by the signature of the president or vice president and cashier of said association for a sum equal to the capital stock of said association with interest at 3 per cent per annum, payable in annual installments as follows: Three per cent per annum for 2 years, 5 per cent per annum for 3 years, 6 per cent per annum for 10 years, 7 per cent per annum for 10 years, until said note and interest are fully paid, beginning 12 months after the date of the note, and shall deposit with said note the promissory notes of the shareholders payable to said trustees for the use of the United States in amount equal to the capital stock of said association with mortgages as aforesaid to secure the payment of said notes and interest thereon, accompanied by policies of insurance of the validity of such mortgages, and the same are approved by said Comptroller of the Currency to be in proper substance and form according to the purposes and intent of this act; and it appearing that said notes and mortgages are valid securities taken by the association in payment of shares of its stock and deposited as collateral security with the Secretary of the Treasury to secure the payment of the note of the association as aforesaid, and to secure the immediate payment of any installment of said association note with proper costs in case default shall be made in the payment of any such installment at the time it becomes due, and thereafter or as often as any installment becomes due in which there is any default in payment and the said trustees having deposited with the said Secretary their undertaking of the office of trustees of said securities for the use of the United States, together with their official oaths and bonds for the faithful discharge of their duties, the Secretary of the Treasury shall then place the notes made by the shareholders and the mortgages securing the payment thereof in the possession of such trustees, and such association shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency circulating notes of the United States to an amount equal to the par value of the stock of said association; and it shall be the duty of said trustees to safely keep said mortgages and the shareholders' notes secured by the same and to collect the said notes and the interest as the same becomes due, and out of such collections to pay to the Treasury of the United States the stipulated annual installments as they fall due on the note of the association, and such payments shall be credited on the note of the association, and in case there is any default on the part of any maker of any of said notes according to the terms thereof, or if taxes are allowed to become a lien upon the land mortgaged to secure any of said notes, to proceed at once to collect the whole of said mortgage thus in default with interest and the costs thereof; any moneys collected by the trustees over and above the amount required for the annual payment for any year due to the United States shall be paid into the treasury of such association.

"In case of the death of a trustee or trustees the survivor or survivors shall act.

"SEC. 8. That the association shall then cause the certificate issued under the preceding section to be published in some newspaper printed in the district where the association is located for at least 30 days next after the issuing thereof, or, if no newspaper is published in such district, then in the newspaper published nearest thereto.

"SEC. 9. That any such association may change its name or place where its business is to be carried on to any other place within the same State not more than 30 miles distant with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, by the vote of two-thirds of the shareholders of such association. A duly authenticated notice of the vote and of the new name or location selected shall be sent to the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, but no change of name or location shall be valid until the comptroller shall have issued his certificate of approval of the same.

"All debts, liabilities, rights, provisions, and powers of the association under its old name shall devolve upon and inure to the association under its new name.

"Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in any manner to release any such created association under its old name or at its old location from any liability, or affect any action or proceeding in law in which said association may be or become a party or interested.

"SEC. 10. That a farmers' loan association may purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others:

"First. Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business.

"Second. Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security for debts contracted.

"Third. Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the association, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it.

"SEC. 11. That the capital stock of each association shall be not less than $25,000, or may be any multiple thereof, and shall be divided into shares of the par value of $100 each, and be deemed personal property and transferable on the books of the association in such manner as may be prescribed in the by-laws or articles of association. Every person becoming a shareholder by such transfer shall, in proportion to his shares, succeed to all the rights and liabilities of the prior holder of such shares, and no change shall be made in the articles of association by which the rights, remedies, or security of the existing creditors of the association shall be impaired.

"SEC. 12. That in all elections of directors, and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders, each shareholder shall be entitled to one vote without respect to the number of shares held by him. Shareholders may vote by proxies duly authorized by writing; but no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of such association shall act as proxy, and no shareholder whose liability is past due and unpaid shall be allowed to vote.

"SEC. 13. That the affairs of each association shall be managed by three directors, one of whom shall be president, one vice president, and one cashier, who shall be elected by the shareholders at a meeting to be held at any time before the association is authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency to commence business and afterwards at meetings to be held on such day of each year as is specified therefor in the articles of association. The directors shall hold office for one year and until their successors are elected and have qualified.

"SEC. 14. That every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States, and must have resided in the district in which the association is located for at least one year immediately preceding their election and must be resident therein during their continuance in office. No director shall own more than one share of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director, nor shall he be a borrower from or be in any way pecuniarily interested in loans made by such association. Any director who as a trustee is unsatisfactory to the Comptroller of the Currency may be immediately removed as such trustee by the said comptroller, and such removal renders such person ineligible as director and his place shall become vacant.

"SEC. 15. That each director, when appointed or elected, shall take an oath that he will, so far as the duty devolves upon him, diligently and honestly administer the affairs of such association, will not knowingly violate, or willingly permit to be violated, any of the provisions of this title, and that he is the owner in good faith and in his own right of the number of shares of stock subscribed by him or standing in his name on the books of the association, and that the same is not hypothecated or in any way pledged as security for any loan or debt other than to the association itself. Such oath, subscribed by the director making it, and certified by the officer before whom it is taken, shall be immediately transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency and shall be filed and preserved in his office.

"SEC. 16. That any vacancy in the board shall be filled by appointment by the remaining directors, and any director so appointed shall hold his place until the next election.

"SEC. 17. That if, from any cause, an election of directors is not made at the time appointed, the association shall not for that cause be dissolved, but an election may be held on any subsequent day, 30 days' notice thereof in all cases having been given in a newspaper published in the city, town, or county in which the association is located; and if no newspaper is published in such city, town or county, such notice shall be published in a newspaper published nearest thereto. If the articles of association do not fix the day on which the election shall be held, or if no election is held on the day fixed, the day for the election shall be designated by the board of directors in their by-laws, or otherwise; or if the directors fail to fix the day, shareholders representing two-thirds of the shares may do so.

"SEC. 18. That the shareholders of every farmers' loan association shall be held individually liable, equally, and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares.

"SEC. 19. That the Treasurer of the United States is also authorized to permit the trustees to substitute for one or more of said notes and mortgages one or more other notes and mortgages of similar terms and of equal approved value whenever said association may find it necessary to substitute for a nonborrowing shareholder another shareholder desiring to borrow, who furnishes equally good security, and such substitution having been authorized, the trustees shall transfer the shares held by the retiring shareholder to the new shareholder or shareholders.

"SEC. 20. That the power of visitation and inspection of each association shall be similar to that now exercised by the United States over national banks, but the fee for any inspection shall not exceed $15, and inspections shall not be made more than three times in any one year.

"SEC. 21. That the general provisions of law relating to suits by or against national banks shall apply to farmers' loan associations.

"SEC. 22. That the real property of any such association shall be subject to State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent according to value as other real property is taxed, but the mortgages made to any trustees for the use of the United States shall not be subject to State taxation, nor shall the loans of the United States to any such association be subject to taxation for any purpose."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 11 minutes, 6 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr BUCHANAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, if there are any Members of this House who are opposed to the policy of Government aid, I can not, of course, expect them to vote for this proposition of mine; but if it will be admitted that it is ever justifiable that industries should receive Government aid, on the ground that such aid promotes the public welfare, then I should like to have them consider my amendment. There are about five thousand million dollars of farm indebtedness in this country. The farmers are paying about 7.8 per cent interest on the average. The burden that they are paying could scarcely be sustained by any other business. The average increase in population of the whole country in the last 10 years has been 21 per cent. In cities of over 2,500 inhabitants the increase has been over 35 per cent, while it has been but 11 per cent increase in our rural population. Why is that so? It is simply for the reason that the farmer boy finds more compensation and a better living in the city than he does on the farm. It is so because the conditions of life on the farm are harder than they are in the city, and he goes to the city. The proposition to afford Government aid would not be justifiable unless it can be shown that it promotes the general welfare. This Government since its foundation has been expending enormous sums in its bounty to various enterprises, to various industries, and for various purposes, and not one of them is justified unless it can be shown that those expenditures promote the general welfare. I shall not argue the question of whether we should or should not adopt a policy of Government aid. I will only say this, that if you do adopt the policy of Government aid, this proposition that I have presented is the simplest, the cheapest, the most efficacious of all.

There is not one dollar of money from the time it leaves the Government Treasury until it gets into the hands of the farmer who puts up the security that will stick anywhere on the road. Every one of these other propositions proposes a great machinery of expenses, an army of employees, great salaries, splendid institutions, and the farmer has got to foot the bill at the last. This proposition would bring the money to the farmer who could put up the approved security, and any person who can understand the method of the building and loan associations that have been so beneficial and so successful in this country can understand this proposition of mine. It will be inexpensive, and there need not be greater expense in running one of these farm associations than in running a building and loan association.

My amendment provides that any number of farmers, not less than 25, in a prescribed district may organize an association in the same manner as national banks are organized, except that they give their notes drawing 6 per cent interest, secured by mortgage on unencumbered farm property that for three years previously has been assessed at double the amount of the notes; that the organization shall then make its note to the Government for an amount equal to the sum of the mortgages at 3 per cent interest and payable in amortized payments over a period of 25 years.

This association note, with the personal notes of the stockholders, with the mortgages as collateral security, are presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, together with policies of insurance of an approved title insurance company that the titles are valid; and if the Secretary approves the same he is authorized to pay to the association United States currency to the amount of the association note. He also appoints a trustee, to whom he delivers the personal notes and mortgages, whose duty it is to see that no waste is committed on the lands and to collect the installments of interest as they fall due, and paying so much thereof to the Government to pay the amortized payments as they fall due and paying the balance to the association.

Assuming that the operating expenses will be about the same as in building and loan associations, it is found by careful computation that the semiannual payments of 3 per cent interest will pay back to the Government the principal sum borrowed with 3 per cent interest.

There are provisions for foreclosure in case of default; for the termination of the loan where individuals desire to sell or to anticipate payments, and other safeguards for the Government.

With property with double the amount of the loan, with the loan going into the improvement and operation of the property, the chance of loss to the Government is practically negligible.

The association naturally becomes the nucleus of cooperative buying of farm supplies, of marketing farm products, but whether such operations are successful or failures the results can in no wise affect the security of the Government loan.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand, of course, there is no possibility even of having this proposition of mine considered, but I want it to go in the RECORD. I have no idea that there will be anything put through now that will be of any use. I want the bill to go in the RECORD, not because it is a pet of mine. It owes its paternity to me and it has a very respectable paternity. I do not know how it is with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING]. He has not shown up his pet. I do not know whether he is ashamed of it or not, but at any rate I want this proposition to go in the RECORD, so in future days it may be referred to and may be of use when a real rural credit bill is enacted. I yield back the balance of my time, if I have any.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have also introduced a bill which is a real genuine Government banking bill, you might call it. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee to have this read as an amendment, but I ask unanimous consent to print it in the RECORD. The bill I have introduced provides for a revision of postal savings banks. I will first say, however, I have some doubt in my mind whether we will do anything this evening that will be of real benefit to the farmer, because it was public opinion that forced the passage of this postal savings bank in 1910, and it was born, hamstrung, and so surrounded by restrictions and limitations until anyone knows who has studied it that it is only a subterfuge for a postal savings bank. This bill of mine provides for taking these restrictions off and loaning the money to workingmen, home builders, and farmers.

Now, this may sound something new and probably something dangerous to some who have not studied this question and what has been done in this direction in European countries. Leading European countries have been giving aid to workingmen home owners. They have loaned their most sacred funds for this purpose, such as insurance funds, and so forth, and the gentleman who says that Germany and other like foreign countries are not assisting, that the German Government is not assisting in farm loans and workingmen home-ownership loans does not know what he is talking about, because they have loaned in small amounts as well as assisting their larger institutions, and those loans have been for the benefit of the citizens of the country. Now, the reason this sort of legislation does not come to the front like some others is because it would interfere with the money changers in the country in collecting tribute from the great masses of the country. When the time comes—which I hope will be in my day—that this great mass of the people will become as wide awake to their interests as the money changers now are to theirs you are not going to hesitate in passing real legislation for the benefit of those people, and you will not hesitate to give Government aid to the farmers and working people, the producers of the wealth of the country, as you have in the past, and are now giving aid to the big business interests of the country so that they may be able to extract large profits from the great masses of the people, the farmers and the other producers, by charging an exorbitant rate of interest. I put into the RECORD on January 20 some very good information in regard to facts as to what had been done in foreign countries, and even in this country, in regard to the State aid in farm loans.

We have eight States at the present time that are now loaning, I believe, money through their school funds to farmers on farm mortgages. There is no better security, and I do not hear of any of these people losing money on farm mortgages. It is the best security there is, much preferable to railroad bonds and other watered-stock institutions which the bankers often are loaning on to-day, and it is about the safest proposition in the way of an investment for security that you can have—a farm mortgage or home mortgage at about 50 per cent of its value. Now, if the Congress and the Government will be of real benefit to the working people and the farmers of the country, they ought not to do this through the agency of bankers, because if there is ever a time there was a demonstration of the need of a real Government bank, it has been in the recent past. The private banks' extortionate interest rates has obstructed business prosperity very much in the recent past.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks very briefly on the bill. I asked in the very beginning of my remarks to insert a print of this bill. I do not know whether the Chair put the question or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks and to print the bill as a part of his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill referred to is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes" (act approved June 25, 1910, chapter 386, United States Statutes), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That there be, and is hereby, created a board of trustees for the control, supervision, and administration of the postal savings banks, designated and established under the provisions of this act, and of the funds received as deposits at such postal savings banks by virtue thereof. Said board shall consist of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General, severally, acting ex officio, and shall have the power to make all necessary and proper regulations for the receipt, transmittal, custody, deposit, investment, and repayment of the funds deposited at postal savings banks.

"The board of trustees shall submit a report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session showing by States and Territories (for the preceding fiscal year) the number and names of post offices, the aggregate amount of deposits made therein, the aggregate amount of withdrawals therefrom, the number of depositors in each, the total amount standing to the credit of all depositors at the conclusion of the year, the number and amount of unclaimed deposits, the amount invested in agricultural lands and improvements and on homes, itemizing or giving a full list of the agricultural lands and homes and the amount loaned on each, and the amount of circulating notes, as hereinafter provided, issued, and canceled. Also the amount of extra expense to the Post Office Department and the Postal Service incident to the operation of the postal banking system by the Post Office Department and Postal Service in the transportion of free mail, with other facts which it may deem pertinent and proper to present.

"SEC. 2. That the Postmaster General is hereby directed to prepare and issue special stamps of the necessary denomination for use, in lieu of penalty or frank envelopes, in the transmittal of free mail resulting from the administration of this act.

"SEC. 3. That each and every post office is hereby declared to be a postal savings bank within the meaning of this act, and to be authorized and required to receive deposits of funds from the public, and to account for and dispose of same according to the provisions of this act and the regulations made in pursuance thereof. That each postal savings bank shall be kept open for the transaction of business during such hours as the Postmaster General, with the approval of the board of trustees, shall direct.

"SEC. 4. That accounts may be opened and deposits made in any postal savings bank established under this Act by any person of the age of 10 years or over, in his or her own name, and by a married woman in her own name and free from any control or interference by her husband, and by firms, corporations, and public bodies in their business, corporate, or public name; but no depositor shall at the same time have more than one account in his, her, or its own right.

"SEC. 5. That each postmaster shall, upon the making of an application to open an account under this act and the submission of an initial deposit, deliver to the depositor a pass book, free of cost, upon which shall be written the name and signature or mark of the depositor and such other memoranda as may be necessary for the purpose of identification, in which pass book entries of all deposits and withdrawals shall be made in both figures and writing: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, with the approval of the board of trustees, adopt some other device or devices in lieu of a pass book as a means of making and preserving evidence of deposits and withdrawals.

"SEC. 6. That at least $1 or a larger amount must be deposited before an account is opened with the person depositing same: Provided, That in order that smaller amounts may be accumulated for deposit any person may purchase for 10 cents from any postal savings bank a postal savings card, to which may be attached specially prepared adhesive stamps, to be known as 'postal savings stamps,' and when the stamps so attached amount to $1 or a larger sum, including the 10-cent postal savings card, the same may be presented as a deposit for opening an account, and additions may be made to any account by means of such card and stamps in amounts of $1 or more and when a card and stamps thereon attached are accepted as a deposit the postmaster shall immediately cancel same. It is hereby made the duty of the Postmaster General to prepare such postal savings cards and postal savings stamps of denominations of 10 cents, and to keep them on sale at every postal savings bank, and to prescribe all necessary rules and regulations for the issue, sale, and cancellation thereof.

"SEC. 7. That the postmaster shall also upon the making of an application by a depositor, signed by his, her, or its name, deliver to the depositor free of cost a check book containing printed blank orders on the Postal Savings Bank for payment of money: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, with the board of trustees, adopt some other device or devices in lieu of a check book as a means of making and preserving evidence of orders, payments, and transmittals. That the postmaster shall, whenever so requested and whenever funds to the amount of the order are in the bank to the credit of the issuer of the order, certify the order by his signature free of charge. Such certified check shall then be legal tender for the payee or his order. That the postmaster shall accept for collection without charge noncertified postal checks and checks other than postal, but he shall not allow them to be drawn against until the money is received.

"SEC. 8. That any depositor may withdraw the whole or any part of the funds deposited to his, her, or its credit upon demand and under such regulations as the board of trustees may prescribe. Withdrawals shall be paid from the deposits in the State or Territory, so far as the postal funds on deposit in such State or Territory may be sufficient for the purpose, and so far as practicable from the deposits in the community in which the deposit was made. For the purposes of this act the word 'Territory' as used herein shall be held to include the District of Columbia, District of Alaska, Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and Porto Rico.

"SEC. 9. That 5 per cent of such postal savings bank funds shall be withdrawn by the board of trustees and kept with the Treasurer of the United States, who shall be the treasurer of the board of trustees, in lawful money as reserve.

"SEC. 10. That whenever the board of trustees have in their possession postal savings bank funds available for investment they may loan same as hereinafter specified, through the loan bureau hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 11. That there is hereby created a loan bureau under the supervision of the board of trustees for the purpose of making loans on agricultural lands and improvements, homes, and for other purposes.

"SEC. 12. That a chief and deputy chief of such bureau shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate; the salary of the chief of such bureau shall be $6,000 per annum and of the deputy chief $5,000 per annum.

"SEC. 13. That it shall be the duty of the chief of such bureau, under the direction and with the approval of the board of trustees—

"First. To superintend the affairs of the bureau; to receive and approve or reject applications for loans.

"Second. To keep a record of all such applications and action thereon.

"Third. To keep an account with every person to whom a loan is made.

"Fourth. To keep an account with the board of trustees, showing all moneys received and disbursed by him and the purpose for which such receipts and disbursements were made; to collect and pay into the Treasury of the United States all loans when due and payable.

"Fifth. To make all proper rules necessary to carry this act into effect.

"Sixth. To appoint such subordinate officers of the bureau as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and to define their duties and fix their salaries, which salaries shall in no case exceed the salaries now paid for similar clerical services in the Treasury Department.

"Seventh. To prescribe the form and manner of keeping accounts with the Treasury Department and with the various persons to whom the loans shall have been made, and of the expenses and disbursements in connection therewith.

"Eighth. To perform such duties as are prescribed by law.

"SEC. 14. That the board of trustees may, at their discretion, loan at 3 per cent interest, payable annually, to the United States Government and the different States or Territories of the United States, and also upon requests through any local postmaster and on his recommendation to counties, cities, villages, townships, school districts, or any other public taxing body, for the construction of public works within the limits of each: Provided, That such loans shall be repaid in not more than 20 equal annual installments, according to the judgment of the board of trustees, and that such public work in its entirety shall remain the property of the United States until such loan is repaid.

"SEC. 15. That every person who is a citizen of the United States or who has declared his intention to become such, and who is the owner in fee of unencumbered agricultural lands, with or without improvements, or who wishes to buy a home—that is, a house and lot—may file with the bureau an application for a loan to be secured upon the land and such improvements, or upon the home. Such application must be in the form prescribed by the chief of the bureau. Applications for loans upon lands, with or without improvements, must describe the land and state its actual cash value for agricultural purposes, and also the value of the improvements, if any, and also the assessed valuation of both the land and improvements for taxation purposes for the year previous to application, the amount for which the loan is sought, which must not exceed one-half the assessed value of the land and improvements. Application for loans to buy a home must describe the house and lot which the applicant contemplates buying, its actual cash value, and also the assessed value of the house and lot for the year previous to application, the amount for which the loan is sought, which must not exceed one-half the assessed value of the property. All applications must also state the time for which the loan is to run, not exceeding 20 years, together with such other facts as the chief of the bureau may by regulation prescribe. No loans shall be made upon property of less than $500 in value nor in sums of less than $250.

"SEC. 16. That if improvements have been placed upon agricultural lands subsequent to the last assessment made on the property; or if, in case of application for loan to buy a home, the house was built subsequent to the time the last regular assessment was made, it shall be the duty of the assessor in the Territory in which this land and improvements or home lie to make a special assessment, which assessment shall be used as the assessed value of the property in the application for a loan.

"SEC. 17. That a copy of the application for such loans must, on or before the time of its receipt by the chief of the bureau, be filed in the office of the recorder of deeds or the officer exercising the functions of recorder in the county of the State or Territory in which the land and improvements or home is situated, or, if the land and improvements or home lie in two or more counties, in such office in each of the counties; and from the time of filing of such application in such office such filing shall constitute a lien upon the property described for the amount of any loan granted by the United States under such application and shall be notice to all subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers, and shall be a paramount lien over all others with which said property may be further encumbered, and shall, if the application is granted, continue until the money thereby secured, with the interests, costs, and legal charges of collection, has been fully repaid and satisfied.

"SEC. 18. That upon filing of such application with the loan bureau the applicant must deposit a sum, the amount of which shall be prescribed by the chief of bureau, sufficient to pay the costs of examination of title to the property and inspection and appraisement thereof, which examination, inspection, and appraisement shall be made by persons within the respective counties, to be appointed for that purpose by the chief of the bureau, and their compensation must be paid out of the amount so deposited, the balance, if any, to be returned to the applicant.

"SEC. 19. That if the chief of the bureau, upon such application and upon the report of the commissioners of title and appraisers, is satisfied that the title is perfect and that the amount sought does not exceed one-half the actual cash value of the property and is not greater than one-half of the assessed value thereof for the year previous to the application, then it shall be his duty to notify the applicant that the loan is granted, and to direct an entry to be made upon the books of his office, crediting the full amount of the loan to the applicant, and to transmit to the proper officer of the Treasury of the United States an order directing him to pay the amount thereof, out of the postal savings bank funds or notes hereinafter provided for, to the disbursing officer of the loan bureau, where the same shall remain subject to the order of the applicant, who may at once, or from time to time, as he may desire, draw same upon his check or draft.

"SEC. 20. That the chief of bureau, after having received the report of the commissioners of title and appraisers and being satisfied that the title to the said property is in the applicant, but that the loan sought is too large, may so notify the applicant and advise him that a smaller sum (naming it) would be lent. In case the applicant accepts such smaller loan, proceedings shall then be had as provided in section 17 hereof, and the chief of the bureau shall issue to such applicant a certificate to be filed in the recorder's office, where the original application is filed, certifying that said loan has been made for an amount less than is set forth in the application (stating it), which certificate shall, as to the amount, have the effect of reducing the lien of the United States to the sum therein stated.

"SEC. 21. That when application is made for loan upon agricultural lands with or without improvements, there is upon the land described an existing lien or incumbrance to secure the payment of money presently due and payable, and in an amount less than the loan sought and granted, then the land shall be deemed unincumbered, but instead of paying the amount loaned to the applicant it shall be the duty of the disbursing office, out of the sum loaned, to pay off the amount due and to cause to be discharged the lien or incumbrance, charging the amount of such payment to the applicant in like manner as if it had been paid on his check or draft.

"SEC. 22. That it shall be the duty of the chief of bureau to cause an account to be opened on the books of the department with each person to whom a loan is made, crediting him with the amount of the loan and charging him with the amount drawn thereon with interest on the amount so drawn at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, and also to credit to such account all payments made, so that such account shall at all times show the true state of account between such person and the United States.

"SEC. 23. That any person who is indebted to the United States on any of the accounts aforesaid may at any time pay into the bureau the whole or any part thereof, and may, at the time of making such payment, with the consent of the chief of bureau, elect in writing to make the security already given a continuing one until the expiration of the 50 years, and may, at any time during the life of the original loan, by check or draft, draw from the bureau a sum or sums up to the full amount of the loan originally granted. It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel and retire from time to time amounts equal to the payments made on loans under the provisions of this act, and in case payments of such loans are made in other currency of the United States, to cancel an equal amount of the notes hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 24. That the Secretary of the Treasury, whenever the trustees have requests for loans without funds available for the purpose, or whenever withdrawals reduce the reserve below 5 per cent of the deposits, shall be authorized and directed to cause to be printed, signed, and issued for such purpose circulating notes of the United States of the denominations of $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000 in such amounts as from time to time shall be necessary to meet the requirements of this act to be transferred to the trustees as they may need them and by them refunded when no longer needed.

"SEC. 25. That said notes when issued shall be a legal tender at their face value for all debts, public and private.

"SEC. 26. That whenever an application for a loan is refused, or when a loan once made has been fully paid without an election to continue same, the chief of the bureau shall make a certificate stating the fact, which certificate, filed in the office of the recorder of the county in which the original application was filed, shall release the lien of the United States upon the land described in the application.

"SEC. 27. That all loans made under the provisions of this act shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent, payable annually, and in default of the payment of any such interest, or on any default in payment of principal, the chief of bureau may order a foreclosure of the lien by a suit in the name of the United States, as plaintiff, in any court of the State in which such mortgaged property, or any part thereof, may be, or in any circuit or district court of the United States for the district in which such mortgaged property may lie, or if such mortgaged lands lie in a Territory or in the District of Columbia, then in such Territorial or District courts. All proceedings in foreclosure cases shall, as nearly as may be, conform to proceedings provided for by law in the States in which the property may be situated for foreclosure of mortgages, and in addition to the amount of the principal and interest recovered there shall in such proceedings be added to the principal and interest due, the cost thereof and attorney counsel fees at the rate of 5 per cent on the amount of the principal sums: Provided, That in no case shall such attorney and counsel fees exceed $500.

"SEC. 28. That postal savings bank funds shall be kept separate from other funds by the postmasters and other officers and employees of the Postal Service, who shall be held to the same accountability under their bonds for such funds as for public moneys; and no person connected with the Post Office Department shall disclose to any person other than the depositor the amount of any deposits unless directed so to do by the Postmaster General. That statutes relating to the safekeeping of and proper accounting for postal receipts are made applicable to postal savings bank funds, and the Postmaster General may require postmasters, assistant postmasters, and clerks at postal savings banks to give any additional bond he may deem necessary.

"SEC. 29. That additional compensation shall be allowed postmasters for the transaction of postal bank business, and shall be paid from the postal bank revenues.

"SEC. 30. That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Postmaster General and the board of trustees to establish postal savings banks in accordance with the provisions of this act; and the Postmaster General is authorized to employ postmasters and other postal officers and employees to transact in connection with their other duties such postal savings bank business as may be necessary; and he is also authorized to make and with the approval of the board of trustees to promulgate, and from time to time, to modify or revoke, subject to the approval of the board, such rules and regulations not in conflict with law as he may deem necessary to carry the provisions of this act into effect.

"SEC. 31. That all safeguards provided by law for the protection of public moneys, and all statutes relating to embezzlement, conversion, improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of postal and money-order funds and the punishments provided for such offenses are hereby extended and made applicable to postal savings bank funds, and all statutes relating to false returns of postal and money-order business, the forgery, counterfeiting, alteration, improper use or handling of postal and money-order blanks, forms, vouchers, accounts, and records, and the dies, plates, and engravings therefor, with the penalties provided in such statutes, are hereby extended and made applicable to the postal savings bank business, and the forgery, counterfeiting, alteration, improper use or handling of postal savings bank blanks, checks, forms, vouchers, accounts, and records, and the dies, plates, and engravings therefor.

"SEC. 32. That the faith of the United States is solemly pledged to the payment of the deposits made in postal savings banks.

"SEC. 33. That the final judgment, order, or decree of any court of competent jurisdiction adjudicating any right or interest in the credit of any sums deposited by any person with the postal savings bank, if the same shall not have been appealed from and the time for appeal expired, shall, upon submission to the Postmaster General of a copy of the same, duly authenticated in the manner provided by the laws of the United States for the authentication of the records and judicial proceedings of the court of any State or Territory or of any possession subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, when the same are proved or admitted within any other court within the United States, be accepted and pursued by the board of trustees as conclusive of the title, right, interest, or possession so adjudicated, and any payment of said sum in accordance with such order, judgment, or decree shall operate as a full and complete discharge of the United States from the claim or demand of any person or persons to the same."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not ask for a division.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment, offered by Mr. MAPES:

"Page 50, line 3, after the word 'appointed,' strike out the words 'without regard' and insert the word 'according.'"

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, the National Association of Civil Service Employees has been holding an annual meeting in this city to-day. I read in the afternoon papers that some of the distinguished Members of this House have been addressing that association.

This Congress has probably created more new offices, more new positions, than any other Congress in many years. It is a significant fact that notwithstanding the platform declaration of the majority party, those positions and those offices have almost invariably been taken out of the civil-service law and the civil-service regulations and have been put under the spoils system. I need only call your attention to the tariff act and the Federal reserve act, but there are many others.

Mr. MOORE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. MOORE. Do I understand from the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan that this bill proposes to violate the civil-service act?

Mr. MAPES. That is the very idea I wish to convey. This bill proposes to put the great rural-credit system at its inception under partisan political control. It expressly provides in section 3 of the bill, page 50, that "all such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, and other employees"—I am giving the language of the bill—"shall be appointed without regard to" the civil-service law or the regulations of the Civil Service Commission. A Federal rural-credit system, above every other, ought to be kept out of politics. One serious objection to the amendment as reported by the committee is that it creates another board, it creates another banking system without any corresponding benefits. It puts all of the employees of that system under the spoils system. It takes them out of the civil service by express enactment.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment proposes instead of taking them out of the civil service to place them under the civil service, and that the appointments be made after an examination according to the civil-service law and the regulations of the Civil Service Commission. This Congress has taken many backward steps with reference to the civil service. It ought not to take any more. I trust that my amendment will prevail. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MAPES. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided and there were—ayes 74, noes 136.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided, and the tellers [Mr. MAPES and Mr. LEVER] reported—ayes 91, noes 113.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULKLEY and Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] is recognized.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

"PURCHASE OF BONDS BY GOVERNMENT.

"SEC. 30. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon application of one or more of the Federal land banks herein established, and upon the recommendation of the Federal farm loan board, purchase from the Federal-land banks farm-loan bonds not previously issued or sold, in an amount not to exceed $50,000,000 during any one year, and shall pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That any land bank which may sell its bonds to the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided by this section, shall, by appropriate action of its board of directors, as consideration for the accommodation afforded by the Secretary of the Treasury, enter into an agreement that at any time on 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury said land bank will cease to make any investments whatever, and will devote all receipts from every source, except so much as may be necessary for the payment of maturing liabilities to the redemption of its bonds so purchased and held by the Secretary of the Treasury. The enforcement of said agreement shall be at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall have purchased any farm-loan bonds under the provisions of this section, he may hold the same until maturity, or may sell such bonds at his discretion.

"The Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the Federal farm loan board and the approval of the President, may issue and sell or use for the purposes of this act any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909, the act of February 4, 1910, and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal: Provided, That any Panama Canal bonds issued and sold or used under the provisions of this section or other existing authority may be made payable at such time after issue as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may deem advisable and fix, instead of 50 years after date of issue, as in said act of August 5, 1909: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury such bonds may bear a rate of interest not exceeding 3½ per cent per annum."

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I now offer represents the very life of the whole proposition.

Of all the rural-credits bills that have been considered in Congress, that one which represents the greatest labor, the greatest attention, the most careful consideration, the greatest amount of expert advice, is the Hollis-Bulkley bill.

It is a bill that could not have been written by one man or by two. It is the joint work of many minds. Section 30, providing for the purchase of bonds by the Government, which I now offer as an amendment, was a part of the original Hollis-Bulkley bill, and was a part of that bill as it was pending before Congress for 10 months. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee last Saturday, hastily called together to meet a parliamentary situation, reported out a new Hollis bill with section 30 stricken out of the original bill. The House Committee on Agriculture this morning, meeting hurriedly to meet an unexpected parliamentary situation, found itself obliged to indorse the work of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency for lack of greater knowledge of the subject on the part of the Members of the House Committee on Agriculture.

The amendment which I now offer brings the bill back to its original, well-considered form. It puts the life into the bill. The bonds which we propose will be, I think, as salable as any bonds that could be devised without Government aid. But I do not believe that any new series of bonds, unseasoned, could catch the popular approval and meet the public confidence promptly enough to insure the success of a system that did not have Government aid, and all the experience of the world justifies that conclusion.

This Government aid is as carefully guarded as any Government aid can be. If any man is for Government aid at all, he can vote for this proposition; and I appeal also to those who prefer that we concur in the McCumber amendment. This is not offered as an amendment to the McCumber proposition. It is offered to put life into the Hollis bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Do I understand the Bulkley-Hollis bill is the one that the two committees of the House and the Senate in joint session have been considering?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is the one, and it included section 30, providing for the purchase of bonds by the Government.

Mr. RAKER. One other question.

Mr. BULKLEY. All right.

Mr. RAKER. Is the Hollis bill now before the House practically the Hollis-Bulkley bill with section 30 eliminated, which you are seeking to have inserted?

Mr. BULKLEY. It is practically the same.

Mr. RAKER. Then if we vote for the Bulkley amendment, it will be the bill in the shape that the Senate and House committees recommended it should be in?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes. I refer to the subcommittees on rural credits of the House and Senate Committees on Banking and Currency.

Mr. RAKER. This section will have to go on in order that the bill may be effective?

Mr. BULKLEY. It will have to, in my opinion. If this section is not needed, it is not required to operate. There is nothing mandatory about it. It gives only that Government aid which is necessary to make the system a success. Without it we will linger long before the farmer gets any benefit, and he may never get any benefit at all. The experience of every nation in the world has been that it has been necessary for the Government to support farm credits in some financial way, either directly or indirectly. The instances pointed out by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss], where private institutions have successsfully competed with Government-aided institutions and produced a low interest rate, were instances where the low-interest rate did not come about except by competition with State-aided institutions.

In Germany there are a few institutions that do not receive State aid which are giving satisfactory service to the borrower, but they are operating alongside of State-aided institutions and under competition that effectively brings their interest rate down.

I can not discuss this matter as fully as it ought to be discussed here. I have discussed it heretofore for an hour and a half in an extended speech in this House, and I simply close now by appealing to every friend of Government aid in any form, whether he is for the McCumber amendment or the Hollis amendment, to at least help us perfect this Hollis amendment; to help us put Government aid in a well-considered bill in a well-considered manner. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. RUBEY rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in five minutes, two minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], two minutes by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and one minute by myself.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Does this simply insert section 30?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; it is simply to insert section 30.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. And not to strike out anything?

Mr. LEVER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman if he intended to offer his amendment as section 30, or as section 31?

Mr. BULKLEY. That is immaterial. I do not care about the numbering of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. It will naturally come in as section 31.

Mr. BULKLEY. The section has been generally known and discussed as section 30. It will of course be a new section.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire to take just about a minute or two for the purpose of stating my position upon the rural-credit proposition.

I feel the same regret which has been almost unanimously expressed here this evening, that we have had to take so short a time for the discussion of such an important measure. This bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and we gave to it as much time as we possibly could under the circumstances surrounding the case.

There are two ideas represented here this evening. Some of you gentlemen are conscientiously opposed to Government aid to rural credits. There are those who believe that a rural credit bill without Government aid will not amount to anything. I am in favor and have always been in favor of Government aid in a rural credit bill, and I shall heartily support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

[Mr. FERRIS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE) there were—ayes 157, noes 44.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 69, after line 22, insert the following:

"To recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury the purchase of farm-loan bonds subject to the provisions of this act."

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the corollary of the amendment just adopted. Each should go with the other. It was stricken out of the Bulkley-Hollis bill by the Committee on Banking and Currency at the time it struck out section 30. This should go back when section 30 goes back.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pages 78, 79, and 80, strike out section 17.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds, I think that this amendment will provoke some debate. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if the two gentlemen are both in favor of the amendment?

Mr. LEVER. No; one is against it and one for it. Mr. Chairman, I see that my friend from New York [Mr. PLATT], on the Banking and Currency Committee, wishes for a minute, and one other gentleman wishes a minute. I will modify my request by making it 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification mentioned by the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to strike out a section which is not a part of the original bill. Section 17 provides for the incorporation of private institutions, each with a capital of not less than $250,000, to do business in competition with the local farm-loan associations which are created by the bill.

The farm-loan associations would be cooperative associations, owned and controlled by the farmers who are borrowers from the system. These banks which are proposed by section 17 would be money-making institutions.

There are two principal objections to having such institutions brought in competition with local farm-loan associations. The first is that if they did any business at all they would be taking it away from the local institutions; they would then be dividing the field, and therefore relatively increasing the overhead expenses of the local institutions which are owned and controlled by the farmers themselves.

But a more fundamental objection than that may be urged against these $250,000 private banks. It is this: The original Hollis-Bulkley bill contemplated a complete system without anybody interested in raising interest rates. Everybody connected with the system would be interested in reducing the rates of interest to the farmers, who are the borrowers. But if this section 17 is written into the bill, you at once have great and powerful institutions, with heavy financial backing, who are interested in a direction opposite to the interests of the farmers. They are interested in keeping the interest rates high as against the interest of the farmers.

The new Hollis bill proposes too many of these institutions competing with each other in the bond market. In the original bill the bonds would have a national market and all farm-loan bonds would be the same throughout the United States. All would sell at the lowest possible interest rate. Under this amendment as proposed in the new Hollis bill 48 institutions would be competing with each other for the market. There would be 48 different classes of bonds, and the investor would be confused, and there would be room for commissions and rake offs for brokers.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Would not such competition bring down the rates to the farmers?

Mr. BULKLEY. It might under peculiar circumstances, but we believe that the creation of farm-loan associations under the control of farmers themselves, with the possibility of competition between such farmers' institutions, would be sufficient. We do not provide a monopoly for one farm-loan association. If the territory is big enough to afford a large enough field, there may be two local associations or more operating in the same county. We believe that interest rates will be brought down by those who are interested in bringing them down more than by competition on the part of those who have a selfish interest in keeping the rates up.

Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize again the importance of having bonds of one issue, so that the investor will know what he is getting when he buys a farm-loan bond. Do not have 48 different institutions competing against each other in the bond market.

The gentleman from Indiana says that the farmers will get up these institutions. Does anybody suppose that a farmer will get up an institution with a capital stock of $250,000?

The truth of it is that the $250,000 minimum capital stock is too large for a farmers' institution, and yet it is too small to command public confidence in its bond issue. It will not be comparable to the Pennsylvania Railroad, a comparison which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOSS] makes. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. has a basis for its bond issues much larger than the $250,000 contemplated for these banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, this afternoon when I spoke for a few moments on this bill the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], a member of the Committee on Agriculture, interrupted me and asked me if I did not know that the whole Moss bill was included in this report from the Committee on Agriculture. I said I did not. The provision on pages 78 and 79 is all there is from the Moss bill. They now propose to strike that out. That shows how much sincerity there is in the proposition. The only thing to do is to vote down this whole committee report. Anybody who believes in Government aid ought to vote for the MCCUMBER proposition, pure and simple. Those who do not believe in it with this section out have practically nothing left to vote for. I am strongly against this amendment.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak on this amendment for just two minutes. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to speak for two minutes on this amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I will tell the committee what this means. This means that the very people who will organize with big capital are those who have been putting the burden of high interest rates upon the farmers of this country. And more than that. They can loan 20 times the $250,000 under this bill. Each one of these concerns can loan $5,000,000. What more do they get? They can get their stock or surplus or profits released from taxation in every form under this bill, and this is the very thing they have been trying to get in this bill from start to finish; something to let these big capitalists and monopolists get control of farm credit. That is what they have been trying to do. This amendment ought to be voted up. These quarter-million banks ought not to have these rights in this bill, if you are going to have a farmers' bill. The exemption privileges were never intended for private capital in farm credit to this extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BULKLEY and Mr. RAGSDALE) there were—ayes 130, noes 81.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 48, line 16, after the word "thereby" strike out the rest of the paragraph.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a corollary to the last one adopted and strikes out the reference to these farm bond banks.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 97, line 9, after the word "stockholder" strike out the rest of the line and all of line 10.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is the same sort of amendment that strikes out another reference to farm bond banks, and that completes it.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, strike outlines 4 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read the matter proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the matter to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 74, line 4: "Whenever subscriptions to stock by farm loan associations under the provisions of section 12 would increase the total capital stock of the Federal land bank beyond $500,000 if issued, and any stock of said bank is then held by the United States Treasury, an amount of such Treasury stock equal to such excess shall be paid for and canceled, and in lieu thereof a similar amount of stock shall be issued to the subscriber."

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will try to explain briefly the effect of this. It is required by the Hollis bill that every local land loan association shall be a stockholder in the Federal land bank of its district. It is further required that, if the local associations and the public do not subscribe a sufficient amount of stock in any Federal land bank to make the minimum of $500,000, the United States Treasury shall subscribe for the unsubscribed balance.

The language which I now propose to strike out provides that if after the minimum amount has been subscribed and then additional subscriptions come in from the local associations of the district, making the capital stock in amount larger than the minimum, the Treasury must cancel its stock and it must be paid off so that the stock shall be kept down to $500,000. Now, this is not an amendment of very great importance, but it seems to me that if additional subscriptions come in from the local loan associations, it simply means that the Federal land bank is doing a good business and is filling a need in the community. Under those circumstances it seems to me that the Government may well allow its investment to stand. We must remember that the total amount that the Government could possibly be called upon to subscribe for all the land banks together is somewhat less than $6,000,000, so that it can not be a matter of great consequence to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "expenses," before the period in line 7, page 49, the following "And shall hold his office for a period of four years."

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I have carefully examined section 3 and the entire bill, and nowhere is there any provision to limit the term of office of the commissioner of the land credit commission. Now, I do not suppose you want him to hold office for life, and I think it is an oversight.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that we have no objection to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the original text of the McCumber amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

Page 88 of the printed bill with the Senate amendment, line 13——

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Are we now considering the McCumber bill? How can we be offering this amendment if we are not?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute to the McCumber bill now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the McCumber amendment is in order at this time when a gentleman is recognized for that purpose. Both propositions are open to amendment, the Senate amendment and the committee amendment, whenever any gentleman is recognized to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. The amendment has not been reported as yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I should like my point to be ruled upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RAGSDALE. As I understand, we are not considering the McCumber amendment at this time, but considering the amendment reported out by the Committee on Agriculture. How can we consider an amendment to the McCumber amendment, which is not under consideration?

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about that.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk on the point of order. The committee offers a substitute to the Senate amendment. That substitute, of course, must be perfected. When perfected it should be voted upon as a substitute to the Senate amendment. If voted down, then other amendments may be offered to the Senate amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAGSDALE. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has raised the point of order, and that is being considered.

Mr. RAGSDALE. As I understood it, we went into the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the resolution that was reported back from the Committee on Agriculture. Now, then, while we are in that committee can we consider an amendment that has not been reported from that committee?

Mr. BATHRICK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that the orderly proceeding, it seems to me, would have been to perfect the original matter to which the substitute was offered before perfecting the substitute. We have taken the unusual course, out of order, of perfecting the substitute first; but that does not make it out of order to perfect the original matter for which the substitute is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. That is exactly what the Chair ruled. This is the first amendment that has been offered to the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] offers an amendment to that for the purpose of perfecting it, and that amendment the Chair declares in order.

Mr. MANN. An amendment to either one is in order when a person is recognized for that purpose.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BATHRICK. I have an important amendment to be offered to the House substitute.

Mr. MANN. That will still be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr BATHRICK. I offer the following amendment, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman to offer the amendment now.

Mr. BATHRICK. I thought the Chair said I had been recognized.

Mr. MANN. He will be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr ANDERSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 88, line 13, after the word "bearing," insert the following: "Interest at such rate as may be fixed by the commissioners of farm credits, not exceeding"; and strike out the word "interest," in line 14, so that the lines as amended will read: "That whenever the bureau of farm credits shall have received such mortgages to the extent of $1,000,000, it shall issue bonds in the name of the United States, payable in 20 years and bearing interest at such rate as may be fixed by the commissioners of farm credits, not exceeding 4½ per cent interest, payable annually," etc.

Mr. ANDERSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what action the House will take as to the Hollis-Bulkley-Moss proposition and the McCumber proposition. But it is perfectly obvious that, whatever action the House does take as between the two, they both ought to be perfected before the House takes any action.

There are some obvious defects in the McCumber proposition which ought to be corrected, and the one which I seek to correct by this amendment is one of them. The McCumber amendment provides that whenever the bureau of farm credits shall receive such farm mortgages to the extent of $1,000,000 it shall issue bonds in the name of the United States payable in 20 years and bearing 4½ per cent interest.

Now, it is perfectly obvious that there can be no sound reason for fixing the rate of interest upon these Government bonds at 4½ per cent. It is perfectly obvious that doing so would depreciate the price of all the bonds that the Federal Government has already issued. The only purpose which my amendment has is to permit the commissioner of farm credits to fix a lower rate than 4½ per cent if the bonds can be sold at that lower rate. The result will simply be that, by an amendment which I intend to offer later, if the bonds can be sold, as they can, at a rate lower than 4½ per cent, the farmer in asking for a loan will get the benefit of a lower rate also.

It is my purpose also to offer an amendment later, if this amendment shall be adopted, providing that the bonds may be sold for an amount in excess of the face value. In other words, this proposition now provides that the bonds provided for by the McCumber substitute must be sold at their par value. Of course, if the Government can get more than par from the sale of its bonds, it ought to do it. That is a perfectly apparent proposition, as is the other proposition that if it can sell the bonds at a lower rate of interest than 4½ per cent it should do that.

Mr. Chairman, there are other things that might be stated, but the House is tired, and I am willing to submit the proposition on that statement.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the committee—at least those on this side of the House—are quite ready to accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 88, line 18, after the word "for," insert the words "not less than."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, to save the time of the committee, unless the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] desires to talk, I will say that we on this side have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, what are you amending there?

The CHAIRMAN. The McCumber amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. Have you got two questions before the House?

Mr. MANN. Yes; the two questions are before the House at the same time.

Mr. MURRAY. You can not have two questions before the House at one and the same time. You must dispose of one or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BATHRICK to the Hollis amendment: In line 3, page 66, after the word "situated," insert "but in no case shall the interest be over 6 per cent."

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, the crux of the whole farm-credit question is this: What is the interest rate going to be? There is nothing in the Hollis bill that indicates to anybody what the rate will be, and if you are going to pass this bill through this House you should have some limitation upon this rate. I think it is extremely liberal to the proponents of the Hollis measure to say that this interest rate shall not exceed 6 per cent. If I dared, I would make it 5 per cent. I want to get all I can. If you do not put this amendment into the bill, no borrower will know what the rate will be, and in many cases it will be far above that which I have proposed. If you wish to perfect the bill, this is the main thing to do. No bill of any kind is worth anything without a definite interest rate. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BATHRICK) there were—ayes 114, noes 23.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the McCumber bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON:

On page 85 of the McCumber amendment, line 7, strike out the words "at the rate of 5 per cent per annum" and insert "at such rate, not exceeding 5 per cent per annum, as the commissioner of farm credits may fix."

Mr. LEVER. We will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The affirmative vote was taken.

[Mr. WINGO addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO and Mr. CARAWAY) there were—153 ayes, 42 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLAUGHLIN to the Hollis amendment:
Page 49, line 6, strike out "$12,000" and insert "$7,500."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of providing a reasonable salary for the farm-loan commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the McCumber amendment:

Page 85, line 10, strike out the words "rate of 5 per cent per annum," and insert in lieu thereof "the same rate as the principal note:"

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides, in accordance with the interest on the coupon note in case the interest of the principal note should be less than 5 per cent, that they shall be the same as the interest on the principal note. It makes the interest of the coupon note the same as the interest on the principal note.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 90, line 10, after the word "appropriate," insert "Provided, That not more than $30,000,000 of such bonds shall be issued in any one year."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in the bill in the form in which my genial friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] desires to have it, and as it is now, would permit the farm-credit bill provided by the McCumber amendment to issue bonds in an absolutely unlimited amount. Of course that may be a good thing from the standpoint of the gentleman from Arkansas, but it does not seem to me to be a good thing from the standpoint of the United States. The amendment I propose limits the amount of bonds which can be issued in any one year to $30,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 41, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the committee as amended.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word just here to gentlemen who really want farm-credit legislation, that this bill, as amended by the Bulkley provision of Government aid, is the best thing in sight for the farmers of America. It furnishes aid as the Government now gives aid to the national banking system. I am heartily in favor of a rural credit system, and I made a speech in this House not long ago in favor of such legislation. [Applause.]

I think it best at this late hour in the session that we take the bill that has been unanimously reported by the Senate

Banking and Currency Committee. The McCumber proposition that came to this House was not considered by the Senate. There were only a half dozen Senators present, I understand, when it passed the Senate, and when it did come to us, the Senate, Democrats and Republicans, who really desired to have a rural credits bill that had something in it, met, and the Committee on Banking and Currency over there unanimously, I am told, reported the bill that came to us; and the Committee on Agriculture, of which I am a member, unanimously reported that bill to this House; and since we have had it under consideration here I have voted for amendments to perfect it, and stated in the committee that I would vote them. Mr. Chairman, we have put upon it the Bulkley amendment which I supported. [Applause.] It has got the Government-aid proposition in it, and I want to say to gentlemen here if you vote for the McCumber substitute, you vote for something that is doomed, for the President has already said that he would veto it, and you know that it is useless to follow that crude and unfinished measure further, because the newspapers this morning said that the President would veto the McCumber bill in its present shape. I do not know. I have not seen or talked with the President about this matter, but I do not believe that he would veto the Bulkley-Hollis bill as here amended.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I have only five minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield. I trust that you gentlemen will not be misled into voting for a measure at this time that you yourselves believe will be vetoed, when, by voting for this measure, we have a chance to get the legislation desired.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Did not the President get the Bulkley amendment out of this Hollis bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. I know nothing about that, and I have heard nothing of it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Well, I have.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman's information may not be correct, but I will state this, Mr. Chairman: I do not believe he would veto this substitute that we have here as amended by the Bulkley amendment. I believe when you get this bill in the committee of conference, unanimously reported by the Banking and Currency Committee in the Senate and unanimously reported by a House committee and acted on by this House, amended with the Bulkley provision, you will find there will be an effort on the part of Members in both branches of Congress to secure farm-credit legislation; and do not you gentlemen hug to your breast the delusion that you can go down fighting for the McCumber amendment and go out and say that you fought for a rural-credit system, when you are tied to something that you know now is going to be defeated. If you want a farm-credit system, vote for this bill as amended. It has got meat in it. Send it to the conference committee, and let us try to work out something that is good for the farmers of this country. Now, here is a bill indorsed by farmers' union men and others interested in the establishment of a genuine farm-credit system. It has in it aid and encouragement by the Federal Government and an amendment saying that you shall not charge the farmer more than 6 per cent interest. I shall count it a great victory for the friends of farm-credit legislation if this House shall go on record to-night as having passed the bill that contains these two propositions. I am in favor of giving the same encouragement and aid to the farm-credit system that the Government now gives to the commercial banking system. The farmers of America are entitled to this much, and they ask no more, and I appeal to all gentlemen who really want this legislation at this time to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] made one of the most remarkable statements that I have ever heard made in this House. He said that the President has said that he would veto a bill if it passed in a certain manner.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I said the statement was in the newspaper. I heard he had said it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said exactly what I say he said.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I said later that I had not talked to him, and stated that the newspaper said that he said it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman said that the President had said that he would veto the bill, and when we challenged by our attitude such a statement the gentleman crawfished.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman did not crawfish and never crawfishes. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman then endeavored to explain that the newspaper said so. I want to know whether it is true. Has the President said, for the purpose of improperly influencing the action of this Congress, that he will veto a measure before it has been presented to him? I do not believe that the President would so belittle his position. He has the right to determine, when a bill is passed and presented to him, whether he will veto it; but he has no right to say in advance, by a threat to Congress, that if Congress passes a certain measure in a certain manner he will veto it. [Applause.] I challenge the statement of the gentleman from Alabama that the President has made any such statement. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I stated in the outset that I had understood the President had said he would veto it, and the Washington Post contained a statement to that effect this morning; and I said later, qualifying my statement, that I had not talked with the President, but that it was rumored around here that he had said it, or that he had said that he would veto the bill. I think gentlemen here believe that he would veto it; and I was simply appealing to them to vote for a bill that had a chance, because the Banking and Currency Committee in the Senate is back of it and our committee unanimously reported it, and it has been perfected by amendments, with the Bulkley provision in it; and gentlemen have an opportunity to vote for a bill that has got something in it, in spite of all this falderal that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has undertaken to inject into the debate. [Applause.]

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield for a question? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask my good friend [Mr. HEFLIN] a question or two, but he sat down before I got the chance. I desire to make a statement now. When we were considering the currency bill here the same newspapers that stated a few days ago that the President would veto rural-credit legislation then stated that he would veto the currency bill. The proof of the pudding is in the chewing in the bag. He did no such thing, and I do not believe that the newspapers have any more authority to make the statement that he would veto the result of the deliberations of this Congress on this subject than they then had to make the statement that he would veto the currency bill then; but even if we assume that statement to be true we are in exactly the same fix with the Bulkley amendment as we are with the McCumber amendment. I saw the statement the gentleman referred to, and the same paragraph of the same newspaper that stated that he would veto the McCumber bill stated in substance and in effect that he would veto any kind of legislation that had behind it the proposition of Government aid, and that is all there is in this Bulkley amendment. I do not believe the President will do any such thing; but if the President does it is a matter for him and his splendid good conscience to decide. It is the duty of this House to do its duty as it sees that duty, and to enact legislation that ought to be enacted, and it is likewise the duty of the President to approve or reject legislation as duty marks the way, and I am sure that he desires this to be done. [Applause.] That is the demand the people of my district and my State make. That was the demand of the Democratic caucus participated in by my splendid friend from Alabama, and it was an unanimous demand, voted for by every man who sat in that caucus; voted for by the splendid chairman of this committee, who made two of the best speeches in behalf of rural-credit legislation that were made in that three weeks caucus.

Now, if gentlemen say that simply because the Democrats have been caught asleep, because that is the situation [laughter on the Republican side], they were asleep on the proposition of rural-credits legislation, and McCUMBER put his amendment in and "slipped it over" on them, by which means it comes as an amendment in this bill, then I say let us put the McCumber amendment in this bill and start the work along at this time, trusting its future to the usual orderly consideration.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. I do.

Mr. HEFLIN. I just want to ask my friend if he does not think it would be wise to adopt this Hollis-Bulkley-Moss-Fletcher proposition of Government aid furnished by section 30 that BULKLEY put into the bill? Does not the gentleman think that the bill which was worked on for nearly two years is a better proposition than the unfinished, crude McCumber proposition?

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Well, I think that the Hollis-Bulkley bill has 50 or 60 pages containing a lot of machinery designed to get some kind of rural-credit legislation. It has not been digested by the House and very few understand its provisions; and I think that while the McCumber proposition is crude, and while it may be couched in language that perhaps in some instances ought not to obtain, it gets the meat out of the coconut, and that is what the people of my State want; they want relief, and they want it at once. They do not want a lot of high-sounding phrases that simply provide a lot of machinery and get no results. We want business. I hope the Bulkley-Hollis amendment will do this, but I am not as well satisfied with that as I am with the McCumber amendment, and believe this will help, and then the next Congress can take more time to fix it and make such amendments as may be necessary. I believe this is as easy as to swallow all of this amendment, which few Members understand. I am for action now and making repairs afterwards.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to close all debate on Senate amendment 89 and all amendments thereto, including the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move or ask unanimous consent?

Mr. LEVER. I move.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that all debate on Senate amendment No. 89 and all amendments and substitutes thereto be closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the substitute offered by the committee.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. In voting on this substitute if we vote it down, the vote then recurs on the McCumber amendment.

Mr. GORDON. As amended.

The CHAIRMAN. On the McCumber amendment as amended. The question now is on the committee substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 124, noes 109.

Mr. NORTON and Mr. BRYAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. LEVER and Mr. NEELEY of Kansas) reported—ayes 160, noes 99.

So the substitute as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Senate amendment has not yet been agreed to as amended by the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the Senate amendment as amended.

The Senate amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that all of the Senate amendments be disagreed to except Senate amendment No. 89, which shall be agreed to with the amendment adopted by the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration Senate amendments to H. R. 20415, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that all of said amendments except Senate amendment No. 89 be disagreed to, and that this amendment be concurred in with an amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question on all amendments to their final disposition.

Mr. LEVY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVY. Can you strike out of amendment No. 89 the Bulkley amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not when the motion for the previous question is pending. The question now is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. At this point does not the Speaker ask if there is a separate vote desired on the different amendments?

Mr. MANN. A motion to recommit has been offered.

The SPEAKER. You have to dispose of the motion to recommit first. The Chair has studied a good deal on this subject.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER. At the proper time I wish to raise a point of order against any motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Right now is the time.

Mr. GARDNER. Before the motion is read?

The SPEAKER. Well, the Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WINGO moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to report forthwith Senate amendment No. 89, known as the McCumber amendment, without amendment, as a substitute for the amendment reported to the House.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will regard the motion as made and will put it at the proper time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is recognized.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the general practice of a motion to recommit under general parliamentary law is that it shall not be in order after the previous question. But the practice grew up because it was found that we considered bills in such a narrow way that there was only one amendable stage.

The House was given an extra stage for a record vote, for a last glance, by a motion to recommit after the previous question was ordered. That was done because it was found that the House was in the habit of ordering the previous question without much thought. Therefore this new stage in the consideration of a bill when it first went through the House, the equivalent of an extra reading, as it were, was allowed. That is allowed by two rules; first by section 4 of Rule XVI, which reads:

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution—

This is not a bill or joint resolution, with the question of passage pending, but a question of agreeing to a certain amendment—

one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference—

And so forth.

That is Rule XVI, section 4. Now, there is another rule of the House under which a motion to recommit is permissible after the previous question is ordered. It is Rule XVII, paragraph 1. The last sentence of that paragraph reads:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for, or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage—

This is not the question of the passage; this is a question of agreeing to a Senate amendment—for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to recommit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, this is not a case for one of these extra stages. They are not separate readings, first, second, and third, motions to engross, and so forth, but a plain question of agreeing to a Senate amendment. It is not a question needing a successive stage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is only one decision, so far as I know, bearing on the question at all. That is No. 5573 in Hinds' Precedents. No. 5575, since my attention has been called to it, seems to be in point—5575, which entirely escaped my observation, which is in point, but entirely contrary to the view I entertained.

The SPEAKER. By analogy there must be some place, somewhere, to make the motion to recommit. The question now is on the motion for the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] demands the yeas any nays on the motion to recommit. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Seventy gentlemen have risen in favor of the yeas and nays—a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit may again be reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion to recommit will again be read.

The motion to recommit was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to recommit will vote "yea"; those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 239, answered "present" 1, not voting 94, as follows:

[Roll No. 96.]

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on amendment numbered 89.

The SPEAKER. That is the separate recommendation of the committee. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. These amendments having been referred by the House to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and reported back as amendments, if they are disagreed to en bloc will they appear in the RECORD and in the Journal as amendments which are disagreed to?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so; yes.

Mr. HENRY. All except amendment 89.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the first thing to do is to put the part of the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that all the amendments except 89 be disagreed to.

Mr. MANN. I will not ask for a separate vote upon those amendments, if they are to be inserted in the RECORD and Journal as disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Official Reporters and the Journal Clerk to set them all out. All those in favor of that part of the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that all the amendments except 89 be disagreed to will say "aye"; those opposed "no."

The question was taken, and the motion that all the amendments except 89 be disagreed to was carried.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NEELEY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the shipping bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the shipping bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. Moss of Indiana, and Mr. LONERGAN made the same request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to any more remarks tonight being extended in the RECORD. Let gentlemen make their requests to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the shipping bill and that was granted, and then the other gentlemen said they made the same request. I presume there were a number of gentlemen who did not desire to extend on the shipping bill, but on this bill.

Mr. MANN. Unanimous consent was granted, after the shipping bill was passed by the House without much debate, to several gentleman, a day or two after, to extend remarks on the shipping bill. Thereupon they proceeded to insert remarks in the RECORD as of the date the shipping bill was passed, contrary to the order of the House. If the request is to extend remarks on the shipping bill as of that date, I object; but if it is a request to extend remarks of this date, I do not care.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The reason I made the observation was that the gentleman from Kansas asked unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the shipping bill and that was granted. And then a number of gentlemen said, "I make the same request."

The SPEAKER. The Chair construes all the requests after that of the gentleman from Kansas as being on this rural-credit proposition. Is there objection to the extension of these remarks on the rural credits? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CORRESPONDENCE OF CARRIERS AS EVIDENCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I report back the bill (S. 7738) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended June 29, 1906, February 25, 1909, and June 18, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object at this time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to make a statement regarding this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be an objection to the reception of the report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to make a statement regarding this matter which, I trust, will appeal to the Senator from Utah.

In the Louisville & Nashville case it has been recently determined that the interstate-commerce law does not in its inquisitorial powers apply to the correspondence of corporations, the decision of the court being that the word "correspondence" is not in the law and that the words "accounts, records, and memoranda" do not cover correspondence. It has been the almost uniform custom of the railroads of the country for many years to submit to these inquisitorial powers relating to their correspondence, and it has been the uniform practice of the commission to exercise those powers. It would impair the commission's efficiency if those powers are not continued in their exercise.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has sent to the Interstate Commerce Committee a recommendation that section 20 be amended by inserting the word "correspondence" in addition to the words "accounts, records, and memoranda," and so forth. This bill was introduced by me and is now favorably reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee, and that committee has gone further and has authorized me to offer it as an amendment to any appropriation bill. It is a bill of the highest importance, and I trust that the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection in order that I may submit this report to the Senate. It is simply a favorable report recommending the passage of the bill and the bill will come later for consideration.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it is quite useless for the Senator from Utah to withdraw his objection, for I shall object to it. I think it is vicious legislation, and I shall strenuously object to any attempt to put through a provision of that kind in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I must protest against the very violent language that the Senator uses with reference to this bill. These powers have now been exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission beneficially to the country for many years, and there is a universal recognition of this fact.

The exercise of that power has not been the exercise of a vicious power, but it has been in the interest of substantial justice. The Interstate Commerce Committee is not justly chargeable with recommending to this body a vicious bill.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think we have gone far enough in the creation of inquisitorial powers. There is but very little left of the constitutional protection against searches and seizures, and Congress ought not without the most careful and thorough deliberation extend that power. I shall insist upon my objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection. Of course, the report can not be received without unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Nevada that the Committee on Appropriations has put upon the general deficiency appropriation bill this very provision, as the Senator knows, having come from that committee not 15 minutes ago.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that, but I am entitled to have the report from the committee presented to this body, and I shall press it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me? I have a resolution which I want to offer, a Senate resolution, and if it takes any time I will withdraw it. It is simply a resolution calling for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. ASHURST. If it leads to no debate I yield.

BATHHOUSES AT TIDAL BASIN.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 557), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to as follows:

Whereas in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill the Senate added an amendment thereto providing for the beginning of the construction of bathing beaches on the Tidal Basin in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C., in accordance with the plans and specifications outlined by the Secretary of War in Senate Document No. 593, Sixty-third Congress, second session; and

Whereas representatives of the Public Health Service, one of the bureaus in the Treasury Department, appeared before the conferees on said bill and represented that the waters in said Tidal Basin are polluted to such a degree that bathing therein would be dangerous to health; and

Whereas there is now located upon the banks of the said Tidal Basin a boat and bathhouse operated by private persons for gain, and through said private parties persons are permitted, upon paying fees therefor, to bathe in said Tidal Basin: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War be instructed to inform the Senate—

First. By what authority of law or regulation are private parties permitted to maintain a boat and bathhouse on said Tidal Basin.

Second. What rental or fee, if any, is paid by the proprietors of said boat and bathhouse for the privilege of maintaining the same on the shores of said Tidal Basin.

Third. What is the cause of the contamination and the pollution of the waters of said Tidal Basin; and Fourth. By what means, if any, can the waters of said Tidal Basin be freed from such pollution and contamination.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20415) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, agrees to the amendment of the Senate No. 89 to said bill with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and Mr. HAUGEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20415) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and agreeing to the amendment of the Senate No. 89 to the bill with an amendment, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is very hard in the confusion to follow this matter. I understand that the House has agreed, with an amendment, to the rural-credits amendment, which was put into the bill by the Senate, and that that amendment is an entirely new provision; that that is what it amounts to. I think I am not mistaken, am I?

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Massachusetts states the fact correctly.

Mr. LODGE. So that amendment, of course, goes to conference with the other amendment.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; that is the amendment to which I have moved that the Senate disagree.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator from Oklahoma move that the Senate agree to the House amendment?

Mr. GORE. No; that the Senate disagree to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate insist upon its amendment, disagree to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to make sure, Mr. President, that the Senate did not agree to the House amendment to the McCumber amendment, because the House amendment is an entirely new provision.

Mr. GORE. It is an entirely new provision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I ask that we may have the bill printed. Of course it will go to conference, and I presume it could be printed for the use of Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has already been printed, the Chair understands, and will be printed in the RECORD.

The Chair hears no objection to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and it is agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] asked that at least this new amendment should be put in some form, so that we might read it when the conference report comes back.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair appoints, as the conferees on the part of the Senate, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate is as follows:

That the short title of this act shall be "The Federal farm loan act," and its administration shall be under the control and direction of the Federal farm loan board created under the terms of this act.

DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 2. That wherever the term "first mortgage" is used in this act it shall be held to include such classes of first liens on real estate as shall be approved by the Federal farm loan board, and the credit instruments secured thereby.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

SEC. 3. That a Federal farm loan board is hereby created which shall consist of three members, including the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be members ex officio, and a farm loan commissioner appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Said farm loan commissioner shall be a citizen of the United States, and shall devote his entire time to the business of said Federal farm loan board. He shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses, and shall hold his office for a period of four years. He shall not be a stockholder or officer in any bank, trust company, or financial institution of any sort.

Said farm loan commissioner shall act as chairman and active executive officer of said board. He shall be assigned offices for himself and his assistants and employees in the Department of the Treasury by the Secretary of the Treasury. Within 15 days after notice of his appointment he shall make and subscribe to the oath of office. The President shall have power to fill any vacancy occurring in the office of farm loan commissioner during the recess of the Senate by granting a commission which shall expire 30 days after the next session of the Senate convenes.

Said Federal farm loan board shall be authorized and empowered to employ such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, or other employees as it may deem necessary to conduct the business of said board. All salaries and fees shall be fixed in advance by said board and shall be paid in the same manner as the salary of the farm loan commissioner. All such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, and other employees shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883 (vol. 22, U. S. Stat. L., p. 403), and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service.

The said farm loan commissioner shall from time to time, as determined by the Federal farm loan board, require examinations and reports of condition of all national farm loan associations and Federal land banks established under the provisions of this act, and consolidated statements of the results thereof shall be published. He shall cause to be made appraisals of farm lands as provided by this act, shall prepare and publish amortization tables for use by national farm loan associations, and examine and give his opinion upon the laws of the several States relating to mortgage loans. He shall perform such other duties as said board may assign.

The said commissioner shall prescribe a form for statement of condition of farm loan associations and Federal land banks, which shall be filled out quarterly by each such association or bank and transmitted to him, and such statements shall be public records.

NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

SEC. 4. That associations to be known as national farm loan associations for carrying on the business of lending on farm-mortgage security under this act may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than five. They shall enter into articles of association, which shall specify in general terms the object for which the association is formed and the county or counties within which its operations are to be carried on, and may contain any other provisions not inconsistent with law, which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conduct of its affairs. These articles shall be signed by the persons uniting to form the association, and a copy of them shall be forwarded to the farm loan commissioner, to be filed and preserved in his office.

Upon receiving an application to charter a national farm loan association the farm loan commissioner shall make an examination of the need for such association and of the land values and density of population of the county or counties named as the operating territory of the national farm loan association applying for charter. He may send an inspector to investigate and report thereon, and, if he shall deem best, may grant the said application. In such event he shall designate a county or group of contiguous counties as a farm loan district for such association under the provisions of this section.

The persons uniting to form a national farm loan association under this act shall, under their hands, make an organization certificate, which shall specifically state:

First. The name assumed by such association, which name shall be subject to the approval of the farm loan commissioner.

Second. The State and county, or group of contiguous counties, within which its operations are to be carried on, and the particular city, town, or village at which its principal office is to be located.

Third. The amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which the same is to be divided.

Fourth. The names and places of residence of the stockholders and the number of shares held by each of them.

Fifth. The fact that the certificate is made to enable such persons to avail themselves of the advantages of this act.

The organization certificate shall be acknowledged before a judge of some court of record or notary public, and shall be, together with the acknowledgment thereof, authenticated by the seal of such court or notary, transmitted to the farm loan commissioner, who shall record and carefully preserve the same in his office, where it shall be at all times open to public inspection.

Upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate the association shall become, as from date of the execution of its organization certificate, a body corporate, and as such, and in the name designated in the organization certificate, it shall have power—

First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

Second. To have succession for the period of 50 years from its organization, unless it is sooner dissolved according to the provisions of its articles of association or by the act of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock or by act of Congress, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law.

Third. To make contracts.

Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, as fully as natural persons.

Fifth. To elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to elect a president and a vice president, appoint a secretary-treasurer and other officers and employees; define their duties; require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof; by action of its board of directors dismiss such officers and employees or any of them at pleasure and appoint others to fill their places.

Sixth. To prescribe, by its board of directors, subject to the oversight and regulation of the farm loan commissioner, by-laws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected, its officers elected or appointed, its property transferred, its general business conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

Seventh. To exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business herein described.

But no farm loan association shall engage in any transactions except such as are incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization until it has been authorized by the farm loan commissioner to commence business.

CAPITAL STOCK.

SEC. 5. That the capital stock of each national farm loan association shall be not less than $10,000 and shall be divided into shares of $25 each.

Every stockholder shall be entitled to one vote on each share of stock held by him at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of stockholders: Provided, That the maximum number of votes which may be cast by any one stockholder shall be 10.

Whenever the board of directors of any farm loan association shall so authorize, said association shall permit individuals to subscribe for shares therein on a partial payment, or building and loan association, plan, by making a cash payment of 10 per cent of the face value of such shares, and entering into a written agreement to make further payments for such shares at stated periods until such shares are fully paid for.

Said written agreement shall provide in appropriate terms:

First. That additional partial payments of a stated amount shall be made monthly, quarterly, semiannually, or annually, on definite days, to an amount not less in any one year than 10 per cent of the face value of the shares subscribed for.

Second. That any subscriber who neglects to make payments as prescribed in said agreements shall be subject to a fine of 2 cents per month upon each dollar of arrears.

Third. That if any member is in arrears for any payment for a period of six months, the board of directors may, upon 30 days' notice in writing, declare his stock forfeited, and the value of his interest in said association shall be determined by reckoning the total amount of payments made, adding thereto any accrued dividends, deducting therefrom any fines imposed and unpaid, his equitable share of any losses, and a further sum equal to 10 per cent of his gross payments as a withdrawal fee. If the amount so determined is less than $25, it shall be forfeited to the association, unless said subscriber shall add thereto in cash a sum sufficient to make up $25, and in such event said subscriber shall receive a certificate for one share of stock. If the amount so determined is $25 or more, said subscriber shall receive a certificate for as many shares as said amount entitles him to, forfeiting any fractional part of a share, or at his option subscribing additional cash to make up the amount required for an additional full share, which he shall then receive.

Fourth. That if any subscriber shall wish to avail himself of withdrawal privileges before his shares are fully paid in, he shall be entitled to do so by giving to the board of directors one month's notice in writing; upon the expiration of said month he shall be entitled to receive certificates of stock to which he is entitled upon the same basis herein provided for forfeiture of stock. The assignment of such shares may be permitted in the discretion of the directors.

Except as herein specifically provided, no certificates of stock shall be issued to any subscriber unless fully paid in. Whenever payments and dividends on shares subscribed on the partial-payment plan amount to $25 each, the subscriber shall receive a certificate for the face value of such shares, together with an amount in cash equal to any excess that may be credited to said subscriber on account of said shares. Every such subscriber shall be entitled to dividends upon a number of shares whose value shall equal the total sum paid in by such subscriber prior to any dividend period, but no dividend shall be allowed on fractional parts of a share. The farm loan commissioner shall prescribe rules and regulations for partial-payment shares in each Federal land bank district, not inconsistent with this act, and containing equitable provision for—

First. The adjustment of losses and of dividend credits;

Second. The imposition of fines for default in payments;

Third. The forfeiture and withdrawal of shares or of payments therefor upon default or failure to pay duly imposed fines;

Fourth. Any additional provisions necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

At least 50 per cent of the capital stock of every farm loan association shall be paid in cash before any such association shall be authorized to begin business; and the remainder of the capital stock of such association may, at the discretion of its incorporators, be paid in first mortgages upon lands of the subscribers of the character described in section 8 of this act, without the restrictions provided in the sixth paragraph thereof.

At least 5 per cent of said capital at the time of organization shall be invested in United States bonds.

No person shall be permitted to borrow funds from a farm loan association unless he shall first become a member of such association, owning stock therein of a paid-in value amounting to one full share, at least, and not less than 5 per cent of the sum borrowed. If such person is not at the time of his application for a loan a member of said association, or if, being a member, his stock has not sufficient paid-in value to meet the requirements of this section, he shall make application for enough stock to fulfill said requirements. If such application for a loan and for stock is granted, the stock thus applied for shall be issued to the applicant simultaneously with the proceeds of the loan, and the face of the mortgage may, if desired, cover both the amount of the loan granted and the par value of the stock applied for. The par value of the stock applied for shall be in addition to the amount of the permitted maximum loan specified in section 8 of this act.

Whether the applicant for a loan shall be at the time of the application the owner of sufficient paid-in capital stock to entitle him to a loan, or whether he shall apply for stock in order to meet the requirements of this section, his stock, to the amount of at least one share, and not less than 5 per cent of the amount of the loan, shall be pledged to the association as a part of the security for said loan, but any dividends thereon shall be paid to the mortgagor. When said loan is paid in full the mortgage shall be discharged and the certificate of stock shall be delivered to the mortgagor.

Every farm loan association formed under this act shall by its articles of association provide for an increase of its capital stock from time to time for the purpose of acquiring additional cash funds or of providing for the issue of shares to borrowers and others in accordance with the provisions of this act. Such increase shall be included in the quarterly reports to the farm loan commissioner.

Any farm loan association formed under this act may, by the vote of stockholders owning two-thirds of its capital stock, reduce its capital to any sum not below the amount required by this act to authorize the formation of such associations; but no reduction shall be allowable which will reduce the capital stock of the association below one-twentieth of the amount unpaid on outstanding mortgages indorsed by it, nor shall any such reduction be made until the amount of the proposed reduction has been reported to the farm loan commissioner and his approval thereof obtained.

OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

SEC. 6. That every farm loan association shall elect, in the manner prescribed for the election of directors of national banking associations, not less than five directors, who shall hold office for the same period and under the same conditions as directors of national banking associations: Provided, however, That the ownership of five shares of stock, fully paid in, shall qualify for director. It shall be the duty of said board of directors to choose in such manner as they may prefer a secretary-treasurer, who shall receive such compensation as the said board of directors shall determine. The board of directors aforesaid shall elect a president and a vice president of the association, who shall serve without compensation unless the payment of salaries to them shall be approved by the farm loan commissioner. All officers and directors shall, during their term of office, be bona fide residents of the territory within which the association is authorized to do business.

Every president, director, secretary, clerk, or agent of any farm loan association or Federal land bank who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, or credits or who without authority from the directors draws any order, assigns any note, bond, draft, mortgage, judgment, or decree, or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such association or land bank with intent in either case to defraud such institution or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of a farm loan association or land bank or any agent appointed to examine into the affairs of any such association or bank, and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or imprisoned not exceeding five years, or both.

It shall be the duty of the board of directors of every farm loan association, within 30 days of its election, to appoint two of its members to serve as members of an "appraisal committee." The said committee shall consist of the two members aforesaid, and one to be appointed by the directors of the Federal land bank of the district, who shall be a resident of the farm loan district for which he is acting, but who shall not be a stockholder in any farm loan association or Federal land bank. The names of the said committee shall be transmitted to the farm loan commissioner and shall be kept on file in his office. Every farm loan association shall pay to the nonstockholding member of the appraisal committee a compensation which shall be determined by the farm loan commissioner. The farm loan commissioner, subject to appeal to the Federal farm loan board, shall have power at any time to remove any member of the appraisal committee of any farm loan association and to order the appointment of a successor. Such successor need not necessarily be a member of the board of directors.

It shall be the duty of the secretary-treasurer of every farm loan association to act as custodian of its funds and to deposit the same in such bank as the board of directors may designate, to disburse all payments which shall have been authorized in making loans to borrowers upon first mortgages on farm land situated as in this act prescribed, and to meet all other obligations of the association, subject to the orders of the board of directors, and in accordance with the by-laws of the association. The said secretary-treasurer shall likewise collect, receipt for and in proper cases transmit to the Federal land bank, all payments of interest, amortization installments, or principal arising out of the loans made by the association. He shall be the custodian of the securities, records, papers, certificates of stock, and all documents relating to or bearing upon the conduct of the affairs of the said association. He shall furnish a suitable bond to be prescribed and approved by the farm loan commissioner for the proper performance of the duties imposed upon him under this act. He shall make a quarterly report to the farm loan commissioner upon forms to be provided for that purpose. Upon request from the said commissioner the said secretary-treasurer shall furnish information regarding the condition of the farm loan association for which he is acting and shall carry out the duly authorized orders of said commissioner. He shall assure himself from time to time that the loans made by the farm loan association of which he is an officer have been applied to the purposes set forth in the application of the borrower as approved.

POWERS OF LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

SEC. 7. That every farm loan association shall have power—

First. To make loans of current funds secured by first mortgages on farm lands situated within the farm loan district in which such association shall be situated, subject to the provisions of this act.

Second. To buy from any other farm loan association indorsed first mortgages of which such association may have become possessed under this act, or to sell to such association its own indorsed mortgages.

Third. To buy and sell farm loan bonds in this act authorized.

Fourth. To buy and sell United States bonds.

Fifth. To acquire and dispose of—

(a) A suitable banking house for the transaction of its own business.

(b) Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it. But no such association shall hold title and possession of any real estate purchased or acquired to secure any debts due to it for a longer period than five years, except with the special approval of the farm loan commissioner in writing.

Sixth. Against deposits of current funds, to issue certificates in any amount, bearing interest not to exceed 4 per cent per annum, after six days from date, convertible into farm loan bonds when presented at the land bank of the district in any multiple of $100; such deposits when received shall be transmitted to the Federal land bank of the district, and be invested by it in the purchase of farm loan bonds or first mortgages as defined by this act; the mortgages thus purchased may be hypothecated with the Federal reserve agent against an issuance of farm loan bonds as provided for in section 18 of this act, but such bonds when received either by purchase or for issuance shall not be delivered or issued except in exchange for and upon the presentation for redemption and cancellation of an equal amount of convertible certificates issued by a farm loan association, any difference under $100 in such exchange being adjusted in cash. When thus redeemed and canceled, such certificates shall be returned to the loan association which issued them.

RESTRICTIONS.

SEC. 8. That no farm loan association shall make loans except upon the following terms and conditions:

First. The said loans shall be secured by first mortgage on farm land within the farm loan district in which the association shall be situated.

Second. Every such mortgage shall contain an agreement for the payment of interest and for the reduction of the face of the loan so secured through annual or semiannual amortization payments.

Third. Every such mortgage shall run for a period of at least 5 years and for a period not exceeding 35 years.

Fourth. Every mortgage loan made under this act, for whatever period, shall provide for its extinguishment, at the option of the borrower, in whole or in part, at any date set for the payment of interest after five years from the date upon which the said loan was made, by the payment of cash or by the tender of farm loan bonds hereinafter provided for at their face value, all unmatured coupons being attached.

Fifth. The rate of interest charged for such loans shall not exceed the legal rate current in the State in which the farm land securing such loan is situated, but in no case shall the interest be over 6 per cent.

Sixth. Such loans may be made for the following purposes and for no other:

(a) To provide for the improvement of farm lands; the term "improvement" to be defined by the Federal farm loan board.

(b) To provide for the purchase of equipment and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the farm; the term "equipment" to be defined by the Federal farm loan board.

(c) To provide for the purchase of a farm home.

(d) To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged existing at the time of the organization of the first farm loan association established in or for the county in which the land mortgaged is situated, or indebtedness subsequently incurred for one of the purposes above mentioned.

Seventh. No such loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land mortgaged, and 25 per cent of the value of the buildings thereon, the said value to be ascertained by an appraisal of the appraisal committee provided in section 6 of this act. In making said appraisal the actual earning power of said land shall be a principal factor.

Eighth. No such loan shall be made to any person who is not at the time, or shortly to become, a bona fide resident on the farm mortgaged, primarily engaged in the cultivation thereof. In case of sale of the mortgaged land the farm loan association may, in its discretion, declare the mortgage thereon due and payable, or permit said mortgage to be assumed by a purchaser qualified to borrow in his own right under the provisions of this act.

Ninth. No such loan shall in any case exceed a maximum of $10,000 to any one borrower, nor 20 per cent of the capital and surplus of the association making such loan, nor shall the aggregate of outstanding loans indorsed by it be in excess of 20 times the capital and surplus of such association.

Tenth. Every applicant to a farm-loan association for a loan under the terms of this act shall make application on a form to be prescribed for that purpose by the farm loan commissioner, and such applicant shall state under oath the objects to which the proceeds of said loan are to be applied, and shall afford such other information as may be required.

Eleventh. Every borrower shall undertake to pay when due all taxes which may be lawfully assessed against the land mortgaged, and to keep insured to the satisfaction of the farm loan commissioner all buildings the value of which was a factor in determining the amount of the loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the mortgagee as its interest may appear at time of loss, and, at the option of the mortgagee and subject to general regulations of the farm loan commissioner, sums so received shall be used to pay for reconstruction of the buildings destroyed.

Twelfth. Every borrower who shall be granted a loan under the provisions of this act shall enter into an agreement in form and under conditions to be prescribed by the farm loan commissioner that if the whole or any portion of his loan shall be expended for purposes other than those specified in his original application, or if the borrower shall be in default in respect to any condition of the mortgage, the said loan shall become due and payable forthwith.

No farm loan association shall buy or sell mortgages, or acquire title to real estate, except as expressly authorized by section 7 of this act.

FEDERAL LAND-BANK DISTRICTS.

SEC. 9. That for the purposes of this act the Federal farm land board shall establish and announce districts in accordance with the principles laid down in the act of December 23, 1913, entitled "the Federal reserve act." Such districts shall be designated as Federal land bank districts, and the Federal reserve agent of each such district shall perform the duties herein assigned to him in carrying into effect the purposes of this act. The said districts shall be equal in number to the Federal reserve districts established under said act of December 23, 1913, but shall not necessarily be coterminous with the said Federal reserve districts. No land bank district shall contain a fractional portion of any State. The Federal land bank of each district shall have its home office in any city of such district which may be designated by the Federal farm loan board.

POWERS OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

SEC. 10. That the Federal farm loan board shall have power—

(a) To organize and charter Federal land banks and Federal farm loan banks, subject to the provisions of this act.

(b) To review and alter at its discretion the rate of interest to be charged by farm loan associations for loans made by them under the provisions of this act, said rates to be uniform so far as practicable.

(c) To grant or refuse to Federal land banks authority to make any specific issue of farm loan bonds, and to fix the rate of interest thereon.

(d) To recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury the purchase of farm loan bonds subject to the provisions of this act.

(e) To require reports and statements of condition and to make examinations of Federal land banks and farm loan associations.

(f) To appraise farm lands through the farm loan commissioner as set forth in section 21 of this act.

(g) To exercise such incidental powers as shall be necessary or requisite to fulfill the duties and carry out the purposes of this act.

ADMISSION OF STATE INSTITUTIONS.

SEC. 11. That whenever the farm loan commissioner shall report to the Federal farm loan board that associations have been organized under the laws of any State of the United States with authority to make loans upon unencumbered farm land situated in such State, and shall certify that the laws under which said associations are organized permit such associations to afford to holders of first mortgages on such lands protection and assurance of safety equal to that provided under this act and that such mortgages do afford such protection and assurance, the said board may issue an order permitting Federal land banks operating in land bank districts including such State to purchase such first mortgages from any such association with its indorsement, and to utilize the same as collateral security when applying through the Federal reserve agent for authority to issue farm loan bonds.

The Federal farm land board shall establish rules and regulations to which such associations organized under State law shall conform in making loans secured by first mortgages on farm land, if they desire to offer such mortgages to the Federal land bank of the district for purchase by said bank at its discretion, and shall require such associations or institutions to enter into agreements which shall obligate them to conform to the requirements by this act imposed upon national farm loan associations, so far as the said board shall deem necessary.

ORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

SEC. 12. That the farm loan commissioner shall select five farm loan associations of each Federal land bank district to act by an officer thereof designated for the purpose by the board of directors, who shall unite to form an association to exercise the powers conferred by this act and to be known as the Federal land bank of said district. The said Federal land banks shall be organized subject to the requirements and under the conditions set forth in section 4 of this act, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided, That the board of directors of every Federal land bank shall consist of nine members, three of whom shall be appointed by the Federal farm loan board for terms of three years each, and six of whom shall be chosen as herein provided for the election of directors of farm loan associations. Every director of a Federal land bank shall have been for two years preceding his selection a bona fide resident of said land bank district.

Every such farm loan association and every farm loan association making subsequent application shall subscribe for not less than $1,000 of capital stock of the said land bank.

Every farm loan association before transferring first mortgages to the Federal land bank of its district, under the provisions of sections 15 and 22 of this act, shall subscribe and pay for in cash or in approved first mortgages an amount of the capital stock of the said land bank equal to at least 10 per cent of its own capitalization.

CAPITAL OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS.

SEC. 13. That every Federal land bank shall have, before beginning business, a subscribed capital of not less than $500,000. The Federal farm loan board is hereby authorized to prescribe the times and conditions of the payment of subscriptions to stock and to require subscribers to furnish adequate security for the payment thereof. At least 50 per cent of the said capital shall be paid in cash when required by the Federal farm loan board, the balance to be either cash or first mortgages, under the restrictions provided under section 8 and section 11 of this act. Five per cent of the capital stock of every land bank shall be invested in bonds of the United States.

The capital stock of each Federal land bank shall be divided into shares of $100 each, and may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the Government of any State or of the United States.

Stock held by farm loan associations shall not be transferred or hypothecated.

Stockholders shall share in all dividend distributions without preference. Each farm loan association and the Government of the United States shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by it at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders, and no other shareholder shall be permitted to vote. Stock owned by the United States shall be voted by the farm loan commissioner.

It shall be the duty of the Federal farm loan board, as soon as possible after the passage of this act, to open books of subscriptions for the capital stock of a Federal land bank in each Federal land bank district. If within 90 days after the opening of said books any part of the minimum capitalization herein prescribed for Federal land banks shall remain unsubscribed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the said unsubscribed balance of $500,000, said subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of the said land bank upon 30 days' notice, subject to the approval of the Federal farm loan board; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to take out shares corresponding to the said unsubscribed balance as called, and to pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said shares may be sold at not less than par.

CANCELLATION OF SHARES.

SEC. 14. That if any farm loan association shall be declared insolvent and a receiver shall be appointed therefor by the farm loan commissioner, the stock held by it in the Federal land bank of its district shall be canceled without impairment of its liability; and all paid-in subscriptions on such stock, with accrued dividends, if any, since the date of the last dividend shall be first applied to all debts of the insolvent farm loan association to the Federal land bank and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the receiver of said farm loan association: Provided, That in estimating the said debts contingent liabilities incurred by farm loan associations under the provisions of this act on account of default of principal or interest of mortgages sold or transferred, shall be estimated and included as a debt, and said contingent liabilities shall be determined by agreement between the receiver and the Federal land bank of the district, subject to the approval of the farm loan commissioner, and if said receiver and land bank can not agree, then by the farm loan commissioner, and the amount thus ascertained shall be deducted in accordance with the provisions of this section from the amount otherwise due the said farm loan association for said canceled stock. Whenever the capital stock of a Federal land bank shall be reduced the board of directors shall cause to be executed a certificate to the farm loan commissioner, showing such reduction of capital stock, and if said reduction shall be due to the insolvency of a farm loan association, the amount repaid to such association.

POWERS OF LAND BANKS.

SEC. 15. That every Federal land bank shall have power, subject to the limitations and requirements of this act—

First. To issue, subject to the approval of the Federal farm loan board, and to sell farm loan bonds of the kinds authorized in this act, to buy the same for its own account, and to retire the same at maturity.

Second. To invest such funds as may be in its possession in the purchase of first mortgages on farm lands situated within the Federal land bank district within which it is organized or for which it is acting, preference being given to mortgages taken by farm loan associations within the district.

Third. To receive, by assignment from farm loan associations and to deposit in trust with the Federal reserve agent of its district, to be by him held as special security for farm loan bonds, first mortgages upon farm land situated within the Federal land bank district that are legally receivable by farm loan associations, and to empower farm loan associations or member banks of the Federal reserve system as agents of the land bank to collect and immediately pay over to said land bank the dues, interest, amortization installments, and other sums payable under the terms, conditions, and covenants of the mortgages and of the bonds secured thereby.

Fourth. To acquire and dispose of—

(a) A suitable banking house for the transaction of it own business, which, however, may be in part leased to others for revenue purposes.

(b) Parcels of land mortgaged to it as security through a farm loan association.

(c) Parcels of land acquired in satisfaction of debts or purchased at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by it. But no such bank shall hold title and possession of any real estate purchased or acquired to secure any debts due to it for a longer period than five years.

Fifth. To deposit its securities, and its current funds subject to check, with any Federal reserve bank, or for purposes of temporary convenience with any member bank of the Federal reserve system, and to receive interest on the same as may be agreed.

Sixth. To accept deposits of securities or of current funds from farm loan associations holding its shares, but to pay no interest on such deposits.

Seventh. To buy and sell United States bonds.

Eighth. To hold in trust farm loan bonds to an amount equal to the outstanding convertible certificates issued by the loan associations of the district and for the redemption thereof, as provided in the sixth paragraph of section 7 of this act.

RESTRICTIONS ON LAND BANKS.

SEC. 16. That no Federal land bank shall have power—

First. To accept deposits of current funds except from its own stockholders or to transact any banking or other business not expressly authorized by the provisions of this act.

Second. To purchase or accept from farm loan associations first mortgages unless such mortgages were created subject to all limitations imposed by section 8 or section 11 of this act.

Third. To issue or obligate itself for outstanding farm loan bonds in excess of twenty times the amount of its capital and surplus or to purchase from any association additional mortgages when the amounts remaining unpaid upon mortgages already purchased from such association shall amount to twenty times the unimpaired capital and surplus of such association.

APPLICATIONS FOR FARM LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 17. That any Federal land bank which shall have voted to issue farm loan bonds under this act shall make application to the Federal farm loan board, through the Federal reserve agent of the district, for approval of such issue. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the said Federal reserve agent of first mortgages on farm lands as collateral security, of the kinds specified under section 8 and section 11 of this act, not less in amount than the sum of the bonds proposed to be issued. The said agent shall thereupon transmit said application with or without his approval to the Federal farm loan board, which may grant in whole or in part or reject entirely such application. The said farm loan commissioner may at any time call upon a Federal land bank for additional security to protect the bonds issued by it. Every first mortgage shall, when tendered to a Federal reserve agent as collateral security to protect an issue of farm loan bonds, be transferred to the said agent, by assignment, in trust, said assignment providing for the right of redemption at any time by payment, and reserving the right of substitution of other first mortgages qualified under section 8 or section 11 of this act.

Every Federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor and by appropriate action of its board of directors shall also obligate itself to become liable for interest payments due upon any farm loan bonds issued by other Federal land banks with the approval of the Federal farm loan board and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks, and every such bank shall likewise obligate itself to become liable for such portion of the principal of farm loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principal, shall be assessed against solvent guaranteeing land banks in proportion to the amount of farm loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

QUALIFICATIONS OF LOANS.

SEC. 18. That no mortgage shall be accepted by a Federal reserve agent as part of an offering to secure an issue of farm loan bonds except first mortgages made subject to the conditions prescribed in section 8 or in section 11 of this act.

STATE LEGISLATION.

SEC. 19. That it shall be the duty of the farm loan commissioner to make examination of the laws of every State of the United States and to inform the Federal farm loan board as rapidly as may be whether in his judgment the laws of each State relating to the conveying and recording of land titles and the foreclosure of mortgages or other instruments securing loans, as well as providing homestead and other exemptions and granting the power to waive such exemption as respects first mortgages, are such as to assure the holder thereof adequate safeguards against loss in the event of default on loans secured by any such mortgages.

Pending the making of such examination in the case of any State, the Federal farm loan board may declare first mortgages on farm lands situated within such State ineligible as the basis for an issue of farm loan bonds; and if said examination shall show that the laws of any such State afford insufficient protection to the holder of first mortgages of the kinds provided in this act, the said Federal farm loan board may declare the said first mortgages on land situated in such State ineligible during the continuance of the laws in question. In making his examination of the laws of the several States and forming his conclusions thereon, said commissioner may call upon the office of the Attorney General of the United States and upon the counsel of the Federal Reserve Board for any needed legal advice or assistance, or may employ special counsel in any State where he considers such action necessary.

APPRAISAL.

SEC. 20. That the farm-loan commissioner shall appoint appraisers, one or more of whom shall at stated periods visit every national land bank district and shall make a general report regarding the values of the lands in each State. The said commissioner shall apply to every Federal land bank a schedule stating maximum acre valuations for each farm loan district in such detail as he may deem necessary, and the said schedule shall not be exceeded in making loans. Said schedule shall be revised every five years.

SERIES OF FARM LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 21. That farm loan bonds shall be issued in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000, shall run for specified maximum periods, with interest coupons attached payable annually or semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $100,000, whose amount and term shall be fixed for each Federal land bank by the Federal farm loan board and shall bear a rate of interest to be established by the said board, not to exceed 5 per cent per annum.

In order to furnish suitably engraved bonds for delivery to Federal land banks, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeits and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantities of such bonds of the denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000 as may be required to supply the Federal land banks. Such bonds shall be in form and tenor as directed by the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of this act and shall bear the distinctive numbers of the several Federal land banks by which they are issued. They may be exchanged into registered bonds of any amount, and reexchanged into coupon bonds, at the option of the holder, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by said Secretary.

When such bonds have been prepared they shall be deposited in the Treasury, or in the subtreasury or mint of the United States nearest the place of business of each Federal land bank, and shall be held for the use of such bank subject to the joint order of the farm loan commissioner and the Federal reserve agent for the district for their delivery, as provided by this act.

The plates and dies to be procured by the farm loan commissioner for the printing of such bonds shall remain under his control and direction, and the expenses necessarily incurred in executing the laws relating to the procuring of such bonds and all other expenses incidental to their issue and retirement shall be paid by the Federal land banks. The Federal farm loan board shall levy semiannually against the respective Federal land banks in proportion to the issue of bonds by each a sufficient amount to cover such expenses.

The examination of plates, dies, bed pieces, etc., and regulations relating to such examination of plates, dies, etc., of national-bank notes provided for in section 5174, Revised Statutes, is hereby extended to include bonds herein provided for.

Any appropriation heretofore made out of the general fund of the Treasury for engraving plates and dies, the purchase of distinctive paper, or to cover any other expense in connection with the printing of national-bank notes or notes provided for by the act of May 30, 1908, and any distinctive paper that may be on hand at the time of the passage of this act may be used in the discretion of the Secretary for the purposes of this act, and should the appropriations heretofore made be insufficient to meet the requirements of this act, the Secretary is hereby authorized to use so much of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated as may be required for the purpose of furnishing the bonds aforesaid.

ISSUE AND REDEMPTION OF FARM LOAN BONDS.

SEC. 22. That whenever any Federal land bank shall present first mortgages to the Federal reserve agent of the district as collateral security for an issue of a series of farm loan bonds, it shall furnish therewith to said Federal reserve agent a schedule containing a description of said mortgages as prescribed by the farm loan commissioner. Said mortgages shall be deposited in the Federal reserve bank for the district subject to the control of said Federal reserve agent and in his name as trustee for said Federal land bank and the prospective holders of said series of farm loan bonds. Said Federal reserve agent shall thereupon satisfy himself that said first mortgages are at least equal in amount to the series of farm loan bonds authorized by the Federal farm loan board, and shall forthwith notify the farm loan commissioner thereof in writing. Said farm loan commissioner and said Federal reserve agent shall thereupon be empowered to direct by their joint order the delivery of said farm loan bonds to said Federal land bank. It shall be the duty of the Federal reserve agent in each district to see that the farm loan bonds delivered by him and outstanding do not exceed the amount of first mortgages pledged as collateral security therefor, but he may, in his discretion, temporarily accept in place of mortgages withdrawn, securities other than qualified first mortgages, preference being given to farm loan bonds.

Whenever any Federal land bank shall receive any interest, amortization, or other payment upon any first mortgage pledged as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds, it shall forthwith deposit the same with the Federal reserve bank of the district to its own account, and shall notify the Federal reserve agent of the items so received. The Federal reserve agent shall thereupon cause such payment to be duly credited upon the respective mortgages entitled to such credit. Whenever any of said mortgages are paid in full, said Federal reserve agent shall cause the same to be canceled and delivered to said Federal land bank for transmission to the original maker thereof, or his heirs, administrators, or assigns.

Upon written application by any Federal land bank to the Federal reserve agent, it may be permitted, in the discretion of said Federal reserve agent, to withdraw from the Federal reserve bank any mortgages or mortgages pledged as collateral security under this act, and to substitute therefor other mortgages not less in amount than the mortgage or mortgages desired to be withdrawn, such substituted mortgages being qualified under section 8 or section 11 of this act.

Whenever any farm loan bonds, or coupons or interest payments of such bonds, are due under their terms, they shall be payable, at the Federal land bank by which they were issued, in gold or lawful money, and upon payment shall be duly canceled by said bank. At the discretion of the farm loan commissioner, payment of any farm loan bond or coupon or interest payment may, however, be directed to be made at any Federal land bank or any Federal reserve bank, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by said farm loan commissioner, subject to the approval of the Federal farm loan board. Upon the surrender of any farm loan bonds of any series, canceled or uncanceled, by any Federal land bank to the Federal reserve agent of the district, said Federal land bank shall be entitled to withdraw from the Federal reserve bank first mortgages pledged as collateral security for any of said series of farm loan bonds to an amount equal to the farm loan bonds so surrendered, and it shall be the duty of said Federal reserve agent to permit and direct the delivery of such mortgages to such Federal land bank.

Interest payments shall be at the disposal of the Federal land bank which shall deposit the same, and shall be available for the payment of coupons and the interest of farm loan bonds as they become due. Amortization or other payments on the principal of first mortgages held as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds shall constitute a trust fund in the hands of the Federal land bank receiving the same, and shall be applied or employed as follows:

(a) To purchase at not more than par farm loan bonds issued by itself or by some other Federal land bank, said bonds to be deposited forthwith with the Federal reserve agent as substituted collateral security for the payments indorsed on mortgages deposited with him; or

(b) If such farm loan bonds are not available at par or under, to deposit said trust fund with the Federal reserve bank of the district, or any member bank of the Federal Reserve System which shall be approved by the farm loan commissioner, or to make such investment thereof as may be approved in writing by said farm loan commissioner, subject to rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal farm loan board; or

(c) To pay off such loan bonds as may become due. Federal land banks, in the order of their applications, shall have a preference over other subscribers in purchasing the whole or any part of an issue of farm loan bonds.

Said Federal land bank shall notify the Federal reserve agent of the district of the disposition of all payments made on the principal of mortgages held as collateral security for the issue of farm loan bonds, and said Federal reserve agent is authorized, at his discretion, to order any of such payments, or the proceeds thereof, wherever deposited, or however invested, to be transferred to the Federal reserve bank of the district to his account as trustee aforesaid.

RELATIONS BETWEEN LOAN ASSOCIATIONS AND LAND BANKS.

SEC. 23. That any farm loan association may offer for sale to the Federal land bank of its district first mortgages of which it has become possessed under the terms of this act, and said Federal land bank may, at its discretion, purchase the same when duly indorsed by said association.

Payment may be made in cash, current funds, or farm loan bonds, as may be agreed.

Every Federal land bank shall from time to time, under regulations prescribed by the Federal farm loan board, pay to each farm loan association, assignor of first mortgages eligible for use as a base for the issue of farm loan bonds and purchased by the said bank, a sum equal to one-half of 1 per cent per annum upon the total unpaid amount of the first mortgages purchased from said assignor, computing said one-half of 1 per cent from the date when the mortgages were purchased by said land bank to the date of the nearest annual or semiannual dividend period of the said land bank.

SPECIAL RESERVE.

SEC. 24. That so far as practicable the rate of interest on loans secured by first mortgages under this act shall be uniform, as provided in section 10, and the farm loan commissioner shall from time to time establish a specific rate of interest to be charged on all first mortgage loans in each land bank district. The normal rate of interest, not including therein any amortization payment, on first mortgage loans shall be established by adding 1 per cent to the rate of interest specified in the latest issue of farm loan bonds in said district. Whenever, because of local or other conditions, it shall be deemed wise by said farm loan commissioner, in order to provide a special reserve against losses, to establish a specific rate of interest in excess of said normal rate, the amount of interest thereafter paid by any borrower in excess of the amount which he would have been required to pay if his loan had been made at the normal rate of interest current when said loan was made shall be carried to a special reserve fund, which shall be specifically set apart by the association or the land bank then holding said loan for the purpose of meeting any losses incurred in the State where the land mortgaged to secure such loan is located. Every land bank shall establish a separate reserve fund for mortgages originating in each and every State of the United States included within the Federal land bank district within which such land bank may be authorized to operate, and each such reserve fund shall be first applied to the cancellation of losses due to nonpayment of principal or interest of mortgages on farm land situated in such State. Whenever, after three years from the date of this act, in the opinion of the board of directors of the said Federal land bank, any one of such reserve funds shall be more than sufficient to provide for losses under the mortgages to which it is specifically applicable, such land bank may apply annually to the farm loan commissioner for permission to distribute such portion of said reserve fund as may be deemed wise, and in the event such permission shall be granted, said bank shall cause to be computed the percentage of annual payments which shall be returned by it to each borrower within said State, based upon the proportion paid into said reserve fund by every borrower, whether said payments have been made on account of said land bank or of farm loan associations; and said bank shall pay to each farm loan association for distribution among its borrowing members such portion of said special reserve fund as belongs to such members, and each farm loan association shall distribute such portion to the members who are entitled thereto, and each association shall also pay to its members whose obligations are held by it a like percentage on the payments made during the same period: Provided, That no payments shall be made under the provisions of this section to members who are in default for any reason at the time of such distribution.

The farm loan commissioner may, with the consent in writing of the Federal land bank of any district, together with the consent in writing of a majority in number of the farm loan associations of said district, fix the normal rate of interest at a point below that established in this section; and thereafter the sum to be paid over to farm loan associations by said Federal land bank under the provisions of section 24 shall be diminished in proportion to the decrease in said normal interest rate, said land bank always retaining one-half of the sum accruing from the payment of interest on indorsed mortgages, after paying the interest on farm loan bonds secured by such mortgages.

GENERAL RESERVE AND DIVIDENDS OF LAND BANKS.

SEC. 25. That every Federal land bank shall, out of its net earnings, as ascertained after the deduction of all expenses of operation, semiannually carry to an account known as "reserve account" one-fourth of such net earnings until the said reserve account shall show in the aggregate a balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of the said Federal land bank. The said reserve account shall be debited with all losses due to default upon the first mortgages held by such Federal land bank in so far as the same shall be proven irrecoverable from the mortgagor or assignor. For the period of two years from the date when such default occurs in the payment of the interest, amortization installments, or principal on any of the said first mortgages the amount so defaulted shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the two-year period specified shall be transferred to reserve account as a charge against the one-fourth of net earnings credited thereto.

Whenever the net earnings of any Federal land bank, after deducting the one-fourth hereinbefore directed to be deducted as a contribution to reserve account, shall amount to 2 per cent upon the face value of the capital stock of such land bank then outstanding, the said land bank may, at its discretion, declare a dividend to stockholders of 2 per cent. The said dividend may be increased whenever the residue of net earnings shall permit, until it shall amount to 6 per cent, which shall be cumulative. Surplus earnings beyond the reserves herein required and the said cumulative 6 per cent dividend shall be paid to the Government of the United States, but this provision shall not apply to Federal farm bond banks. Every such land bank shall semiannually submit to the Federal farm loan board a schedule showing the salaries or rates of compensation paid to its officers and employees, and the said board shall have power to disapprove such schedule or any item in it and to alter any or all salaries thereon shown.

DEFAULTED LOANS.

SEC. 26. That if there shall be default under the terms of any first mortgage transferred to a Federal land bank under the provisions of this act, and by it used as collateral security for farm loan bonds issued and sold in accordance therewith, and if the special reserve fund set apart by the said Federal land bank for the protection of loans secured by mortgages originating in the State wherein is situated the property upon which default has occurred is exhausted or unavailable, the farm loan association from which the said mortgages were originally purchased by the Federal land bank shall be notified of the said default. Said farm loan association shall thereupon be required, within 30 days after such notice, to repurchase such mortgage by payment of the amount due thereon in cash, or by delivery of an equal amount of farm loan bonds with all unmatured coupons attached, or of first mortgages qualified under section 8 or section 11 of this act.

GENERAL RESERVE AND DIVIDENDS OF NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

SEC. 27. That every farm loan association shall, out of its net earnings, as ascertained after the deduction of all expenses of operation, semiannually carry to an account, known as reserve account, a sum not less than 2 per cent of its capital or than one-fourth of such net earnings until the said reserve account shall show a credit balance equal to 20 per cent of the outstanding capital stock of the said farm loan association. The said reserve account shall be debited with all losses due to the return or repurchase of mortgages which have been retransferred to the said farm loan association by the Federal land bank of its district and upon which default has occurred under the provisions of section 27 of this act, or upon which such default shall have occurred while the said mortgages are still in the possession of the said farm loan association. For the period of two years from the date when default occurs upon loans secured by any such first mortgages as are still in the possession of the farm loan association, either with respect to interest, amortization installments, or principal of any of the loans protected by said first mortgages, the amount of such securities or installment payments due thereon shall be carried to a suspense account, and at the end of the two-year period specified, if not meanwhile collected, shall be transferred to reserve account as a charge against the one-fourth of net earnings credited thereto.

Whenever the net earnings of any farm loan association after deducting the one-fourth hereinbefore directed to be credited to reserve account shall amount to 2 per cent upon the face value of the capital stock of such farm loan association then outstanding, the said farm loan association may, at its discretion, declare a dividend to stockholders of 2 per cent. The said dividend may be increased whenever the residue of net earnings shall permit, until it shall amount to 6 per cent per annum, which shall be cumulative. Any subsequent surplus earnings above the reserve herein required and the cumulative 6 per cent dividend aforesaid shall be at the disposition of the board of directors. Whenever any farm loan association shall be voluntarily liquidated a sum equal to its reserve account as herein required shall be paid to and become the property of the Federal land bank in which such loan association may be a stockholder.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION AND INVESTMENT.

SEC. 28. That every Federal land bank and every farm-loan association, including the capital stock and reserve or surplus therein, and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by the said bank under the provisions of sections 7 and 15 of this act. First mortgages executed to farm loan associations or to Federal land banks under the provisions of this act, and eligible as security for the issue of farm loan bonds shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation.

Farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation, and such bonds shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds.

Any bank of the Federal reserve system may buy or sell farm loan bonds; any member bank of said system may accept time drafts against a deposit of such bonds as security; acceptances of a member bank thus made, or the direct obligation of such bank maturing within 60 days when accompanied by farm loan bonds as collateral security not less in face value than the amount of such direct obligation, shall be eligible for discount by any Federal reserve bank.

POSTAL SAVINGS.

SEC. 29. That section 9 of the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to establish postal savings depositaries for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes," shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding a new paragraph at the close of the said section, such paragraph to read as follows:

"Federal farm loan bonds authorized by the Federal farm loan board and issued by any Federal land bank may be purchased by the trustees in lieu of United States bonds or other securities for the purpose of investing postal savings deposits under the provisions of this section. The trustees shall be, and they are hereby, directed, whenever funds shall be withdrawn from postal savings depositaries for such investment, to employ such funds in the purchase of Federal farm loan bonds in the open market if at the time of such withdrawal the said farm loan bonds can be obtained at par or less. At their discretion the said trustees may invest such sums as shall be withdrawn from postal savings depositaries by the purchase of new Federal farm loan bonds direct from any Federal land bank authorized to issue the same."

PURCHASE OF BONDS BY GOVERNMENT.

SEC. 30. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon application of one or more of the Federal land banks herein established, and upon the recommendation of the Federal farm loan board, purchase from Federal land banks farm loan bonds not previously issued or sold, in an amount not to exceed $50,000,000 during any one year, and shall pay for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That any land bank which may sell its bonds to the Secretary of the Treasury, as provided by this section, shall, by appropriate action of its board of directors, as consideration for the accommodation afforded by the Secretary of the Treasury, enter into an agreement that at any time on 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury said land bank will cease to make any investments whatever, and will devote all receipts from every source, except so much as may be necessary for the payment of maturing liabilities, to the redemption of its bonds so purchased and held by the Secretary of the Treasury. The enforcement of said agreement shall be at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall have purchased any farm loan bonds under the provisions of this section, he may hold the same until maturity, or may sell such bonds at his discretion.

The Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the Federal farm loan board and the approval of the President, may issue and sell or use for the purpose of this act any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909, the act of February 4, 1910, and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal: Provided, That any Panama Canal bonds issued and sold or used under the provisions of this section or other existing authority may be made payable at such time after issue as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may deem advisable and fix, instead of 50 years after date of issue, as in said act of August 5, 1909: Provided further, That, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, such bonds may bear a rate of interest not exceeding 3½ per cent per annum.

EXAMINATIONS.

SEC. 31. That there shall be appointed by the farm loan commissioner farm loan association examiners subject to the approval of the Federal farm loan board. The said examiners shall be subject to the same requirements, responsibilities, and penalties as are applicable to national-bank examiners under the national-bank act, the Federal reserve act, and other provisions of law. The said examiners shall be required to examine the condition of every farm loan association and report the same to the farm loan commissioner at least once each year, and to examine and report the condition of every Federal land bank at least twice each year.

The said examiners shall receive salaries to be fixed by the Federal farm loan board, which shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

No examiner shall perform any other service for compensation while holding such office for any bank or officer, director, or employee thereof.

Other than the usual salary or director's fee paid to any officer, director, or employee of a farm loan association or land bank, and other than a reasonable fee paid by said association or bank to such officer, director, or employee for services rendered, no officer, director, employee, or attorney of an association or bank shall be a beneficiary of or receive, directly or indirectly, any fee, commission, gift, or other consideration for or in connection with any transaction or business of such association or bank. No examiner, public or private, shall disclose the names of borrowers to other than the proper officers of a farm loan association or land bank without first having obtained express permission in writing from the farm loan commissioner or from the board of directors of such association or bank, except when ordered to do so by a court of competent jurisdiction or by direction of the Congress of the United States, or of either House thereof, or any committee of Congress or of either House duly authorized. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Upon becoming satisfied that any farm loan association has refused to repurchase mortgages, or to substitute bonds or mortgages, as required by section 27 of this act, or upon receiving satisfactory evidence that any such loan association has failed to meet its outstanding obligations of any description whatever when due, and is in default, the farm loan commissioner may forthwith appoint a receiver, and require of him such bond and security as he deems proper. Such receiver, under the direction of said commissioner, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and, with the approval of said commissioner, or upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like approval or order, may sell all the real and personal property of such association, on such terms as said commissioner or said court shall direct. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended, on page 56, after line 8, to insert the matter down to line 14, on page 57.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New York," on page 57, after line 23, to insert:

That the Tuscarora Nation of New York Indians, by their chiefs in council assembled, are hereby authorized and empowered to lease, for a period not exceeding 20 years, for the benefit of the nation all or a part of the limestone deposits upon their reservation in one or more suitable tracts for the purpose of quarrying the limestone thereon: Provided, That before such lease shall be made notice of intention to lease, giving a general description of the lands upon which said limestone deposits are located, shall be published in two papers, one issued in the county of Niagara, State of New York, and one issued in the city of Buffalo, county of Erie, State of New York, once a week for three consecutive weeks; said notice shall state the time and place when sealed bids shall be received for the mentioned tracts, and such lease shall be to the highest responsible bidder: Provided further, That before any lease shall be made the terms of the proposed contract shall be fully explained to the entire nation and shall be approved by a majority of the votes of the whole people of voting age, but before any lease shall become effective it shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval as to the sufficiency of the amount of the consideration and terms of payment, and if approved by him the chiefs are hereby authorized and empowered to enter into such lease. All moneys paid upon any lease made as herein provided shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall distribute the same among the adult persons, and thereafter to the minor persons as they attain their majority, entitled to participate in the distribution of the consideration, without any fee, expense, or charge against the nation or any of its people: Provided further, That the money so deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the minors of said nation shall draw 3 per cent interest per annum, and the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, upon satisfactory proof that it is for the best interests of the minor to do so, withdraw from the Treasury any part of the sum so deposited to the credit of any minor for the purpose of education or actual maintenance of said minor.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to make a point of order against this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. ROBINSON. The point of order is that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not believe that it is general legislation. The Chair believes it is simply special legislation for the benefit—for the alleged benefit, the Chair will say—of a tribe of Indians.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall ask, then, that the amendment be not agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to remark that it is, as I think, within the spirit of the unanimous-consent agreement entered into last night that we proceed to the immediate consideration of the amendment commencing on page 42, and I ask unanimous consent that we now recur to that amendment and proceed with its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection. I think this amendment probably can be disposed of very quickly, but if the Senator insists I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We go back to page 42.

The SECRETARY. On page 42, after line 21, the committee report to insert——

The VICE PRESIDENT. How far is the first amendment to go—to page 42, line 6? The Chair will state that yesterday there was a request on the part of the Senator from Wyoming to separate this amendment, and on the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming a point of order was sustained as to one of the clauses contained in the entire amendment. The Chair now inquires how far the present portion of this amendment is to be divided, or does the Senator from Wyoming choose to have it considered further?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no interest in the division, except as to the part that was ruled upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it will be considered, if there be no objection, in its entirety.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to read a letter from Mr. A. P. Davis, Director and Chief Engineer of the Reclamation Service, showing what will be done.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that after a consideration of the matter I withdraw any objection I made in any way to this measure. I have discussed it fully, and I have done my duty. I do not care to be heard further upon it.

Mr. MYERS. I am very glad, and I congratulate the Senator from Vermont on feeling that he has done his duty. He has more than done it, and I am very much gratified. I will read this letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ENGINEER,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1915.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of February 23 is just received. I note the desire of settlers to have laterals A and branch A of the Pablo Canal completed as soon as possible, and I am now writing to the supervising engineer to make plans to do this, so that work can begin as soon as the appropriation becomes available.

I have also called for report as to the whole situation, including the feasibility of completing this work at an early day.

Very truly, yours,

A. P. DAVIS,
Director and Chief Engineer.

That shows what will be done with the $187,000 over which there has been so much contention.

Mr. President, I have done a great deal of work this winter on the Flathead project. I have devoted much time to it and discovered many complications, tangles, and obstacles. The most amazing thing I have discovered is the loss to the project, through a misunderstanding of officials, of the sum of $187,000. I have read what the reappropriation of it will do. It will make sad hearts glad, give hope to drooping spirits, and make happy homes. Let us vote it and do the right thing by people with whom the Government has too long dallied, and whom the Government has these long years disappointed. The Government appropriates millions of dollars for public buildings in small towns and for expenditure on inconsequential rivers and shallow harbors. The settlers on the Flathead Reservation are a long-suffering people—good, hard-working, law-abiding people. They love their homes and their country. They are good citizens. The good faith of the Government is pledged to the irrigation of their lands. They have relied on it. Their all is staked on it. Let us deal honestly with them. Vote them this whole appropriation, $687,000, and make the lovely Flathead Valley blossom as a rose—an American Beauty rose. It will be repaid to the Government and good faith will be restored and justice will prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now we will return to the amendment on page 56, from line 9, to page 57, line 14. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to make the observation that as a part of our understanding last night the balance of the Montana items, beginning with line 16, on page 51, down to the Nebraska items, were passed over until to-day. I ask that they be taken up now, so that the Montana work may be consecutively finished.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that we begin at line 16, page 51.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 15, insert:

That section 11 of the act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 302), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," amended by the act of March 3, 1909 (35 Stat. L., 796), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. That merchantable timber on said lands, returned and classified by said commission as timberlands, may be sold by the Secretary of the Interior, under such regulations as he may prescribe; and after the sale and removal of the timber such of said lands as are valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes shall be sold or opened to homestead entry by the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That lands valuable for agricultural or horticultural purposes, heretofore classified as timberlands, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be appraised and opened to homestead entry under regulations prescribed by him, upon condition that homestead entrymen shall at the time of making their original homestead entries pay the full value of the timber found on the land at the time that the appraisement of the land itself is made, except as hereinafter provided, such payment to be in addition to the appraised price of the lands apart from the timber, as herein authorized: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion accept payments in installments for said timber under such terms, conditions, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe."

The VICE PRESIDENT. How does the amendment stand? Is there any point of order against it?

Mr. MYERS. None whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have not been able to understand the pending question, there is so much confusion in the Chamber. What is before the Senate just now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment on page 51, beginning at line 16.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, this proposed amendment was up for consideration a short time last evening and was passed over. I then raised my objection to the amendment and the theory and purpose of it, while withholding any point of order on the amendment. I desire to state again while there are more Senators present my objection to the amendment. It does two things. It changes the existing law under which these lands were thrown open to allotment and settlement. It changes the method of disposing of the surplus lands, and it drives the Government still further into a commercial business.

Mr. President, I do not know that we can, but it seems to me that if we can we ought to call a halt, in some degree at least, upon the commercial activities of the Government.

It will be observed, by reading the amendment, that lands heretofore classified as timberlands shall not be sold as timberlands as under the original law, but that the timber itself shall be sold by the Interior Department in such way as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. I have no hesitation in saying that the sale of timber on the public reserves of the West has not been a successful business operation. It has not been successful for the Government in that it has not paid the cost of the operation; it has not been successful, so far as the settlers are concerned, because the settlers had received their timber at no less cost than if it had not been received from the forest reservations. I state now, as I stated last night, that in the immediate vicinity of these reserves, some of them at least that have come under my notice, the timber sold by the Government brings exactly the same price for the poor timber secured in the higher mountain regions as the timber from Oregon and Washington, coming a thousand miles by rail. So the Government seems to be in this and other business simply for the purpose of being in business; simply for the purpose of doing something that can be as well or better done by private enterprise. I do not care to argue this matter.

I will say further, it appears in the amendment that where there shall be a little timber on an allotment——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; it is subject to a point of order, but I do not care to make a point of order against it.

Where there appears to be a little timber upon an allotment, if the Indian has an allotment or a settler has a homestead upon that land, before he can have his homestead in it, the Government goes in and strips the land of timber. We who have lived in a farming country know that one of the valuable assets of a farm is a timber lot, if it can be had; it becomes a valuable adjunct to a farm; it becomes a great help to the farm. It is no less so in that country. When these allotments are made, of comparatively small value, why should the Government come in and strip off a few trees that may be there on the agricultural lands for the purpose of selling them and denuding the homesteader of that much timber.

Mr. President, I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it simply occurs to me that this is not quite consistent with the policy of conservation.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is not consistent with the policy of conservation. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] last night gave instances where Indian lands were within the very borders of a timber reserve, or a forest reserve, where anybody was prohibited from cutting timber around it; where upon the Indian land the Government had gone in and stripped the land within that reserve and sold the timber.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to have a halt in this; it seems to me as though at least conservation ought to be carried on with some degree of consistency and some degree of business sense.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. FALL. I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not think that to his substitute for this amendment an amendment might be adopted, striking out, in section 8 of the law, applicable to this reserve which it is now sought to change—that is, the Thirty-third Statutes at Large, page 302—striking out of section 8 all of that act after the words "United States," and including the word "lands," in section 8, and then striking out section 11 of that act? The result would be, as I read it, that then these timberlands would be classified as timber homestead lands—they would be subject to homestead entry; the timber could not be cut off by the Government and disposed of separately, and then the lands be used as homestead lands.

Mr. President, this amendment to the act of April 23, 1904, as proposed here, changes the law with reference to the Indian lands on the Flathead Indian Reservation in this way: Under the old law it was provided that the lands which were being thrown open should be classified into five different classes. One of those classes was the timberland. There was no provision in the old law by which the timberlands could be entered; but there was not only a provision for the sale of the timber by the Secretary of the Interior from those timberlands, but practically a direction to him that he should sell it; in other words, that he should strip the timberlands of their timber or sell the timberlands outright—sell the timber or the land. All the lands were to be classified as subject to homestead entry, not under the general homestead law, but to homestead entry to be taken by homesteaders and paid for at figures to be fixed in the President's proclamation.

The lands on the Flathead Reservation, as I have said, were to be classified, and one class—that is, the timberlands—were to be dealt with solely by selling the lands without reference to any homestead entry. The provision that all lands were to be classified and subject to entry, except certain lands, is contained in section 6.

Now, in lieu of the amendment proposed by the committee I am suggesting that a substitute be adopted striking out the excepting words—that is, the words following the words "United States," down to and including the word "lands," in section 8 of the old law—and then to strike out entirely section 11, which provides for the sale of these timberlands. That would leave all these lands to be classified and subject to homestead entry, the price which the homestead entryman shall pay for them to be still fixed in the proclamation of the President.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may we not hear the sections read to which the Senator alludes, and then we will better understand the proposition?

Mr. FALL. Just one moment and I will conclude. I am speaking now in the time of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. President, the old law itself, from my standpoint, is vicious, and it is that law that I am seeking to amend, but not in the way in which the committee is seeking to amend it. I call the Senator's attention to it to see if it will not meet his objection and possibly that of other Senators.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, this is an amendment that was evidently put in at the suggestion of the Indian Bureau. I am not speaking of it as a fact, but merely as a supposition. I will ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] if that is not true?

Mr. MYERS. At the request of the Interior Department?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. At the request of the Interior Department, of course. The purpose of that is quite evident.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, let me say further in regard to that matter that the latter part of the amendment—that is, that part following the word "Provided"—whoever was its drafter, originated with the members of the delegation. That is what we want. We want the concluding portion of it. Just who is responsible for the language in the first part of the section, I am not able to say.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I think I understand the position of the Senator. The last part of the amendment provides that lands classified as timberlands, but which are really agricultural lands with timber growing on them, may be disposed of under homestead entry, provided the homestead entryman pays the Government for the timber upon the land. I do not know that that is so objectionable as the other part of the amendment; but the whole amendment is an effort to get out from under the mistake that was made when the original law was passed and the mistakes that were made in the field in classifying this land. It seems to me there is a way of adjusting the bad classification of the lands and the difficulties into which the old law has led by a reclassification of the lands, and that it should not become necessary, in order to remedy that difficulty, to embark the Government in a commercial and mercantile undertaking.

I have not had time to examine the law in reference to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico, but I have confidence in his statement as to the effect of the amendment, and I think the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico would be exactly in line with the desires of the Senators from Montana.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am inclined to think so, although I do not want the Senator to understand that I have given very thorough study to this subject. It is in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Montana himself, and if all down to line 8, on page 52, were stricken out it would practically amount, I think, to almost the same thing; in other words, section 11, then, which I have suggested be stricken out of the old law, would be changed to read, from the proviso down, so that instead of the lands being disposed of otherwise they would be subject to homestead entry. Page 52 is a substitute for section 11.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to amend by striking out all on page 51, between lines 16 and line 25, inclusive, and by striking out all on page 52 down to and including the word "Provided" in line 8.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that would be a great deal better.

Mr. MYERS. I move to further amend by inserting in line 9, on page 52, between the word "lands" and the word "valuable," the words "on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana." I submit that amendment, and ask for a vote on it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is all right; I think that covers it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Let us have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 51, it is proposed to strike out lines 16 to 25, both inclusive; on page 52 to strike out lines 1 to 8, inclusive, including the word "Provided"; and after the word "lands," in line 9, and before the word "valuable," to insert "on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment following the one just agreed to, beginning in line 22, page 52, went over yesterday, and as that same amendment was adopted under the Nebraska items, I see no reason why the amendment beginning in line 22, applying to Montana, should not be adopted this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment commencing with line 22, page 52, and ending with line 14, page 56, is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 57, after line 23, to insert:

That the Tuscarora Nation of New York Indians, by their chiefs in council assembled, are hereby authorized and empowered to lease, for a period not exceeding 20 years, for the benefit of the nation, all or a part of the limestone deposits upon their reservation in one or more suitable tracts for the purpose of quarrying the limestone thereon: Provided, That before such lease shall be made notice of intention to lease, giving a general description of the lands upon which said limestone deposits are located, shall be published in two papers, one issued in the county of Niagara, State of New York, and one issued in the city of Buffalo, county of Erie, State of New York, once a week for three consecutive weeks; said notice shall state the time and place when sealed bids shall be received for the mentioned tracts, and such lease shall be to the highest responsible bidder: Provided further, That before any lease shall be made the terms of the proposed contract shall be fully explained to the entire nation and shall be approved by a majority of the votes of the whole people of voting age, but before any lease shall become effective it shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval as to the sufficiency of the amount of the consideration and terms of payment, and if approved by him the chiefs are hereby authorized and empowered to enter into such lease. All moneys paid upon any lease made as herein provided shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall distribute the same among the adult persons, and thereafter to the minor persons as they attain their majority, entitled to participate in the distribution of the consideration, without any fee, expense, or charge against the nation or any of its people: Provided further, That the money so deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the minors of said nation shall draw 3 per cent interest per annum, and the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, upon satisfactory proof that it is for the best interests of the minor to do so, withdraw from the Treasury any part of the sum so deposited to the credit of any minor for the purpose of education or actual maintenance of said minor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a moment ago, when this amendment was under consideration, I said that I thought it ought not to be agreed to. The title to this property is in dispute. The Ogden Land Co. claims it under a preemption right that was granted it by the State of New York prior to the transfer of title and control over the Indians to the United States. Under this preemption right the Ogden Land Co. may have the privilege of buying this land whenever sold, or acquiring title by any means whenever the Indians part with the title. This, in substance, seems to give the Ogden Land Co. the exclusive right to acquire any title that the Indians might have and transfer. The proposed lease is in violation of that provision of the grant. The binding force of the grant has been in question for many years, and the Indians have been asking, I am informed, that it be referred to the Court of Claims for final determination. This action, however, has not been taken by Congress.

If this lease were authorized and made, it might make the United States liable to the Ogden Land Co., in all probability, in case the claim of that company should ever be presented.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. Does the Senator from Arkansas state that there is some law in existence with reference to this particular land, now in force and effect?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the way the Chair caught it—that there was.

Mr. ROBINSON. I stated that the title to the lands which this provision authorizes to be leased is in dispute; that the so-called Ogden Land Co., or its successors in interest, consisting of a large number of persons in the State of New York, claim the title to the land by a preemption right; and the legal effect of this preemption right is discussed on page 585 of the Senate hearings, part 7. In addition, some of these Indians assert that this provision is not well safeguarded, particularly with reference to a minimum charge, which should be fixed in the lease; the segregation of the interests of minors; and denial of the right to vote to women, which right they enjoy under their tribal customs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes that any legislation upon the part of the Congress of the United States attached to an appropriation bill which might affect pending litigation is general legislation. The Chair reverses the former ruling, and sustains the point of order that it is general legislation, if the facts stated are correct. It goes out.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Carolina," in section 16, page 59, line 16, after the words "in all," to strike out "$34,000" and insert "$36,000, of which sum not exceeding $4,340 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 16. For support and education of 180 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., including pay of superintendent, $30,000; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $36,000, of which sum not exceeding $4,340 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings.

Mr. ASHURST rose.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I was going to call attention to what appears to be a discrepancy in the figures in this amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I was just going to ask that the discrepancy be corrected, as follows: That on line 15 the figures "$30,000" be stricken out and the figures "$31,660" inserted, and on line 16 that the figures "$4,000" be stricken out and the figures "$4,340" inserted, not changing the total. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that would hardly do what is desired, would it?

Mr. ASHURST. That is the way in which it was adopted in the committee, and that would make the total $36,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What is the first figure the Senator gave?

Mr. ASHURST. Thirty-one thousand six hundred and sixty dollars.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; and the next?

Mr. ASHURST. Four thousand three hundred and forty dollars; and strike out the italics appearing on lines 17 and 18, all after the figures "$36,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment changing the sum of "$30,000" to "$31,660" is agreed to without objection. The amendment changing the "$4,000" to "$4,340" is agreed to without objection. The "$34,000" is stricken out and the "$36,000" agreed to. The balance of the amendment is rejected.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," in section 17, page 59, after line 22, to insert:

For support and civilization of Indians at Fort Berthold Agency, in North Dakota, including pay of employees, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 7, after "$2,000," to strike out "in all, $20,200" and insert "for new dormitory, $20,000; in all, $40,200," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Bismarck, N. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $18,200; for general repairs and improvements, $2,000; for new dormitory, $20,000; in all, $40,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 13, to strike out:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $35,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; in all, $38,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 17, to insert:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $38,200, of which sum not exceeding $3,200 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings; for school building, $15,000; for band instruments, $600; in all, $53,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to redeem a mortgage on the allotment selection of Starr McGillis, a Turtle Mountain Chippewa Indian, described as the northwest quarter of section 34, township 164 north, range 70 west of the fifth principal meridian, North Dakota, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the said sum to be reimbursed from the rentals of said allotment not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rentals received annually: Provided, That in the event a patent in fee shall be issued for this land before the United States shall be wholly reimbursed as herein provided, the amount remaining unpaid shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of the patent in fee and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount of the mortgage, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, shall operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 17, to insert:

For the erection of a headstone to mark the grave of Scarlet Crow, a Sioux Indian chief of the Wahpeton Tribe, who was buried March 13, 1867, in the Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D. C., in a grave marked "76-R. A. 22," $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 23, to insert:

That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Sioux Indians may have or claim to have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for the amount due or claimed to be due said bands from the United States under any treaties or laws of Congress; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine all claims of said bands against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon. If any such question is submitted to said court it shall settle the rights, both legal and equitable, of said bands of Indians and the United States, notwithstanding lapse of time or statute of limitations. Such action in the Court of Claims shall be presented by a single petition, to be filed within one year after the passage of this act, making the United States a party defendant which shall set forth all the facts on which the said bands of Indians base their claims for recovery; and the said petition may be verified by the agent or authorized attorney or attorneys of said bands, to be selected by said bands and employed under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, upon information or belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements or verifications shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, reports, and public records, or certified copies thereof, and oral testimony, deposition, and sworn statements by members of said bands of Indians may be used as evidence. Whatever moneys may be found due the Sisseton and Wahpeton Bands of Indians under the provisions of this act, less attorney's fees, shall be placed to their credit in the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the compensation to be paid the attorney or attorneys for the claimant Indians shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, but in any event shall not be greater than the amount named in the approved contract: Provided further, That such compensation shall in no event exceed $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 63, after line 11, to insert:

SEC. 18. For support and civilization of the Wichitas and affiliated bands who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 10, to insert:

For support and civilization of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation in Oklahoma, including pay of employees, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 14, to insert:

For support and civilization of the Kansas Indians, Okla., including pay of employees, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 16, to insert:

For support and civilization of the Ponca Indians in Oklahoma and Nebraska, including pay of employees, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 16, to insert:

So much as may be required of the funds authorized by section 17 of the act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 77-92), for maintenance of a hospital for the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, and Wichita Tribes, Oklahoma, may be used for the purchase of equipment and in making necessary repairs and improvements to said hospital, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona, if he has the information conveniently at hand, what is the provision of the act of June 30, 1913, as to the appropriation then made? Ordinarily the appropriation not being used would have been turned into the general fund of the Treasury, and if that were so the amendment would be faulty in that respect.

Mr. ASHURST (reading)—

The appropriation act of the following year—the act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 77-92)—provided for the sale of certain lands in order to provide a fund, drawing interest at 4 per cent, "to be known as the Kiowa Agency Hospital fund, to be used only for maintenance of said hospital."

I have read from page 707 of the hearings.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I only desired that the Senator himself should be satisfied that that amount would be available for the purpose for which this bill seeks to appropriate it. If the Senator himself is satisfied, that is all sufficient for me.

Mr. ASHURST. I am satisfied, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 66, to insert:

To pay the Women's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church in America, $10,000, to reimburse said board for buildings on the Fort Sill Military Reserve in the State of Oklahoma constructed by said board with the consent of the Government and utilized for the education and civilization of the Fort Sill Apache prisoners of war until the removal of said Indians from said Fort Sill Military Reserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 8, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to vacate the north half of section 3, township 4 south, range 14 west, in Oklahoma, reserved for a town site in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 20, 1906, entitled "An act for the establishment of town sites and for the sale of town lots within the common lands of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in Oklahoma."

That the Secretary of the Interior shall reimburse the 29 purchasers of lots within said described lands, out of any money in the Treasury belonging to the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians, upon the conveyance of such lots by said purchasers to the United States Government. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby further authorized to allot lands of said town site in equal amounts to San-a-was and Pessa, two enrolled Comanche Indian women who have not heretofore received allotments.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It appears from this amendment that under the provisions of the law a town site was laid out upon certain Indian lands, and that the town was not very successful.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It further appears that 29 of the people who went in there and bought lands under the town-site act, not having succeeded in making a town, it is now proposed to give them their money back. That is a very fair sort of a speculation—"Heads I win; tails you lose." If the town site improves and makes a fine, growing town the people retain their lands, but if it fails the Government pays them back, or the Indians do. I should like a little explanation of the item.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there was a piece of land set aside for a town site in Comanche County. A few lots were sold out of it, and it failed utterly to become a town site. It was suggested that the land might be allotted to San-a-was and Pessa, two enrolled Comanche women who have not heretofore received allotments. It seems that this matter was reported favorably on March 10, 1910. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] presented the report. It is Senate Report No. 383. It passed the Senate and went to the House. The House did not act upon it. It passed the Senate on March 15, 1910. Perhaps the Senator from Minnesota may remember something about it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, as I understand and recall it, some one claimed that they were short of land for allotment, and that taking this site would fill the two allotments. I think that is the way it was. It was some time ago. While it did present the somewhat unusual phase of giving back payment for the two lots which had been taken, it was thought at the time, in view of the fact that it would enable these allotments to be made, that we could well afford to do it.

Mr. OWEN. There is a special report from the Department of the Interior under date of March 21, 1914, recommending this action.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not want to object to it, but it certainly has a very curious appearance.

Mr. OWEN. It was simply a town site that failed to materialize. The railroad did not stop there.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly so. Men went out there and purchased lands in this town site, and the lands did not become as valuable as they thought they would be, and therefore the Government proposes to give them back their money and take back the land and give it to the Indians.

Mr. OWEN. Well, they are entitled to it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As we said this morning, the Government has been in various sorts of business, but it seems to me that it is a new departure where a man makes a real estate investment or speculation, and it does not turn out well, that the Government is going to give him back his money.

Mr. OWEN. You can not take it away from him without refunding the money. There were just a few of these lots sold.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, of course; but let him hold it as other men would hold it elsewhere.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; but if you do that it is not available for agriculture. A man can not cultivate land under such circumstances.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, there is no fund. These Indians think that they can quiet title to these lots so as to secure the balance of their allotment if they desire without going to the Treasury of the United States to reimburse town-site speculators.

Mr. OWEN. This is only a fund which these people paid in. It is simply paying them back. You have a canceling transaction where these women will have land for agriculture. That is all there is in it.

Mr. FALL. It would be the same principle if upon lands anywhere within any State in the Union a town site is sought to be established and speculators go in paying their money to the United States for securing title to their lots and then it proves that the town-site speculation was a failure. Every man, woman, or child in the United States who has acquired a lot upon a town site would have an equal right to ask that his money be refunded to him because the speculation was a failure.

Mr. OWEN. I agree with the Senator that there might be cases where it would be egregious to do that. Here is a case where the department recommends these two allotments—simply a small piece of agricultural land. It is not a town at all.

Mr. FALL. Where is this town with reference to the Old Fort Sill Reservation?

Mr. OWEN. To tell the truth, I do not know. The letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior is as follows.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On what page?

Mr. OWEN. On page 32 of the report of the committee [reading]:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 21, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of the letter dated February 26, 1914, transmitting a copy of Senate bill 4619, Sixty-third Congress, second session, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate certain lands in Oklahoma reserved for a town site, and for other purposes.

The department wishes to invite your attention to lines 3 to 7, page 2, of the above bill, providing for the allotment of the said town site in equal amounts to San-a-was and Moe-tak-dah, two enrolled Comanche Indian women who have not heretofore received allotments. The Office of Indian Affairs informs me that Mo-tak-dah died March 26, 1912, leaving as her relatives and heirs one Pessa, granddaughter, and Mattie Quah-ne-nah, great-granddaughter.

The latter has been provided for on the Comanche allotment roll, based on the act of June 5, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 213), which provided for the allotment of children of the tribe born subsequent to and entitled to allotment under the act of June 6, 1900 (31 Stat. L., 676). However, Pessa has not been allotted by reason of the fact that she was born prior to that date.

It is therefore suggested that section 2 of the bill (S. 4619) be amended by striking out, in line 5, page 2, the name "Moe-tak-dah" and inserting the name "Pessa."

If the bill be amended as suggested, I see no objection to its passage.

Cordially, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if in all the appropriations which were made by Congress two years ago for the removal of the Fort Sill Indians and for purchase of allotments for the Fort Sill Indians there was any for the purchase of allotments in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. OWEN. I do not know.

Mr. FALL. The reason why I am inquiring as to this item is that the Fort Sill Apache Indians—the Geronimo Indians—lived on the Fort Sill Reservation, which had been added to by the surrender voluntarily by the Kiowas and Comanches of a large portion of the lands belonging to them. They had voluntarily given to the Fort Sills, the Geronimo Apaches, practically as an enlargement of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, a very large amount of land; it is my recollection something like twelve or fifteen thousand acres. Over my protest the Congress of the United States saw fit to appropriate money. I want to say right here that it was not the fault of the Congress that this money was used as it was used, for the removal of the Fort Sill Indians and the purchase of allotments. The greater part of those Indians have been removed to the Mescalero Apache Reservation, in New Mexico, and settled upon lands belonging to the Mescalero Apaches. Two hundred thousand dollars was appropriated for the purpose of removing these Indians and also for acquiring the allotments for those who chose to remain in the State of Oklahoma. I do not know enough about this particular provision to know whether this town site was a failure because possibly they had removed these Fort Sills or not. I know these town sites are upon the Kiowa and Comanche lands.

The item appearing at the top of that page, $10,000, to return to these women the money invested by them in buildings, and so forth, grows entirely out of the action of Congress in removing the Fort Sill Indians; and $200,000 has been appropriated by Congress in addition to the fact that these people have deprived the Mescaleros of their land, dividing up with the Mescaleros one-third of their income, of their reservation, and all their property. Then the United States is asked to reimburse people for expenditures which, it is said, are due to the presence of the Fort Sills, or Geronimo Apache, Indians at the Fort Sill Reservation. The State of Oklahoma was insistent upon getting rid of these Fort Sill Apaches, and I want to say now if they had remained there the Senator knows that the $275,000 appropriated for the public schools of Oklahoma would have to be divided with the Fort Sill Indians. They have gotten rid of all that expense and sent them down into New Mexico and put them among the Mescalero Apaches and deprived the Mescaleros of one-third of their property, absolutely giving it to the Fort Sills.

It seems to me that for Oklahoma to come in here and ask the Senate of the United States and the Congress of the United States to appropriate money to pay for buildings even that were abandoned because of the removal of these Fort Sill Indians to New Mexico, and then to reimburse the town-site speculators for the purchase price of lots which they purchased upon a town site, and then to give these lands to the Indians, we should not do it unless we have some very clear explanation. The Senator from Oklahoma himself has not been in the habit, I think, of asking things of this kind of Congress. I do not think he can justify it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, five years ago, on the 18th of February, 1910, before the occurrence the Senator is referring to took place at all, Secretary Ballinger recommended this matter because it amounted to nothing except that this land that could be used for agriculture should have its title cleared of the 19 or 20 lots which, I understand, were sold out of the 160 acres. That is all there is in it. It is just a question of converting it into agricultural lands and clearing the title so that these people can use it. That is what I understand. Secretary Ballinger recommended it five years ago, and here comes a recommendation from the present Secretary of the Interior. I do not care anything about it, if the Senator feels very strongly in regard to the matter.

Mr. FALL. I do not feel strongly about it; I want the people of Oklahoma to have whatever is justly their due; but I do not like to set a precedent of that kind, because there have been numerous losses of town sites all over the entire country. There are a great many of them in the Indian country.

Mr. OWEN. I would not agree to let a lot of speculators come in here and be reimbursed the loss of their investments on a bad speculation. If I understood it to be that, I should be opposed to it. I understand this agricultural land is so far clouded by the sale of a few town lots there that the title is not in a condition where it can be allotted to these people.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Twenty-nine lots on a town site, it seems to me, if the Senator will reflect, would not be a very great slicing from the allotment, which I suppose is 160 acres.

Mr. OWEN. It involves the streets and alleys. The sale of one town lot with the dedication of streets and alleys to the public will enable a man to bar the use of that land for agriculture.

Mr. FALL. I would have no earthly objection to vacating the town site which has been allotted, but I do not think it is a good precedent. I do not think the Senator from Oklahoma ought to ask the Congress of the United States to vote money to reimburse the parties who bought lands on that town site and failed in their speculation.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Oklahoma is not asking anything except simply an opportunity to carry out what the department five years ago recommended and what the department recommends now, and recommends as a means of giving the allotments to these two poor women.

Mr. FALL. Then will the Senator consent to strike out that portion of the amendment from line 17, page 66, down to and including line 2, on page 67?

Mr. OWEN. That would refer, I suppose, to reimbursing the people the value of the lots.

Mr. FALL. Exactly.

Mr. OWEN. I ask the Senator, if that is stricken out, how you can disregard their vested right?

Mr. FALL. Certainly you can not; but those who want these very valuable allotments on agricultural land can certainly pay for 29 lots when it is to become agricultural lands and no longer lots in a town site.

Mr. OWEN. The suggestion of the Senator would be that the department enter into negotiations with these individuals and take them at what might be the result of a barter?

Mr. FALL. Certainly the Comanche and Kiowa Indians to whom it is proposed to make this allotment in severalty have valuable tribal property. The Secretary of the Interior is their guardian. If he proposes to allot these town sites to those two allottees, they can pay for these lots if they want to. If they can not, they can let them alone. The parties who own them, I should think, would be inclined to sell them very cheaply when the Secretary of the Interior has vacated the town site.

Mr. OWEN. I do not think the Secretary of the Interior could vacate the town sites without considering their equities.

Mr. FALL. The Secretary of the Interior by a separate amendment here is authorized and directed to vacate a town site.

Mr. OWEN. But he can not vacate a town site by paying the people who have the lots unless he does it by barter and agreement.

Mr. FALL. That is up to the Secretary of the Interior and is not, in my judgment, the proper function of the Congress of the United States. So I would object to that reimbursement provision. I think the Secretary of the Interior can vacate a town site if there has not been sufficient of it disposed of to comply with the law.

Mr. OWEN. I really do not know anything about it.

Mr. FALL. I do not object to it at all in itself, but I do object to this precedent.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, it seems to me quite a simple matter. This town site can not be on over a quarter section of land.

Mr. OWEN. It is, I understand, on a quarter section, and 29 lots, with streets and alleys, are devoted to the public. He can either barter with those people or pay the amount they paid.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They will be quite willing to dispense with this property, it seems to me.

Mr. OWEN. I should think so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Government ought not to be asked, as the Senator from New Mexico states, to go into a proposition that has at least a possibility of injustice by taking back land that was bought for speculative purposes, and, inasmuch as there is only a quarter section of land on that whole reservation to be clouded by it, it seems to me we ought not to be called to do this thing in this way.

Mr. OWEN. Does the Senator suggest eliminating the words "that the Secretary shall reimburse," and so forth, so that it shall read "the Secretary of the Interior shall negotiate" with the 29 purchasers for a transfer?

Mr. FALL. No; I do not agree to anything of the kind. The utmost limit to which I could conscientiously go would be to agree to strike out all of line 17 to that portion of line 22 containing the words "United States Government."

Mr. OWEN. I shall not raise any further objection to the matter if the Senator insists on it.

Mr. FALL. Then I move to strike out that portion of the committee amendment from line 17 down to line 22, inclusive, ending with the words "United States Government" on the latter line, page 66.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 17, strike out all down to and including the words "United States Government" in line 22.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. be, and is hereby, authorized to reconstruct its line of railroad through the Chilocco Indian Reservation in the State of Oklahoma, to eliminate, where necessary, existing heavy grades and curves, and for such purpose to acquire the necessary right of way, not exceeding 200 feet in width, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and to the payment for the land so taken and occupied by such new right of way of such an amount as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be fair and adequate compensation therefor, including all damage which may be caused by the reconstruction of said line of railroad to adjoining lands, crops, and other improvements, said amount to be paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of the Chilocco Indian School.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 17, to insert:

That payments of interest, royalties, or other trust funds becoming due from time to time to any incompetent individual member of the Osage Tribe of Indians under any law may be withheld, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and the funds may be used for the benefit of such Indian, or his heirs, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That no part of said funds shall be paid out on account of any usurious obligation or contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," in section 19, on page 68, line 6, after the word "employees," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$175,000," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 19. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $175,000.

Mr. ASHURST. As an amendment to the committee amendment I move, after the figures "$175,000," in line 6, that there shall be inserted "of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to insert in the RECORD, in connection with the amendment to the amendment, the following letters taken from the hearings before the committee:

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 2, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: In further reference to my letter to you of August 16, 1913, I have the honor to submit herewith a report on H. R. 7025, entitled "A bill to authorize the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. to change its line of railroad through the Chilocco Indian Reservation, State of Oklahoma."

The superintendent of the Chilocco Indian School has reported that he has been informed that the company intends within the next three years to double-track its road from Arkansas City, Kans., to Newkirk, Okla., north and south of the reservation, respectively; that as the roadbed of the amended location, as shown on a blue-print map submitted by the company, is considerably above the natural surface of the land, it will be necessary to have a good deal of ground for borrow pits, and that it does not appear that the company can conveniently reconstruct its line of railroad as proposed without a 250-foot right of way, unless it should transport earth for filling purposes from some other source at greater expense.

In view of the superintendent's report, I see no objection to the provision with respect to the width of the right of way, but desire to call attention to that part of the bill which provides that payment for the right of way shall be made in accordance with provisions of section 15 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1902 (32 Stat., 43), Said section provides that full compensation for right of way and all land taken, and all damage done or to be done by the construction of the railroad, or the taking of any lands for railroad purposes, shall be made to the individual owner, occupant, or allottee of such lands and to the tribe or nation through or in which the same is situated, and that in case of the failure of any railway company to make amicable settlement with any individual owner, occupant, or allottee, tribe, or nation for any right of way, or lands or improvements sought to be appropriated or condemned thereunder, all compensation and damages to be paid to the dissenting individual owner, occupant, allottee, tribe, or nation shall be determined by the appraisement of three disinterested referees to be appointed by the judge of the United States court or other court of jurisdiction in the district where such lands are situated on application of the corporation or other person or party in interest.

The land within the Chilocco school reserve belongs to the Government, and is used for Indian-school purposes, and I am of the opinion that the amount of such compensation should be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. I suggest, therefore, that H. R. 7025 be amended by striking out all that part following the words "right of way," in line 11, page 1, inserting in lieu thereof the following: "of such an amount as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be fair and adequate compensation therefor, including all damages which may be caused by the construction of said line of railroad to adjoining lands, crops, and other improvements, said amount to be paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of the Chilocco Indian School."

If H. R. 7025 is amended in accordance with the above suggestion, I have no objection to its enactment into law. A redraft of H. R. 7025 embodying the suggested amendment is inclosed herewith for your convenience.

Cordially, yours,

A. A. JONES, Acting Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. I wish to inquire why it is necessary to allow them to purchase a right of way 250 feet in width?

Senator OWEN. It does not do that. It says it shall not exceed that. Where they have much of a cut it sometimes may happen that it may be necessary. I think it rarely would be necessary.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. The general statute, as I recollect it, for obtaining rights of way across Government land for railroad companies permits them to acquire a right of way 100 feet in width, excepting at railway stations, where I think it is permitted to be 200 feet in width by 3,000 feet long, for station and yard privileges.

Senator OWEN. I have no objection to cutting this down to whatever may be thought reasonable. They might want a station on this reservation. I do not know whether they would or not, but they have asked only for the right of way. If it is put not exceeding 150 feet, I should think that would be satisfactory.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. One hundred feet is the usual railroad right of way.

Senator OWEN. Does that cover the cases where they have much of a cut, or do you know?

Senator LA FOLLETTE. I think so.

Mr. MERITT. In places where cuts and fills are required under the law we can grant them a right of way 200 feet in width.

Senator OWEN. This is a maximum of 200 feet only.

Senator CLAPP. Make it the maximum, then.

Senator OWEN. Yes.

Mr. MERITT. This legislation is necessary, because we have no authority under the general act to grant rights of way across school reserves. We have the right under the general law to grant rights of way across reservations only.

Senator ROBINSON. Is there objection? There being no objection, it is agreed to.

Have you another matter, Senator OWEN?

FEBRUARY 26, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The provisions of the Indian appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, pertaining to the various per capita and equalization payments to the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, made necessary the employment of additional clerical help to make these payments. As a result of this special work more than one-half of the administrative appropriation of $175,000 was used during the first six months of the fiscal year, and unless provision is made in the pending Indian bill it will be necessary to reduce the force for the remainder of the year to such an extent as to materially interfere with the proper administration of the affairs of these Indians.

In order that a sufficient force might be retained to carry on the work during the remainder of the year, Supt. Parker recently recommended that the salaries of part of the force be paid from certain tribal funds which he believed were available for the purpose under the law. The office was in doubt as to the applicability of these funds for the purpose recommended and placed the matter before the Comptroller of the Treasury. The comptroller, in a decision dated February 23, held that the funds in question were not applicable for the payment of the salaries of employees in the administrative office at Muskogee. In view of this decision I recommend that an amendment be inserted in the Indian bill now pending before the Senate making immediately available $25,000 of the amount which may be appropriated for the next fiscal year for the administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. Unless such a provision goes in the bill it will probably be necessary to reduce the administrative force by one-half during the remainder of the current fiscal year, and as this would seriously cripple the work I trust that you can take care of the matter in the pending bill.

Very truly, yours, CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. H. F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I was not here last evening, and I do not know exactly what unanimous-consent agreement is controlling now. Is it true that only committee amendments are being considered?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the original order and it stands. Until the committee amendments are completed no other amendments will be received to the bill.

Mr. FALL. There is no further unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no unanimous-consent agreement about it.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 18, to insert:

The sum of $275,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, in aid of the common schools in the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, Seminole, and Osage Nations and the Quapaw Agency in Oklahoma, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be subject to the limitation in section 1 of this act limiting the expenditure of money to educate children of less than one-fourth Indian blood.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not know whether that item is subject to a point of order or not. I do not want to make it until I have had some explanation in reference to it. That item was put in, and several others, while I was unfortunately absent from the committee. As I understand it now, two-thirds of the people who are enrolled there as Indians with the tribal rights of the Five Civilized Tribes are about one-fourth or less Indian blood. Many of these are white people, and under the existing law the allotments of these Indians are exempt from taxation. The provision of the bill, as I understand it, is intended to afford their children school facilities without any cost to the white people or practically white people, as many of them are.

Many full-blood Indians, as I understand, are not on the enrollment. They have received no share in the lands which the United States set apart for the Indian tribes, and particularly for the full bloods. The unenrolled and unallotted full bloods' children, as I understand, receive no benefit from this appropriation for schools. If any of them own land, however, they are taxed for the support of the schools, and yet they receive no benefit from this $275,000.

My point is that this appropriation is largely for the benefit of the white people who are enrolled and given property belonging in many instances, as I believe, to some of the full bloods. I may be mistaken about this; if I am, I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. The statement that the Senator from Michigan made is based, I take it, upon the statement of Mr. Webster Ballinger, attorney for some of the claimants who say that they were not enrolled. Mr. Ballinger is opposing the appropriation of money for conducting schools in that country. This has been going on now for 12 years; and he made a memorandum to the effect, which I shall read, with which he circularized the Senate of the United States, to wit:

More than two-thirds of the persons enrolled as "Indians" on the tribal rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes are of one-fourth or less Indian blood. Many of them are white people. Under existing law their allotments are exempt from taxation. The provision in the bill is intended to afford their children school facilities without any cost to these white people, or practically white people. Many full-blooded Indians were improperly denied enrollment, and they have received no share in the lands which the United States set apart for the Indian tribes, and particularly for the full bloods. The unenrolled and unallotted full bloods will receive no benefits from this appropriation. If any of them own land, they are compelled to pay taxes on the same, while the enrolled white man pays no taxes. The appropriation is largely for the benefit of the white people who are enrolled and given the property belonging to the full bloods.

Mr. President, there are a number of statements in this declaration that are untrue.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that he is reading the statement that I made; a statement that had been brought to my attention; and that is what I wanted an answer to.

Mr. OWEN. I am going to answer it, but I first want to place the authority where it belongs, and I want to put in the RECORD that the attorney representing some of these claimants is trying to interfere with legislation affecting the schools in Oklahoma in order to make effective his protest, and in that way to induce the members of the Oklahoma delegation to yield to his unlawful, illicit, and unsound demands.

Before I go to that I want to show a number of untrue statements which have been put into the hands of Senators by the circular from the attorney of these citizenship claimants. He states:

Many full-blooded Indians were improperly denied enrollment, and they have received no share in the lands which the United States set apart for the Indian tribes, and particularly for the full bloods.

The United States sent the Dawes Commission to Oklahoma in 1893, 22 years ago. In 1896 the Dawes Commission was instructed by an act of Congress to make up the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes. The Dawes Commission discharged that duty with diligence. They took evidence with regard to the various persons applying for enrollment. They took the rolls of the five tribes, they critically examined into the right of people to be enrolled, and they enrolled the citizens who were entitled to enrollment year after year, enrolling most of them within the first two or three years, because, as to most of them, there was no dispute whatever; but altogether, because of disputed cases, the Dawes Commission was engaged for 11 years in concluding these controverted points.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to say, though I am paying close attention to what the Senator from Oklahoma is saying just now, I am entirely familiar with that proposition. That is not the thing I am trying to get at——

Mr. OWEN. Just a moment. I call the Senator's attention——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Because this will come up later.

Mr. OWEN. I know that; but I want to point out the lack of veracity of the gentleman circularizing the Senate. It is an important point to establish.

The Dawes Commission gave 11 years to the work, and finally, after they had had this controversy in their hands for 10 years, the Congress of the United States gave one year's notice, on April 26, 1906, and instructed these rolls to be closed as of March 4, 1907. There were some people who were full bloods in that country, who were known as Snake Indians, who refused to offer their names for allotment. They were people who regarded the individualization of lands as a breach of their ancient treaty rights. They were people who regarded the individual holding of land as contrary to the laws of God. They believed that God made the earth for the living generations of men, and that no individual had a right to take that earth and to prevent other men from living upon it in peace. They may have been unwise; they may have been unlearned; I am not so sure about that; but, at all events, it was a religious sentiment on their part.

The United States Government, in the discharge of its duty to enroll every citizen who was entitled to enrollment, sent out scouting parties. They took wagons, they camped in the hills, and they hunted these people with diligence. They used detectives for the purpose of ascertaining those who were entitled to enrollment and to find out what a man's family was who belonged to this great tribe. They took infinite pains to ascertain every man who was entitled to enrollment. Finally, after 11 years of effort, they completed the roll 8 years ago. The statement made by the citizenship attorney "that many full-blood Indians were improperly denied enrollment" is not really true.

But I pause to remark that because a man is a full-blood Indian he is not entitled, because of that fact, to enrollment unless he complies with the division of membership in the tribe, unless he complies with the duty of performing his citizenship in the tribe; and, although a full-blood Indian, if he moves out of the tribe and separates himself from the tribe he may lose his citizenship.

Now, he says further:

The unenrolled and unallotted full bloods will receive no benefits from this appropriation.

That is not true. They will receive direct benefits from this appropriation. He says further:

If any of them own land they are compelled to pay taxes on the same.

That is not true, and the fact that it is not true is the cause why Congress for 12 years has made this annual appropriation. It comes to this: That counties like Pushmataha, Choctaw, and some of the eastern counties have all their land approximately allotted to full-blood Indians, and therefore the land is not taxable. Consequently, the county governments have no available property on which to levy sufficient taxes to raise funds to educate those people. By the act of the Government of the United States in declaring that these lands will not be taxable as long as they are held by the Indian allottees, these counties will be denied the right of school privileges, and for that reason Congress has for 12 years now, since 1902 I believe, annually made these appropriations.

Now, I have answered the Senator quite fully upon that point, and I have answered the statement made by his correspondent, and I think and hope I have answered it to the satisfaction of the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to say, Mr. President, that, of course, while many of the statements made by the Senator are in dispute, and I have no doubt will be discussed later, I do not care so much about going into that——

Mr. OWEN. I was not going into the general citizenship question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There was one statement of alleged fact in the letter which the Senator has denied, which appealed to me as worthy of consideration, and that is the statement that—

The unenrolled and unallotted full bloods will receive no benefits from this appropriation. If any of them own any land, they are compelled to pay taxes on the same.

Mr. OWEN. That is not true, of course.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator says that is not true.

Mr. OWEN. If they own lands, they do not pay taxes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Assuming that what the Senator says is true—and I am bound to do that——

Mr. OWEN. That is a statute.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, I can see no point in my objection; but if there are Indians out there, a few or many of them, who were not receiving any benefits from this appropriation by the Federal Government, it is entirely wrong and should not be passed, because all of the Indians should receive the benefit.

Mr. OWEN. I think the Senator is right as to that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They should all receive benefits. The query with me is: Are there any Indians who are not receiving the benefits of this appropriation?

Mr. OWEN. I do not believe there is one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 69, line 16, after the word "thereon," to insert "which is hereby expressly authorized," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use not exceeding $40,000 of the proceeds of sales of unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes for payment of salaries of employees and other expenses of advertising and sale in connection with the further sales of such tribal lands and property, including the advertising and sale of the land within the segregated coal and asphalt area of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or of the surface thereof as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 19, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 67), and of the improvements thereon, which is hereby expressly authorized, and for other work necessary to a final settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 9, after the word "year," to insert "Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue and maintain schools during the ensuing fiscal year among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes, payable from the tribal funds of these nations, pursuant to the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137, 140)," so as to read:

Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, no moneys shall be expended from tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes without specific appropriation by Congress, except as follows: Equalization of allotments, per capita and other payments authorized by law to individual members of the respective tribes, tribal and other Indian schools for the current fiscal year under existing law, salaries and contingent expenses of governors, chiefs, assistant chiefs, secretaries, interpreters, and mining trustees of the tribes for the current fiscal year at salaries not exceeding those for the last fiscal year, and attorneys for said tribes employed under contract approved by the President, under existing law, for the current fiscal year: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to continue and maintain schools during the ensuing fiscal year among the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Creek, and Seminole Tribes, payable from the tribal funds of these nations, pursuant to the act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137, 140).

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he knows why this item and the one on page 68 were not included in the House bill?

Mr. OWEN. No; I do not know why they were not included in the House bill. There are a number of tribal schools which have not yet been closed up—I suppose a dozen of them—and they have been extending these schools along year by year by authority. I do not know why they left the items out.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have noticed the statement of the Senator, and I think he is correct about it, as to the item on page 68. That item has been in the bill for some years, and yet it appears that the House left it out; and, not being present at the time it was passed in the committee, I was curious to know why an item of such importance as the Senator from Oklahoma suggested that to be should have been left out.

Mr. OWEN. I think sometimes the House leaves out items expecting that the Senate will put them in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 71, after line 12, to insert:

For maintenance of the sanatorium for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, for incidental and all other expenses for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting Indians suffering with tuberculosis and trachoma to and from said sanatorium, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 18, to insert:

To enable the Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes to enforce the prohibitory law within the jurisdiction of Union Agency, Oklahoma, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 21, to insert:

The act of Congress approved June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 539), and the act of Congress approved April 18, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 88), authorizing expenditures from Osage tribal funds of not exceeding $50,000 for schools and $40,000 for agency and emergency purposes, or an aggregate of $90,000, is hereby amended to provide that not exceeding such aggregate amount may be used for such purposes when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, in such manner as he deems for the best interests of the Osages, not exceeding, however, in the aggregate the amount so authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $200 per capita in the case of the Choctaws, and $100 per capita in the case of the Chickasaws, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, that is the per capita payment of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. May not that go over for the present?

Mr. OWEN. I ask that that go over for the present.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand that all of the items go over that are not amendments. They are subject to be brought up at any time, except the amendments.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 3, after the word "act," to insert "except where contracts have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law: And provided further, That such contract shall first be approved by the existing Department of the Interior," so as to make the paragraph read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $200 per capita in the case of the Choctaws, and $100 per capita in the case of the Chickasaws, said payment to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act, except where contracts have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law: And provided further, That such contract shall first be approved by the existing Department of the Interior.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that that amendment may go over with the paragraph.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 15, to insert:

That the unallotted land or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, including any land the title to which has been, or may be, recovered for the Creek Nation, in any pending or other suit, or otherwise, be, and the same is hereby, withheld from allotment to members of said nation or tribe, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to cause such land to be leased, for the benefit of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the proceeds of such lease to be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Creek Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay each and every citizen of the Creek Nation who has not been allotted lands in said nation, and who were duly, legally, and properly enrolled prior to the enrollment of the list included in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session, the sum of $2,080, in lieu of an allotment of land in said nation. Said sum of $2,080 to be paid to each and every such person out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that that may go over, too, with the other.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 18, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Creek Nation, to M. L. Mott the sum of $472.22 for services rendered the Creek Nation from January 15 to February 18, 1914, inclusive, and $210.20 as reimbursement for actual expenses incurred in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 75, to insert:

The Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear, consider, and adjudicate de novo all claims of J. K. F. McMurray, as the assignee of the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians, or either of them, for all professional services rendered, expenses incurred, and disbursements made on behalf of said nations prior to March 4, 1907, with interest from date of such services, or payments on all amounts found due at rates prevailing at the time and place of the transactions involved, and to render judgment in such amount as may be equitable and just, which judgment, if any, against said nations shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States out of any of the funds of said nations as their interest may appear: Provided, That as to any claim so sued upon the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, or either of them, shall be permitted to interpose all proper defense; and the filing of such suit by J. F. McMurray shall be held to be a waiver of the statutes of limitations as to any claims of said nations, or either of them, against him or said firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, and the answers thereto on behalf of said nations shall be held to be a waiver of the statutes of limitations as the same may apply against them: And provided further, That any amount found to be owing by the said J. F. McMurray or the said firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish to said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations may be offset against such claims and deducted from any amount found to be due him thereon and judgment rendered for the prevailing party for the difference; and notice of the filing of such suit shall be served upon the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation, and said nations shall be represented therein by the attorneys for said nations, respectively, and by the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I presume I am as much responsible as anyone else for this amendment being in the bill, by reason of the fact that I was chairman of a subcommittee which had the proposition treated here under consideration. The subcommittee did not meet until about five minutes before the bill was reported from the committee and did not give the subject matter that careful consideration which I believe its importance demands. I have never felt favorable to this legislation, and only yielded to give it consideration because a majority of the committee seemed to desire such disposition of the matter. However, I am not satisfied with the amendment, and I do not think all of the subcommittee are satisfied with it, or the whole committee that reported it. I should therefore like to withdraw the amendment if the parliamentary situation will permit, and if not to have it stricken from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the committee withdraw it?

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the chairman answer for the committee?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not feel authorized to withdraw it. It is an amendment that has been the subject of considerable controversy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be disagreed to, then.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oregon," on page 76, after line 10, to insert:

SEC. 20. For support and civilization of Indians of the Klamath Agency, Oreg., including pay of employees, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 22, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$15,000, to be immediately available," and in line 24, after the words "in all," to strike out "$115,000" and insert "$120,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $102,000; for general repairs and improvements, $15,000, to be immediately available; for remodeling sewer system, $3,000; in all, $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 77, to insert:

For support and civilization of Indians at Grande Ronde and Siletz Agencies, Oreg., including pay of employees, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "South Dakota," in section 22, on page 77, lines 17, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$61,500" and insert "$62,750," and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$66,500" and insert "$67,750," so as to read:

SEC. 22. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $62,750; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $67,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 7, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$43,750" and insert "$46,000," and in line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$51,750" and insert "$54,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $46,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for steel water tank, $2,000; for addition to shop building, $1,000; in all, $54,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 13, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$48,500" and insert "$46,000," and in line 14, after the words "in all," to strike out "$53,500" and insert "$51,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Rapid City, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $46,000; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $51,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 7, after "$200,000," to insert "to be expended under the agreement with said Indians in section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, which agreement is hereby extended to and including June 30, 1916," so as to make the clause read:

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools among the Sioux Indians, including the erection and repairs of school buildings, $200,000, to be expended under the agreement with said Indians in section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, which agreement is hereby extended to and including June 30, 1916.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order on that amendment, and to make it now, without any discussion of the merits, which would lead to a very protracted debate if we entered upon it. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated in the hearings, at page 685:

As the bill passed the House this particular item carried an appropriation of $200,000 for school purposes, but omitted the proviso which made it a treaty fund. As passed by the House it is now a gratuity, and under existing law, and under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Quick Bear case, the money appropriated and passed by the House can not be used in any way for sectarian purposes. As the amendment is now proposed—

That is the amendment here, against which I make the point of order—

it will be available for sectarian purposes. That is the legal situation.

The law of 1897—I quote from the Laws and Treaties of Indian Affairs, volume 1, page 87. The law of 1897 provided:

That it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

That is the general law. To modify, repeal, or change a general law requires general legislation. I make the point of order that this is general legislation in that it repeals in part the statute of 1897.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In other words——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Chair rules on that point of order, I desire to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair get an understanding of the situation. Does the Senator from Massachusetts state that there is a general law which provides that no money shall be appropriated for any denominational purpose?

Mr. LODGE (reading)—

It is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator state that the effect of this amendment will be to pay money for such a purpose?

Mr. LODGE. I quote the Assistant Indian Commissioner, who states:

As the amendment is now proposed—

That is, the Senate amendment—

it will be available for sectarian purposes. That is the legal situation.

There is no doubt about it, as a matter of fact, Mr. President.

Mr. GRONNA. I will state that that is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from North Dakota states that that is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, with the statement just made by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts the Supreme Court of the United States does not agree. This is not a new controversy. It is a very old one. The argument just made against this provision by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts was made with great force and vigor before the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Quick Bear case. It was there urged that a similar provision in an appropriation act was in contravention of the very statute to which the Senator has adverted. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, pointed out that it is not inconsistent with that statute and had no effect whatever upon it; that the statute referred to applied only to prohibit gratuitous grants of money to sectarian institutions, and that this particular provision was not in the nature of a gratuity to these Indians at all; that the Government of the United States had entered into a contract with the Indians by which it obligated itself to do certain things, among other things to provide educational facilities for their children, and when it made these appropriations for the purpose of carrying out those treaty stipulations it was giving no gratuity whatever, but it was simply turning over to the Indians the money which belonged to them, and therefore it was not the disposition of public funds at all, but it was simply directing the distribution of tribal funds.

As the question is of some importance, I shall ask the indulgence of the Chair until I read the opinion, which will make the point very clear.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I will wait until the decision has been read. It sustains my point.

Mr. WALSH. The opinion by Chief Justice Fuller, in which all the judges of the Supreme Court concurred, is as follows:

We concur in the decree of the Court of Appeals of the District and the reasoning by which its conclusion is supported, as set forth in the opinion of Wright, J., speaking for the court. (Washington Law Rep., v. 25, p. 766.)

The validity of the contract for $27,000 is attacked on the ground that all contracts for sectarian education among the Indians are forbidden by certain provisos contained in the Indian appropriation acts of 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, and 1899. But if these provisos relate only to the appropriations made by the Government out of the public moneys of the United States raised by taxation from persons of all creeds and faiths, or none at all, and appropriated gratuitously for the purpose of education among the Indians and not to "tribal funds," which belong to the Indians themselves, then the contract must be sustained. The difference between one class of appropriations and the other has long been recognized in the annual appropriation acts. The gratuitous appropriation of public moneys for the purpose of Indian education has always been made under the heading "Support of schools," while the disbursement of the "treaty fund" has always been under the heading "Fulfilling treaty stipulations and support of Indian tribes," and that from the "trust fund" is not in the Indian appropriation acts at all. One class of appropriations relates to public moneys belonging to the Government, the other to moneys which belong to the Indians and which is administered for them by the Government.

From the history of appropriations of public moneys for education of Indians, set forth in the brief of counsel for appellees and again at length in the answer, it appears that before 1895 the Government for a number of years had made contracts for sectarian schools for the education of the Indians, and the money due on these contracts was paid, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, from the "tribal funds" and from the gratuitous public appropriations. But in 1894 opposition developed against appropriating public moneys for sectarian education. Accordingly, in the Indian appropriation act of 1894, under the heading of "Support of schools," the Secretary of the Interior was directed to investigate the propriety of discontinuing contract schools and to make such recommendations as he might deem proper. The Secretary suggested a gradual reduction in the public appropriations on account of the money which had been invested in these schools, with the approbation of the Government. He said: "It would be scarcely just to abolish them entirely—to abandon instantly a policy so long recognized," and suggested that they should be decreased at the rate of not less than 20 per cent a year. Thus in a few years they would cease to exist, and during this time the bureau would be gradually prepared to do without them, while they might gather strength to continue without Government aid.

Accordingly Congress introduced in the appropriation act of 1895 a limitation on the use of public moneys in sectarian schools. This act appropriated under the heading "Support of schools" "for the support of Indian and industrial schools, and for other purposes, * * * $1,164,350. * * * Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts, but only with the present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used in the fiscal year 1895, and the Government shall, as early as practicable, make provision for the education of the Indians in Government schools."

This limitation——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Right there let the Chair ask where is there anything in the amendment which provides that this money is to come from the tribal fund of the Indians?

Mr. WALSH. That is just the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to be heard a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will excuse the Chair for interrupting him, but the Chair wants to get his view as to whether there is anything in the amendment providing that these are tribal funds.

Mr. WALSH. The point is that under the appropriation as it is the moneys will be taken out of the public funds and thus be subject to this statute. The amendment makes it payable out of what are properly spoken of as tribal funds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But the Chair is asking, Where is it in the amendment provided that this money comes out of tribal funds?

Mr. WALSH. I was not following the Chair. Will he give me the page?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Page 79.

Mr. WALSH. The matter was gone into quite carefully before the committee.

Mr. LODGE. It comes out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. If the language remain as it is, Mr. President—

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools among the Sioux Indians, including the erection and repairs of school buildings, $200,000—

It would be in the nature of a gratuity out of the public funds; but the amendment provides that it is to be expended under the agreement with said Indians.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Exactly.

Mr. WALSH. That makes the appropriation payable out of tribal funds. The Supreme Court of the United States so held in this case. That is the point I am endeavoring to make.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana has not finished the reading.

Mr. WALSH. I was endeavoring to show, under the ruling here, that a provision of this character in the appropriation act makes the fund tribal money; that is to say, if I make myself clear——

The VICE PRESIDENT. You make yourself clear on your statement, but you do not make yourself clear on your argument. That is the difficulty exactly.

Mr. WALSH. I trust before I get through it will be plain. At the time the treaty was made the Government might have paid money for the lands which were ceded. It might then invest those moneys, which would confessedly be tribal funds. There can be no question or doubt about that. It preferred not to do that, however. It preferred to obligate itself instead of paying the money. Instead of paying the money and utilizing the income of that money, or the principal of that fund, to defray the expenses of educating the Indians from year to year, it preferred to obligate itself to provide money from year to year for the education of the Indian. In other words, it would discharge its obligations by turning over to the Indians from year to year the money for the education of the children which it might have set apart at the very outset for the education of the Indian.

So, Mr. President, whatever money has been utilized for the purpose of making good its treaty obligations was tribal funds belonging to the Indians, just the same as if the money——

The VICE PRESIDENT. In other words, the Senator's contention is that, without any agreement with these Indians as to how much would be appropriated from time to time, whenever there is an appropriation it becomes tribal funds.

Mr. WALSH. If the statute prescribes that it shall be paid pursuant to that treaty, the Government thereby recognizes that its obligation under the treaty has not yet been discharged, and it is continuing to discharge its obligation under that treaty. That is the condition of affairs which the Committee on Indian Affairs found to exist.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; that does not answer the question. My question is, If the Government agreed to educate the Indians in accordance with the treaty, how did any money that was subsequently appropriated for that purpose, without any specification in the treaty as to the amount, thereby become tribal funds?

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; because you can very readily conceive that the Government has completely discharged its obligation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator does not contend, then, that this is tribal money?

Mr. WALSH. I do; certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked the Senator if he contended that any money appropriated would become tribal money, and he said "no." I ask him if this is tribal money, and he says "yes."

Mr. WALSH. I say, because the recital of the amendment declares that the money is thus set aside to meet the obligation of the treaty, thereby it becomes tribal funds. But, Mr. President, you can very readily conceive that the obligation was satisfied long ago, and then if an appropriation is made and it is not declared to be in fulfillment of the treaty it could not, perhaps, be asserted that the money constituted tribal funds. Indeed, I take it that it would not be.

Let me proceed, and I think perhaps the matter will be further elucidated by the opinions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. He keeps referring to the treaty. Does the Senator deny that the treaty expired in 1889, and was renewed for 20 years, and has expired again?

Mr. WALSH. The treaty was renewed for 20 years. That matter has likewise been the subject of contention. It is a disputed matter as to whether the limitation of 20 years applied in any sense whatever to that part of the obligation resting upon the Government to provide educational facilities for the Indians.

Mr. LODGE. If the treaty has any force, this amendment is needless.

Mr. WALSH. I am obliged to differ with the Senator upon that.

Mr. LODGE. Then, I should like to ask the Senator, does this $200,000 come out of a special or general fund?

Mr. WALSH. Of course I would rather defer until I get through with the presentation. I would be glad to answer the Senator, and answer frankly, but I should like to proceed now.

Mr. LODGE. I ask only that one question. If the Senator does not care to answer whether it comes out of a special fund or a general fund——

Mr. WALSH. It would come out of a special fund, as a matter of course, if that fund is set aside as in fulfillment of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. There is no such fund.

Mr. WALSH. We are trying to create one by this act.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly; we are trying to create one by this act.

Mr. WALSH. We are trying to give the annual appropriation in lieu of a lump sum which might have been appropriated in the first place. The opinion continues:

> This limitation of 80 per cent was to be expended for contract schools, which were those that up to that time had educated Indians through the use of public moneys, and had not relation and did not refer to "tribal funds."
> In the appropriation act of 1896, under the same heading, "Support of schools," the appropriation of public money of $1,235,000 was limited by a proviso that contracts should only be made at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for Indian children to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used in the fiscal year 1895, and immediately following the appropriation of public money appears the expression, "and it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school." This limitation, if it can be given effect as such, manifestly applies to the use of public moneys gratuitously appropriated for such purpose, and not to moneys belonging to the Indians themselves. In the appropriation act of 1897 the same declaration of policy occurs as a limitation on the appropriation of public moneys for the support of schools, and the amount applicable to contract schools was limited to 40 per cent of the amount used in 1895. In the act of 1898 the amount applicable to contract schools was limited to 30 per cent, and in the act of 1899 the amount so applicable was limited to 15 per cent, these words being added: "This being the final appropriation for sectarian schools." The declaration of the settled policy of the Government is found only in the acts of 1896 and 1897, and was entirely carried out by the reductions provided for.

Now:

> Since 1899 public moneys are appropriated under the heading, "Support of schools," "for the support of Indian and industrial schools and for other educational purposes," without saying anything about sectarian schools. This was not needed, as the effect of the legislation was to make subsequent appropriations for education mean that sectarian schools were excluded in sharing in them, unless otherwise provided.
> As has been shown, in 1868 the United States made a treaty with the Sioux Indians, under which the Indians made a large cession of land and other rights. In consideration of this the United States agreed that for every 30 children a house should be provided and a teacher competent to teach the elementary branches of our English education should be furnished for 20 years. In 1877, in consideration of further land cessions, the United States agreed to furnish all necessary aid to assist the Indians in the work of civilization and furnish them schools and instruction in mechanical and agricultural arts, as provided by the treaty of 1868. In 1889 Congress extended the obligation of the treaty for 20 years, subject to such modifications as Congress should deem most effective, to secure the Indians equivalent benefits of such education. Thereafter, in every annual Indian appropriation act, there was an appropriation to carry out the terms of this treaty, under the heading, "Fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of Indian tribes."

You will bear in mind that the original contract and agreement was for 20 years. Then Congress extended the period for 20 years more. That brought it down to 1909.

> These appropriations rested on different grounds from the gratuitous appropriations of public moneys under the heading "Support of schools." The two subjects were separately treated in each act, and naturally, as they are essentially different in character. One is the gratuitous appropriation of public moneys for the purpose of Indian education, but the "treaty fund" is not public money in this sense.

We are declaring here simply, Mr. President, that this is treaty money; it is for Indian education, pursuant to the treaty, and is not public money in any just sense.

> It is the Indian's money, or at least is dealt with by the Government as if it belonged to them, as morally it does. It differs from the "trust fund" in this: The "trust fund" has been set aside for the Indians and the income expended for their benefit, which expenditure required no annual appropriation. The whole amount due the Indians for certain land cessions was appropriated in one lump sum by the act of 1889 (25 Stat., 888, chap. 405). This "trust fund" is held for the Indians and not distributed per capita, being held as property in common. The money is distributed in accordance with the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, but really belongs to the Indians.
> The President declared it to be the moral right of the Indians to have this "trust fund" applied to the education of the Indians in the schools of their choice, and the same view was entertained by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the Court of Appeals of the District. But the "treaty fund" has exactly the same characteristics. They are moneys belonging really to the Indians. They are the price of land ceded by the Indians to the Government. The only difference is that in the "treaty fund" the debt to the Indians created and secured by the treaty is paid by annual appropriations. They are not gratuitous appropriations of public moneys, but the payment, as we repeat, of a treaty debt in installments. We perceive no justification for applying the proviso or declaration of policy to the payment of treaty obligations, the two things being distinct and different in nature and having no relation to each other, except that both are technically appropriations.
> Some reference is made to the Constitution in respect to this contract with the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions. It is not contended that it is unconstitutional, and it could not be. (Roberts v. Bradfield, 12 App. D. C., 475; Bradfield v. Roberts, 175 U. S., 291.) But it is contended that the spirit of the Constitution requires that the declaration of policy that the Government "shall make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian schools" should be treated as applicable on the ground that the actions of the United States were to always be undenominational, and that therefore the Government can never act in a sectarian capacity, either in the use of its own funds or in that of the funds of others, in respect of which it is a trustee; hence, that even the Sioux trust fund can not be applied for education in Catholic schools even though the owners of the fund so desire it. But we can not concede the proposition that Indians can not be allowed to use their own money to educate their children in the schools of their own choice because the Government is necessarily undenominational, as it can not make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Court of Appeals well said:
> "The 'treaty' and 'trust' moneys are the only moneys that the Indians can lay claim to as a matter of right, the only sums on which they are entitled to rely as theirs for education, and while these moneys are not delivered to them in hand, yet the money must not only be provided but be expended for their benefit and in part for their education; it seems inconceivable—

It seems inconceivable—

The Supreme Court says—

> that Congress should have intended to prohibit them from receiving religious education at their own cost if they so desire it; such an intent would be one "to prohibit the free exercise of religion" amongst the Indians, and such would be the effect of the construction for which the complainants contend.
> The cestuis que trust can not be deprived of their rights by the trustee in the exercise of the power implied.

Now, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator have one of the pages bring that opinion to the Chair?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly. The only question that remains is as to whether the obligations of the treaty have been fully fulfilled and discharged or whether we are still endeavoring to do our utmost to meet the obligations of the treaty that we entered into with these Indians? I shall trespass a little further upon the patience of the Chair—and I have been indulged kindly in this matter—to refer to the hearing before the Committee on Indian Affairs to show that those obligations have not been discharged.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does anyone know as to how the $27,000 Quick Bear case arose, what the nature of the provision was?

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the remark of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does anyone know where the appropriation in the Quick Bear case was and what it was?

Mr. LODGE. It was a tribal fund.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was a tribal fund?

Mr. WALSH. A tribal fund in exactly the same sense that this one was.

Mr. LODGE. No; it was not a tribal fund in the sense this was, at all.

Mr. WALSH. It was for the fulfillment of a treaty stipulation.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and this is not. This is a payment from the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. The other was taken from the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. This is taken from the Treasury, and this amendment is to be put on in order to breathe life into a dead treaty.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. I think I can give some information on this matter. It will be remembered that the treaty of 1866 with the Sioux Indians was extended in 1899. That treaty provided that education for the Sioux children should be had for not less than 20 years. The treaty did not provide for education for 20 years.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is mistaken. The treaty expired at the end of 20 years.

Mr. ASHURST. If the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me for a moment, I will read from article 7 of the treaty, the last line. I am reading from the treaty:

The provisions of this article to continue for not less than 20 years.

Mr. LODGE. The limit, of course, is not less than 20 years, and that ends it, of course, unless it is extended further.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. In March, 1869, the treaty was extended for 20 years, and in addition thereto a fund of $2,000,000 was set aside permanently, the interest on which at 5 per cent was to be available for education for the Sioux.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and that interest was $31,000, and this is $200,000.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct about that. I ask to have the following letter from the Assistant Indian Commissioner read at the desk, if the Senator from Montana will pardon me.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that giving information on the point of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I think it affords some illumination on the point of order. That is the only reason for which I offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 28, 1915.

Mr. S. M. BROSIUS,
Agent Indian Rights Association, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BROSIUS: In response to your letter of January 26, 1915, regarding the funds set aside for the Holy Rosary School, Pine Ridge Reservation, S. Dak., for the current fiscal year, you are informed that the share individually of the Pine Ridge Sioux in the interest on the $2,000,000 Sioux fund created by the act approved March 2, 1899 (25 Stat. L., 895), available for education during the current year, in addition to the balance remaining from former years, is approximately $5.55. The interest on the share of the Pine Ridge Sioux fund July 1, 1914, and January 1, 1915, available for education, amounted to $17,881.04; which amount, based on the number of Indians entitled to share in the principal fund July 1, 1914, would give to each Indian $3.37 per capita. The accumulation of interest in Sioux fund, Pine Ridge education, July 1, 1914, in addition to the above, also available for education, amounted to $13,430.85, or $2.38 per capita. It will, therefore, be seen that based on 1,008 petitioners the total amount of interest available for the contract aggregated $5,594.40. In arriving at the value of each share, in ascertaining the total amount that would be available for the above school during the current year, all the Pine Ridge Sioux funds available for education were taken into consideration, as follows:

Interest on Sioux fund, Pine Ridge (education) Sec. 17, act Mar. 2, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 895).	$31,315.49
Support of Sioux of different tribes, subsistence and civilization Art. 5, act Feb. 28, 1877 (19 Stat. L., 254), and Indian act Aug. 1, 1914 (Public, No. 160).	200,000.00
Education Sioux Nation Sec. 17, act Mar. 2, 1899 (25 Stat. L., 894), and Indian act Aug. 1, 1914 (Public, No. 160).	200,000.00

It was determined that the value of each share in all these funds amounted to $33.53, and there being 1,008 petitioners the value of the shares of the petitioners aggregated $33,798.24. However, the whole amount of the contract, namely, $24,300 was, for convenience in bookkeeping, set aside from "Interest on Sioux fund, Pine Ridge education," it being immaterial whether the full amount was charged to this fund or whether a portion of the amount was charged to each of the funds involved, all of which have been regarded as available, as will be seen by reference to a letter dated March 19, 1913, from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to the president of the Indian Rights Association.

Hoping the foregoing information will serve your purpose,

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield to me for another moment, this may not afford much illumination on the mooted question and the point of order, but I may not have the opportunity later, and I feel that some reason should be given as to why the committee adopted this amendment.

The treaty, 20 years from March 2, 1889, expired in 1910. This very same provision was in the Indian appropriation bills of 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, and 1915. One of the compelling reasons, if I am at liberty to speak for the committee, why the committee adopted this amendment was this: The treaty with the Sioux made in 1868 did not specifically, at least in spirit, agree to educate the Indian, and went on to say——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that treaty in force now?

Mr. WALSH. I want to say a word about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair would like to know.

Mr. WALSH. The treaty is in force.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is still in force?

Mr. WALSH. It is in force.

Mr. LODGE. I absolutely deny that.

Mr. WALSH. It is in force this way, Mr. President: The Government at the expiration of the time confessed that it had not met its obligations. It extended it for 20 years. Those 20 years expired, and it confessed then that it had not yet met its obligation. Meanwhile, a statute was passed to the effect that there should be no more treaties with any Indians, and accordingly, the only way the Government of the United States could acknowledge the obligations that it had incurred in the case of treaties that have expired was by statute, and it proceeded to make these appropriations in accordance with the statute in order to meet those obligations. That is also covered——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield? I want to finish my statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In other words, it is the contention of the Senator from Montana that if this law is passed then the treaty will be in force.

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; the contention of the Senator from Montana is that this is simply a question as to whether the Senate shall declare that these moneys shall be paid out of the general funds in the Treasury to which the Indians have no claim whatever or whether we shall set aside a certain sum to meet what we concede to be our obligations to these Indians; in other words, to pay them what we owe them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there were a treaty the Senator from Montana would not insist that the Senate of the United States had anything to do with it?

Mr. WALSH. Congress would be obliged to make appropriations to meet it. We are doing that every year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Exactly, while they are in accordance with treaties that are in force and there is not any way for the Congress of the United States to avoid it.

Mr. WALSH. And let me add——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, it would seem to agree with the argument of the Senator from Montana that this treaty will be in force and effect just as long as Congress recognizes it to be in force and no longer.

Mr. WALSH. The treaty will expire we will say at the end of 20 years, but if the Government of the United States had not performed its obligation under that treaty I apprehend no one would hold that we would be absolved from further performance of that obligation. Now, just when the treaty obligation will or will not be satisfied as a matter of course is for Congress to say. That is the situation of affairs.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I am not to be understood here as occupying any position whatever antagonistic to the doctrine of the statute to which the Senator from Massachusetts appealed. It has no more earnest advocate and supporter on the floor of the Senate than am I. But, Mr. President, at the same time we do not desire to have this matter which is really the satisfaction of a treaty obligation treated as though it reached the case that was intended to be covered by the statute, one of appropriations from the Treasury.

I want to read just a word or two that was said at the hearings, showing the way in which this impressed members of the committee. I read from page 622 what was said by Senator OWEN:

Senator OWEN. The real distinction between these contending forces, I think, is this: Mr. Brosius is insisting that this is a gratuity because the treaty terminated after the end of 20 years, and, being a gratuity, that it is not applicable. The other parties contend that in reality the treaty itself has been liberalized by acts of Congress, and is really an extension of the treaty, and is a part, therefore, of the treaty fund and should be dealt with as such, and that is a point of view that is so nicely balanced that one might almost take either side with perfect propriety. My sympathy is with those who have gone upon the frontier and have established these schools, and under all the circumstances that would induce me to support this provision, because I think it is economy in instructing these Indians. I think that the services of the church in that connection are really a gratuity out of the treasury of the church itself. In so far as they do contribute in establishing these frontier schools, there is no material value in it to them, and I do not feel inclined to draw a harsh or a sharp line against them in applying the sectarian rules. I am very strongly opposed to using the general funds of either the State or of the Nation for sectarian purposes, for that would evidently lead to abuses, but in this case, where there has been a school established in charity, and obviously for charity, I do not think that we ought to put a harsh construction upon this matter. I do not think we ought to deal with it purely as a gratuity, but as an extension of the treaty, and if we do that, then it will be possible for these Indians to have their portion of this matter used for the maintenance of these schools, and I wish to be recorded in that way, if the committee please. I am obliged to go down in the Chamber for a few minutes. I will be back in a little while, but I did not like to leave without expressing my opinion in regard to it, since it might look as though I were evading the issue.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] took a similar position.

Mr. President, I have presented this matter. It seems to me simply a question as to whether an appropriation having been made payable out of one fund, we can put on an amendment making it payable out of another fund, and whether an amendment of that kind would be general legislation. I submit the question, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana maintain that this amendment provides for the payment out of another fund?

Mr. WALSH. I do; that is the effect of the amendment, instead of paying it out of the general funds of the Treasury, to which the Indians have no claim whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no fund now in the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. No; but this would create a fund; that is to say, it would be to create a fund to pay the indebtedness due under the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to protract this discussion, unless the Chair desires to hear me upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This has seemed to the Chair—the Chair knows nothing about it——

Mr. LODGE. Before the Chair begins, may I call his attention to one thing which may not be before him?

The appropriation of last year contains the words "to be expended under the agreement with said Indians in section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, which agreement is hereby extended to and including June 30, 1915." That was not put in by the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It did not go on the bill last year.

Mr. LODGE. It is in the law of last year, extending it to June 30, 1915. The treaty, of course, is dead without a further extension. It has been extended from year to year.

I also call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the attorney and secretary of the Catholic Indian missions says, on page 693 of the hearings:

If that clause were left out it is a gratuity appropriation, of course.

I might go on repeating that it is a gratuitous appropriation. That this amendment therefore comes under the Quick Bear estimate case, I think, is undoubted. I do not desire, however, to take up the time of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think that the Quick Bear case is in point at all. The Quick Bear case disclosed, first, that there was such a fund, and secondly, that there were $3,000,000 in the Treasury, which had been deposited as a permanent fund for the education of the Sioux. Without any showing whatever as to which fund it should be paid from, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs entered into a contract. There is no way to tell from the record whether the Quick Bear money was paid out of the $3,000,000 tribal funds or paid out of the appropriation.

It seems, secondly, to the Chair, that this treaty did expire in the year 1909, and that its provisions could only have been extended by an act of Congress; but no point of order was ever raised in the Senate of the United States upon the question as to whether that was general legislation, interfering with the general law with reference to appropriations not being made for sectarian schools. Nobody has disputed that the Congress of the United States has a perfect right to change the law, as it wants to do; nobody would have any question of doubt as to the right of Congress to make just this sort of an appropriation, if it chose to do so; at least, that is the way it seems to the Chair; but such appropriations have been made not as against a point of order but without the point of order having been raised. The Chair believes the point of order is well taken, and accordingly sustains it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before this matter is disposed of I should like to incorporate in the RECORD a short letter from the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, relating to a matter as to which he said that, unless the amendment were adopted, it would necessarily diminish the available educational facilities there. The committee had that letter before them, and they acted in the light of it when they passed on the subject.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the letter be read.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the letter be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 8, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In answer to your formal request with reference to what effect the discontinuance of contracts with mission schools for the education of Indian children would have upon the educational facilities for Indian children generally, the following statement is submitted:

The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the fiscal year 1914 shows that there are approximately 15,000 Indian children, out of a total of 77,000 eligibles, not in school, and as long as such a condition exists the problem of enrolling Indian children in school is of the greatest importance.

Although most of the unenrolled Indian children are not entitled to enrollment in these mission schools, yet if the contracts should be discontinued it would necessarily diminish the available educational facilities. The increased requirements if thus imposed would have to be met by increasing the Government schools and by becoming more dependent upon the public schools, which are not always available or conveniently located for Indian pupils.

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that some other letters from the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs and from Mr. Lusk be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 8, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to the request of your committee for a letter setting out whether Indians whose tribal funds are used for educating their children in sectarian schools will come in for a share in the distribution of these funds, you are advised as follows:

Under the long-established practice of handling trust and treaty funds the right or interest of any Indian whose children are educated in a mission school, as a result of his having evidenced a desire that this should be done, to any annuity or pro rata distribution of these funds is not lessened by his having availed himself of the privilege of enrolling his children in such school.

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 8, 1915.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your informal request for information showing whether the Government has invited denominations to invest money in building denominational schools by the promise or hope of intimation of appropriations for their support, and showing also wherein there has been any change in policy with respect to these schools and the withdrawal of support for appropriations to maintain the schools.

The history of Federal aid to other than Government schools goes back to the beginning of the last century. The first appropriation for Indian education was by the act of March 3, 1819 (3 Stat. L., 516). This act provided the annual sum of $10,000 for the purpose, and read, in part:

"That for the purpose of providing against the further decline and final extinction of the Indian tribes adjoining the frontier settlements of the United States, and for introducing among them the habits and arts of civilization, the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, in every case where he shall judge improvement in the habits and conditions of such Indians practicable, and that the means of instruction can be introduced with their own consent, to employ capable persons of good moral character to instruct them in the mode of agriculture suited to their situation; and for teaching their children in reading, writing, and arithmetic; and performing such other duties as may be enjoined, according to such instructions and rules as the President may give and prescribe for the regulation of their conduct in the discharge of their duties."

In 1820, 21 schools conducted by the different religious societies were given $11,838, and from that date until the appropriation of $100,000 in 1870 (16 Stat., 335–359) the principal educational work in relation to the Indians was under the auspices of these bodies, aided more or less by the Government.

Similar appropriations continued until 1876, and contracts were made annually with the mission schools of the different denominations, payable from these appropriations.

The act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stat. L., 176, 197), appropriated $20,000 for the support of industrial schools and other educational purposes for the Indian tribes. From these public funds—and also from tribal funds available for educational purposes under treaty stipulations—were paid the amounts due under contracts made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, with the various denominational schools for the education of Indian children.

In 1889 there were set aside for contract schools $529,905; in 1890, $562,640; in 1891, $570,218; in 1892, $611,570; in 1893, $533,241; and $537,600 in 1894.

The appropriation act for the fiscal year 1896 (act of Mar. 2, 1895, 28 Stat. L., 876, 903, 904) provided:

"That the Secretary of the Interior shall make contracts, but only with present contract schools, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, to an extent not exceeding 80 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895, and the Government shall, as early as practicable, make provision for the education of Indian children in Government schools: Provided, That the foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for."

The act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. L., 321, 345), provided:

"That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895: Provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to public schools of any State, Territory, county, or city, or to schools herein or hereafter specifically provided for."

The act of June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. L., 62, 79), provided:

"And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government hereafter make no appropriation whatever for education in any sectarian school: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1898, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 40 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895."

The act of March 1, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 924, 942), provided:

"That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with contract schools, apportioning as near as may be the amount so contracted for among schools of various denominations, for the education of Indian pupils during the fiscal year 1900, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children, and to an amount not exceeding 15 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1895, the same to be divided proportionately among the said several contract schools, this being the final appropriation for sectarian schools."

Very truly, yours, CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

STATEMENT OF MR. CHARLES S. LUSK, SECRETARY TO THE BUREAU OF CATHOLIC INDIAN MISSIONS.

Mr. LUSK. I want to say before I read this brief that so far as the three funds of the Sioux are concerned—that is, the Sioux civilization and support, the Sioux education, and the interest on the $13,000,000 trust fund that is available for educational purposes—that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that they are tribal moneys, and that being such, notwithstanding the declaration of the settled policy in the appropriation act of 1896, they are available for the education of Sioux Indian children in mission schools when the Indians themselves by petition so ask.

* * * * * * *

I beg to submit on behalf of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions the following brief:

"In the treaty of April 29, 1868, the Government of the United States, as a part of the consideration for the cession and surrender of a large portion of their lands, agreed to confer upon the Sioux Indians the benefits of education. This duty was not limited as to time, but was to continue 'not less than 20 years.' Section 7 of the treaty provides 'In order to insure the civilization of the Indians entering into this treaty the necessity of education is admitted. * * * the provisions of this treaty to continue for not less than 20 years.'

"At the end of 20 years, in section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, Congress again admitted and recognized its obligation 'of securing the benefits of education' in accordance with 'the seventh article of the said treaty of 1868;' and provided for continuing those benefits for 20 years longer. This act did not limit the time to only 20 years. On the contrary, by failing to make such limitation, and by specifically referring to article 7 of the treaty of 1868 it, by implication, recognized the continuing duty of the Government to 'secure the benefits of education' to the Sioux Indians so long as the need for 'the benefits of education' should exist.

"In harmony with this view, at the end of the 20-year period provided in the act of March 2, 1889, Congress, for five consecutive years, beginning with 1910, has continued and extended this treaty.

"The question now presented is exactly the same question that confronted Congress in 1889, in 1910, and each succeeding year down to the present time, namely, whether the educational needs of these Indians are still such as morally and equitably to hold the Government to its solemn obligation in section 7 of the treaty of 1868 to 'secure the benefits of education' to them. It has been settled that Congress has the power to abrogate a treaty with the Indians. The power to abrogate, of course, includes the power to extend a treaty once terminated, and Congress has five times extended the treaty of 1889. In considering this question it must be kept in mind that the obligation of the Government to provide schools for these Indians, so long as the need for them exists, is a treaty obligation, and no matter what phrasing of words is used in the appropriations made by Congress to provide schools for these Indians, those appropriations are, in fact, incident to the performance of that treaty obligation. To refuse now to extend section 7 of the treaty of 1868, while at the same time admitting the need of schools for these Indians, is in effect to disregard the solemn treaty obligation without consulting the Indians, an obligation which will not be fulfilled by the Government until there is no longer need to provide support for their schools. Congress has no moral right to discontinue this treaty appropriation, in any event, without first consulting the Indians.

"In providing schools out of the appropriations made by Congress in pursuance of this treaty, the Government could have established Government schools, or, if public or private schools had been available, could have arranged for instruction in them. What it has done, in fact, for the last 10 years has been to permit the Indians having children of school age the privilege of having applied their pro rata share of these annual appropriations and their other tribal funds to pay for the support and education of their children in religious schools. Support and education in these religious schools have cost $108 per capita per annum, as compared with a cost of more than $200 per capita per annum in the Government schools among the Sioux, making a saving of nearly $100 per capita per annum. In using this treaty appropriation and the other tribal funds available for the education and support of the Sioux, the Government has recognized the natural right of Indian parents to select the school for their children, and has thereby saved a sum which can conservatively be estimated at $50,000 a year. The right of the Government so to use this treaty appropriation was fully established by the decision in the case of Rueben Quick Bear v. Francis E. Leupp (210 U. S., 50) in the Supreme Court of the United States.

"The effect of the objection to Congress further extending article 7 of the treaty of 1868, made in the statement of S. M. Brosius, agent of the Indian Rights Association, is:

"First. To ask Congress to disregard a solemn treaty obligation.

"Second. To deprive the individual Indians of the Sioux Nation of the right to continue to have their children taught in schools of their own choice, a right enjoyed by them for 10 years.

"Third. To throw temporarily out of school at least 200 pupils for whom there are no present facilities.

"Fourth. To increase the cost of education for these 200 children about $100 per capita, entailing a wholly useless additional expense of at least $20,000 a year.

"The purpose of Mr. Brosius, on behalf of the Indian Rights Association, in filing objection to the continuation of this treaty provision, is clearly to prevent the education of Indian children in the three Catholic schools which have been conducted for 25 years among the Sioux Indians; if he succeeds in his purpose, the doors of these schools must be closed against at least 200 Indian pupils. There are not sufficient Government school facilities in South Dakota, even when these three Catholic schools are used at full capacity, for the Indian population of school age in that State. If these 200 children are turned away from the Catholic schools, where will they go? There is not an available Government Indian school on the reservation, nor in the State of South Dakota nor in the United States to take them. Even if there were such schools available, the cost to the Government would be at least $20,000 annually more than it has heretofore paid to educate them in schools where their parents wish them to be, and where they are now contented and doing good work. There being no present school facilities for them, the inevitable result would be, for at least one year, to keep these children out of school, and to oblige the Government in the near future to construct and equip school buildings to accommodate them, which would involve an expenditure of not less than $100,000.

"Mr. Brosius says: 'The primary consideration is the education of Indian youth in Government schools according to the policy of our Government expressed by Congress, whereby the Indians of different tribes in different parts of the country have the benefit of a uniform system of education under the direction and inspection of agents of the Government.'

"In fact, the Government of the United States has caused the Government Indian schools in the various States to follow as nearly as possible the courses of study in the said several States, modified by certain requirements for industrial education not found in State public schools. This system leads to as great variety in the policy of education in the Indian schools as there are different plans in the different States where Indians reside.

"In truth, the Government, from the time of the 'Peace policy' in 1869 to the present day, without variation, has encouraged mission schools among Indians. Congress has authorized the granting of patents to churches which have occupied land for the purpose of educating and Christianizing Indians; and it is the practice of the Indian Bureau to grant the use of land to churches for mission and school purposes on Indian reservations. The Indian Office always takes into account any mission school where it has under consideration the providing of additional school facilities for the Indians on any particular reservation. Where Government and mission school facilities combined are ample for the children of school age, the Indian Office does not erect additional school buildings.

"Mr. Brosius says further: 'The diversion of the pro rata shares of the petitioning Indians reduces to that extent the treaty funds available for all the members of the tribe and produces inequality and inequity.' This statement is untrue. Not one dollar of the trust and treaty funds that have been used for the education of the children of the petitioning Indians has been taken from the pro rata shares of those Indians not signing the petitions. This was conclusively shown by Mr. E. W. Gans, special United States attorney in the Quick Bear case, in his argument before the Supreme Court. He said:

"'There are 4,986 Indians on the rolls of the Rosebud Reservation, and the amount of tribal income applicable to education, in the discretion of the commissioner, is $250,047.90, or a per capita of $50.15.

"'The 212 petitioners represent 669 shares, or $33,550.35, and of this they ask that $27,000 be used for the education of their children in St. Francis Mission School. The following table will represent the pro rata shares in these tribal funds and the per capita share:

"'4,986 Indians, $250,047.90 tribal funds, $50.15 per capita.

"'669 shares, $33,550.35 tribal funds, $50.15 per capita.

"'4,317 petitions (nonpetitions).

"'4,986 Indians, $250,047.90 tribal funds, $50.15 per capita.

"'The cost of the Government school for the fiscal year was about $76,830. Since the shares of the petitioning Indians amount to $33,550.35 and the sum asked for the school is only $27,000 out of this share, and the petitions were genuinely signed, the terms of the Executive order of President Roosevelt of February 3, 1905, e. g., "to see that any petition by the Indians is genuine, and that the money appropriated for any given school represents only the pro rata proportion to which the Indians making the petition are entitled" have been strictly carried out.'

"The rule followed by the Indian Office is the one laid down by the President in his letter of December 23, 1905, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to wit:

"'Each Indian in a tribe is to be credited with his pro rata shares of the funds, which you will apply for him to the Government school where that is the school used, or to the church school where that is the school used, instead of segregating any portion of the funds for the support of the Government school and pro rating the balance.'

"Mr. Brosius says, likewise: 'Moreover, the practice of diverting a portion of treaty funds from governmental to private schools excites partisan feelings among the Indians.' It is true that a comparatively few of the Sioux Indians who did not join in the petitions have protested against the use of the treaty funds in this way, but their action has been undoubtedly due to influence brought to bear upon them by the Indian Rights Association and those in sympathy with its hostility to the Catholic schools. Even if some of the Indians, owing to these influences, wish to deprive their fellows of the right to have their children educated in schools of their choice, as charged by Mr. Brosius, this fact would not justify Congress in denying to others of the tribe the right to have their own money used for the education of their own children in the excellent schools they wish used for the purpose.

"Mr. Brosius further states that the governmental schools offer facilities for all children of the Sioux Indians. This statement is also untrue, as is shown by the following extract from the last annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Crow Creek Reservation:
School population		236
Government school accommodations	107
Children attending nonreservation schools	49
		156
Deficiency in Government's school facilities		80
Pine Ridge Reservation:
School population		1,629
Government school accommodations	1,011
Children attending nonreservation schools	240
		1,251
Deficiency in Government's school facilities		378
Rosebud Reservation:
School population		1,306
Government school accommodations	750
Children attending nonreservation schools	183

Deficiency in Government's school facilities		372
Total deficiency in Government's school facilities on three reservations		830

"Mr. Brosius very disingenuously quotes only a few words from the opinion in the Quick Bear case. The court did say: 'The effect of this legislation was to make subsequent appropriations for education mean that sectarian schools were excluded from sharing in them unless otherwise provided'; and Mr. Brosius evidently wishes the committee to believe the court held no funds, whether public or tribal, could be used for the education of Indians in religious schools unless otherwise provided. A reading of the entire paragraph will show that this is simply not true. This paragraph is as follows:

"'Since 1829 public moneys are appropriated under the heading, "Support of schools, for the support of Indian and industrial schools and for other educational purposes," without saying anything about sectarian schools. The effect of this legislation was to make subsequent appropriations for education mean that sectarian schools were excluded from sharing in them unless otherwise provided.'

"It is perfectly clear that the Supreme Court referred only to 'public moneys,' and not to tribal funds. This is stated totidem verbis in the following further quotation from the same decision:

"'This limitation' (that is, the declaration of the 'settled policy' of the Government), 'if it can be given effect as such, manifestly applies to the use of public moneys gratuitously appropriated for such purposes and not to moneys belonging to the Indians themselves.'

"In other words, Mr. Brosius quoted one-half of a paragraph in the court's opinion, so as to ascribe to it a meaning plainly inconsistent with the sense of the whole paragraph and flatly contradicted by the further language of the court.

"In view of the Government's plain and solemn treaty obligations to educate these Indians; (2) of the manifest economy resulting from their education in mission schools; (3) of the fact that there are not now, and will not be for some time, sufficient Government school accommodations for at least 200 of the children attending such schools, it is respectfully, but very earnestly, urged that it will be not only proper and wise but simple justice to restore to the Indian bill the clause providing for the expenditure of the $200,000 appropriation for the support and maintenance of the industrial and day schools among the Sioux Indians under the agreement of 1889 and for the extension of said agreement until June 30, 1916.

"In conclusion, it may be appropriately pointed out that the provision in question has received the sanction of Congress since 1910, has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and was incorporated in the pending Indian bill by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives."

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 79, after line 11, to insert:

For subsistence and civilization of the Yankton Sioux, South Dakota, including pay of employees, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 19, to insert:

For a proportionate share of the amount required to construct a wagon road or highway through the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in Corson County, S. Dak., from a point on the Missouri River north of Fontis, S. Dak., thence in a northwesterly direction to the town of Tatanka, the sum of $5,000, in accordance with the report of the Secretary of the Interior of December 7, 1914, made in pursuance of the provisions of section 20 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915," approved August 1, 1914: Provided, That such sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times as he may deem proper, in the employment of Indian labor for the construction of said road or highway, and that the same shall be reimbursable from the Standing Rock Reservation 3 per cent fund under the act of February 14, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 675).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," on page 81, after line 4, to insert:

For the support and civilization of detached Indians in Utah, including pay of employees, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," on page 81, line 9, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$450,000"; in line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$150,000"; in line 13, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000"; in line 15, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$200,000"; and in line 17, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, within his discretion, the sum of $450,000 of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and to expend the sum of $150,000 of said amount for the benefit of the Navajo Springs Band of said Indians in Colorado, not to exceed $50,000 of which amount may be used in providing school and hospital facilities among said Indians, and the sum of $200,000 of said amount for the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, and the sum of $100,000 of said amount for the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 23, on page 82.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the word "paramount," in line 23, on page 82, is necessary? One can not really know what is the object of the provision without referring to the Statutes at Large, but it seems to me that it ought to read:

To secure to the Indians their rights to so much of the waters of the streams in said reservation as may be needed by them for agricultural and domestic purposes—

And so forth. I do not know why they should have "paramount" rights.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] asked that that provision be passed over. I think he wishes to offer an amendment striking out all on page 82, commencing with the word "Provided," down to and including the word "one," on page 83, line 8.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Senator satisfied with the amendment? If so, I will offer it now.

Mr. ASHURST. I am satisfied to have that language stricken out if the Senator from Utah is. The item relates to his State.

Mr. SMOOT. On behalf of the junior Senator from Utah I move to strike out all after the word——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator not wait until the junior Senator from Utah returns?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I shall be glad to wait until he returns, but I thought that it would hasten matters if I should now offer the amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 83, after line 8, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to negotiate an agreement with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians for a final settlement of all of the rights, claims, and demands of said Indians against the United States arising under the agreement between said Indians and the United States, ratified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), with a view to relieving the unsold lands, the subject of said agreement, from all claims or demands of said Indians and to make the proceeds of said lands now available as a trust fund for their present use to advance their civilization, and under any law or agreement with the United States, which have not heretofore been adjudicated; and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall report the result of such negotiations to Congress at the earliest possible date; and there be and is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for said purpose, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the Indians may be represented in the said negotiations by counsel to be selected by themselves, but no contract for compensation shall be valid until approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and said Secretary of the Interior shall approve the form of said contracts: Provided further, That if an agreement can not be entered into with said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians as hereinbefore provided, said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians may bring an action in the Court of Claims, which is given jurisdiction for the purpose, to hear and determine all matters and differences between said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it is now in order, I desire to offer an amendment to the proviso last read by striking out the words "to be" in line 6, on page 84.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 84, line 6, after the word "counsel" and before the word "selected" it is proposed to strike out the words "to be," so that it will read:

That the Indians may be represented in the said negotiations by counsel selected by themselves,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in this amendment relative to an agreement with the Utes, at the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] a brief provision was inserted for sending the matter to the Court of Claims in case the Indians and the Government failed to agree. I find upon examination that the language is not sufficiently full, and I move to strike out all on page 84, line 14, after the word "determine," and insert the amendment which I send to the desk, so as to make the jurisdiction complete.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 84, it is proposed to strike out, after the word "determine," in line 14, the words "all matters and differences between said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians and the United States," and in lieu thereof to insert:

And render judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases, for the value of the lands undisposed of which were ceded by said Indians to the United States in 1880, not to exceed the present value thereof under the public-land laws as administered at the time of said cession, and all claims and counterclaims or set-off of either party, the petition to be verified by claimants' attorneys now by them employed, and the Attorney General is hereby directed to appear for the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA of Tennessee in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 84, after line 16, to insert:

For a proportionate share of the amount required to construct an interstate wagon road or highway through the Kaibab Indian Reservation, Utah, the sum of $1,000: Provided, That such sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in such manner and at such times as he may deem proper in the employment of Indian labor for the construction of said road or highway.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as an amendment to the committee amendment, I move to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$9,000." That is what it should be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 84, in line 19, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$9,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Washington," on page 85, after line 2, to insert:

For support and civilization of the Makahs, including pay of employees, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, after line 8, to strike out,

For expenses incident to carrying out the provisions of the laws of the United States applicable to the Indians at Colville, Puyallup, and Spokane Agencies, including pay of employees necessary to such work, $15,000,

And insert:

For support and civilization of Indians at Colville, Taholah, Puyallup, and Spokane Agencies, including pay of employees, and for purchase of agricultural implements, and support and civilization of Joseph's Band of Nez Perce Indians in Washington, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 4, after the date "1907," to insert: "Provided, That money received under agreements for temporary water supply may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for maintenance and improvement of the irrigation system on said lands," so as to make the clause read:

For operation and maintenance of the irrigation system on lands allotted to Yakima Indians in Washington, $15,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907: Provided, That money received under agreements for temporary water supply may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for maintenance and improvement of the irrigation system on said lands.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington to explain that amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that amendment was put on by the committee, and I had nothing to do with it. I suppose it is made to cover this situation: The lands of some of the Indians are being furnished with water temporarily until the regular irrigation system is put in, and they pay a certain amount of rent per annum.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator believe that the provision will be satisfactory to the Indians?

Mr. JONES. I think so. The money will come very largely, I believe, from the white people who have leased Indian lands.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; the money will be paid, of course, by the white men; but the money should go to the Indians.

Mr. JONES. No; the system there has to be maintained, and that is about the only way to maintain it. I should think the amendment would be satisfactory.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 86, after line 14, to insert:

For the second installment of $635,000 to pay for water supply for irrigation of 40 acres of each Indian allotment on the Yakima Indian Reservation irrigation system, in the State of Washington, provided by the act of August 1, 1914 (Public, No. 160), $100,000, to be covered into the reclamation fund (act of Aug. 1, 1914, vol. 38, p. 605, sec. 1).

For construction of a dam across the Yakima River for the diversion and utilization of water provided for 40 acres of each Indian allotment on the Yakima Reservation, Wash., and such other water supply as may be available or acquired for the irrigation of a total of 120,000 acres of allotted Indian land on said reservation, and for beginning the enlargement and extension of the distribution and drainage system on said reservation, $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the cost of the entire diversion works and distribution and drainage system shall be reimbursable by the owners of the lands irrigable thereunder in not to exceed 20 annual payments, and the Secretary of the Interior may fix operation and maintenance charges which shall be paid as he may direct.

In the apportionment of charges against Indians, due allowance shall be made for such amounts as may have been repaid the United States on account of reimbursable appropriations heretofore made for this project, and for the construction of the irrigation system prior to the passage of the act of December 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 595), as therein provided. All charges against Indian allottees herein authorized, unless otherwise paid, may be paid from individual shares in the tribal fund when the same is available for distribution; and if any allottee shall receive patent in fee to his allotment before the amount so charged against him has been paid to the United States, then such amount remaining unpaid shall be and become a lien upon his allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited in such patent and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and should any Indian sell any part of his allotment with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of any unpaid charges against the land sold shall be and become a first lien thereon and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and delivery of water to such land may be refused within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior until any dues are paid: Provided further, That no right to water or to the use of any irrigation ditch or other structure on said reservation shall vest or be allowed until the owner of the land to be irrigated as herein provided shall comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may determine proper for making effective the foregoing provisions, and to require of owners of lands in fee such security for the reimbursement herein required as he may determine necessary and to refuse delivery of water to any tract of land until the owners thereof shall have complied therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask leave to offer a motion which I send to the desk. If there is any debate upon it, I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the motion.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the pending bill shall cease at 4 o'clock to-day, and that thereafter debate shall be limited to five minutes for each Senator on each separate amendment, no Senator being permitted to speak on any one amendment more than once.

Mr. GRONNA. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. THOMAS. I withdraw the request.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 22, to insert:

That the patents heretofore issued in the name of Kami Sam, July 22, 1902, for the south half of the northeast quarter, and lots 1 and 2, section 6, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Peter Benoy, February 25, 1905, for the southwest quarter section 3, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Anastus Yaksum, widow of Yaksum, February 5, 1908, for the west half of the northwest quarter and the west half of the southwest quarter, section 9, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Ellen Winnier, widow of Tom Winnier, August 1, 1904, for the northwest quarter of section 16, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Mary Batvia, October 1, 1903, for the west half of the southeast quarter and the south half of the northeast quarter, section 5, township 23 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of John Harmelt, April 14, 1909, for the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, section 27, township 24 north, range 19 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Madeline, April 9, 1901, for the east half of the southwest quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter, section 14, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Dan Nason, August 1, 1904, for the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, and lot 10, section 22, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of William Nason, August 1, 1904, for the northwest quarter, section 26, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Tenas George, December 17, 1901, for lots 7 and 8, section 7, and lots 2, 3, 4, and 7, section 18, township 24 north, range 21 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Mary Ann, August 1, 1904, for the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and lots 2 and 4, section 26, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian; and a similar patent in the name of Mary Nason, August 1, 1904, for the south half of the northeast quarter and the north half of the southeast quarter, section 22, township 24 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian, all situated in the State of Washington, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and confirmed as fee simple patents without restrictions against alienation as of their dates of issuance.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that amendment can be rejected, because it has already passed as a separate measure and has gone to the President, and probably has been signed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 5, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to patent to the Washington State Historical Society, for memorial and park purposes, the following described lands in the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to wit: A tract of land not exceeding 4 acres in area located in the northwest corner of lot 2 of section 17, the precise description of said tract to be determined by said Washington Historical Society and the Secretary of the Interior prior to the issuance of the patent therefor, and lot 7, containing 20.90 acres of section 21, all in township 30 north, range 25 east of the Willamette meridian, in Washington: Provided, That the lands hereby granted shall be paid for by the said society at their appraised value, to be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and the proceeds thereof placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging on the reservation of which the lands herein described are a part and thereafter paid to the said Indians or used for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests: Provided further, That the lands hereby granted shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 5, to insert:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to school district No. 56, Klickitat County, Wash., the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 11, township 6 north, range 14 east of the Willamette meridian, containing 2½ acres, now used as a public-school site by said district, and being a part of the Yakima Indian Reservation, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patent to said district for said lands, the same to be used for school purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make an allotment of not more than 8 acres of land within the diminished Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, to Se-cum-ka-nullax in lieu of a portion of the Moses agreement allotment No. 36 embraced within the homestead entry of Charles M. Hickerson.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 22, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the homestead proof submitted by Charles M. Hickerson for that part of his homestead embraced within allotment No. 36 to Se-cum-ka-nullax of Chief Moses's Band of Indians if the same is shown to be in compliance with the homestead laws, and the title of said Indian to that part of said allotment embraced within said entry is hereby extinguished.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wisconsin," on page 93, after line 10, to strike out:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., including pay of superintendent, $43,450; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $48,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 14, to insert:

For support and education of 275 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., including pay of superintendent, $57,925, of which sum not exceeding $10,000 may be used for general repairs and improvements to buildings.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 94, to insert:

For the support and civilization of that portion of the Wisconsin Band of Pottawatomie Indians residing in the States of Wisconsin and Michigan, and to aid said Indians in establishing homes on the lands purchased for them under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1913, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, said sum to be reimbursed to the United States out of the appropriation when made of the principal due as the proportionate share of said Indians in annuities and moneys of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared, as set forth in House Document No. 830, Sixtieth Congress, first session; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the said sum of $100,000 in the purchase of houses, building material, seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary to enable said Indians to become self-supporting.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what is the money of the Pottawatomie Tribe in which they have not shared? What does that refer to—House Document No. 830?

Mr. ASHURST. An analysis of the matter, or a justification for the item to which the Senator from Oklahoma refers, is found on page 313 of the House hearings, where the following statement appears:

The number of Pottawatomie Indians in Wisconsin approximates about 590, being scattered in various groups and bands through the northern part of the State. These are now under the general jurisdiction of one superintendency located at Carter. Before this superintendency was created there was great suffering among these Indians, owing to the fact that no one was charged with the responsibility of attending to them. The system is to issue rations in cases of absolute necessity, and whenever possible to obtain employment for all able-bodied Indians. There is some difficulty about this, as Indian labor is not popular, but the superintendent has established business relations with various lumbermen throughout the State and has succeeded in obtaining employment for his charges to such an extent that the amount necessarily expended for rations has been materially reduced.

I do not believe, however, that that furnishes the information for which the distinguished Senator has asked. That is an amendment introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The Senate hearings show such discussion of it as was had on pages 246 and 247.

Mr. OWEN. I see an explanation of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the House text on page 91, line 19, there is a typographical error. The word "thereof" should be the words "three of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 8, after the word "Reservation," to strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the repair and construction of sidewalks in the village of Odanah, within the Bad River Reservation, $1,000, said sum to be reimbursed to the United States from any moneys which are now or which may hereafter be placed to the credit of the Bad River Band of Wisconsin Chippewa Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, after line 12, to insert:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $90,000 for the payment of the members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians who were enrolled under the act of Congress of March 3, 1893, equal amounts to the amounts paid to the other members of said tribe prior to the enrollment under said act, and such payments be made upon the certificate and order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon claims being filed with him, showing to his satisfaction that such claimants, or the ancestors of such claimants, were enrolled under the act of March 3, 1893, entitled "An act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians of the State of Wisconsin."

Mr. OWEN. I ask that that amendment may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 96, to insert:

That without bias or prejudice to the rights or interest of any party to the litigation hereinafter mentioned, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell the timber on the so-called "school lands" and "swamp lands," within the boundaries of the Bad River and Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservations in Wisconsin, and to which the State of Wisconsin has asserted a claim; to keep a separate account of the proceeds of such sale, with each legal subdivision of such land, and to deposit the said proceeds at interest in a national bank, bonded for the safe-keeping of individual Indian moneys, to be paid over, together with the interest thereon, to the party who shall finally be adjudged to be the owner of such land: Provided, That the consent of the State or parties claiming title therefrom be obtained before any such sale shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wyoming," on page 97, after line 15, to insert:

For repairs at the old abandoned military post of Fort Washakie, on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $881.66 from the amount heretofore collected as rentals of buildings at said post.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 97, after line 19, to insert:

For extension, enlargement, and construction of the Le Clair and Riverton ditches for the irrigation of Indian allotments and land in private ownership on the north side of the Big Wind River, Wind River Reservation, Wyo., reimbursable as provided by section 1 of the act of August 1, 1914, $45,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 2, to strike out:

SEC. 24. Section 26 of the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 103), is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 27. Section 26 of the Indian appropriation act approved June 30, 1913 (38 Stat. L., p. 103), is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

On or before the 1st day of July, 1916, the Secretary of the Interior shall devise a system of bookkeeping to be installed in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which will afford a ready analysis of expenditures by appropriations and by units of the service, showing for each activity or class of work the expenditures for salaries and wages of employees, buildings and other permanent improvements, administration, equipment, maintenance, operation, and other purposes. Such additional changes and improvements in the system of bookkeeping shall be made as may be advisable in the judgment of the said Secretary.

On the first Monday in December, 1917, and annually thereafter, a detailed statement of expenditures as heretofore described, for the preceding fiscal year, shall be transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior.

The sum of $12,000 is hereby appropriated for expenses of installing the new system of bookkeeping required by this section, including the pay of expert accountants at a rate of not exceeding $15 per day, and their assistants, to be employed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the purchase of such books, stationery, and other supplies as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I understand that the committee amendments have now been disposed of.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no; Mr. President, they are not completed. We have passed over a great many of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments which have been passed over, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is on page 13, passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment on page 4. I think the committee will agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator from North Dakota whether that is one of the amendments passed over?

Mr. GRONNA. No; it is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then under the agreement the committee amendments will have to be disposed of first.

Mr. GRONNA. I am authorized to offer it as a committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But we have not yet disposed of the amendments which have been passed over, the first one of which is on page 13. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in lines 14 to 18, which has already been read.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, these amendments commencing with line 14, page 13, and going down to and including line 13, page 18, were passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. He is very rarely out of the Chamber, but this happens to be a moment when he is out. I have asked a page to go for him, because these amendments were passed over at his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be again passed over. The Secretary will read the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 39, at the end of line 15, passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. ASHURST. Let that be passed over further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be passed over further.

The SECRETARY. The same condition exists on page 73.

On page 95 the amendment after line 12 was passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, we have now reached a situation in the Senate where certain Senators who are interested in these amendments are obliged, by reason of other very important business, to be absent temporarily. I expect them to return within a couple of hours, and I think we might now——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then, Mr. President, at this particular point I should like to call attention to the provision on page 21, in the matter of the Colorado River, and the Gila River on the next page, page 23. My friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] raised a point of order on that matter when it was up, but on further consideration he thinks the item ought to be left in the bill. The Senator is here, and that was the only objection raised to it. He is willing to withdraw the point of order, and I should like to have it adopted.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say that for fear I may be doing an injustice to the Senator—and he assures me that I am—I withdraw my point of order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair does not think that action can be taken in Committee of the Whole. The Senator can offer it in the Senate when that stage is reached.

Mr. ASHURST. I propose the amendment, Mr. President. I will send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does the Senator from Arizona wish to insert the amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. On page 22, after "$160,000," on line 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after "$160,000," on line 20, it is proposed to insert:

For beginning the construction of a dam and necessary controlling works for diverting water from the Gila River at a site above Florence, Ariz., for the irrigation of Indian land and allotments on the Gila River Indian Reservation and private lands in Pinal County, Ariz., as estimated by the Board of Engineer Officers of the United States Army in paragraph 138 of its report to the Secretary of War, of February 14, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 791), $75,000, to remain available until expended, reimbursable as Congress may hereafter provide, the total cost not to exceed $175,000: Provided, That before beginning construction the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe such rules and regulations and take such other action as in his opinion may be proper and necessary for the purpose of securing for the Indians of the Gila River Reservation the benefits from such work to which they are legally and equitably entitled, and to enable the United States to control the diversion and distribution of water by said works and canals receiving water diverted thereby; and he may require of the owners of other lands to be benefited thereby agreements for the payment of the charges which he is hereby authorized to fix for diversion of water by said dam.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, I ask that we recur to the amendments that were passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], commencing on line 14, page 13.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the first one that I asked to have passed over was on page 10, line 16, striking out the word "property" and inserting the word "allotment," to conform to the law as it reads to-day.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 16, after the word "restricted," it is proposed to strike out the word "property" and insert the word "allotment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked that the amendments on page 13, beginning at line 14 and going down to and including the word "Oklahoma" on page 18, line 3, should be passed over. I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that there is not any question but that this is general legislation. I think it is an unwise character of legislation, but I am informed by the Senator that it is the desire of the Indian Department that this provision shall be placed in the bill. It is limited in its effect, and it does not become a general law over all the Indians. Therefore I have concluded not to make a point of order against the items, and allow the Senate to judge for itself about them. All I shall ask is a vote upon the amendments. If the Senate wants to put this kind of legislation on an appropriation bill, I shall content myself by allowing that vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. At the request of the Senator from Utah the provision on page 18, lines 11 to 13, was passed over. I ask that that may be agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is, on page 18, in lines 11, 12, and 13, at the request of the senior Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I never requested that that go over, Mr. President. I asked that lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 18 go over, and then some one—I forget who it was—asked that lines 4, 5, 6, and 7 go over; but I never requested it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, then, the amendment on page 18, lines 11 to 13, inclusive, is agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Have the provisions of the House bill—to wit, lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10—been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not been disagreed to. They are in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 39.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 21, beginning with line 9 and going down to and including line 20 on that page, the amendment was passed over at somebody's request "for the examination and final location surveys," and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary advises the Chair that that amendment was agreed to. Three lines, 18, 19, and 20, were disagreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh. Then, as I understand, the amendment concludes with "$10,000."

The SECRETARY. The words stricken out in lines 18, 19, and 20 are:

to remain available until completion of said work and to be reimbursed to the United States as Congress may hereafter require.

Mr. SMOOT. And that has been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been rejected, and the remainder of the amendment has been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 39, line 16, after the numerals "$6,000," passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to repeat the statement I made a moment ago—that we have now reached a situation where there are some contested committee amendments. The Senators who wish to debate the amendments are obliged to be absent from the Chamber for at least an hour, perhaps an hour and a half. May we not, therefore, temporarily lay aside the consideration of the committee amendments and let the bill be open now for amendments proposed by individual Senators on their own behalf, with the understanding that at the appropriate time we will return to the bill and discuss the committee amendments that have been passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. On page 4, line 18, I wish to strike out the numerals "$125,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$135,000," and to add the following words:

$25,000 to be immediately available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$125,000" and insert:

$135,000, $25,000 to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 92, at the end of line 15, insert the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to lease for mining purposes unallotted land on the diminished Spokane and Colville Reservations in the State of Washington for periods not exceeding 25 years on such terms and conditions as he may determine to citizens of the United States applying therefor: Provided, That no charge shall be made for prospecting. Rentals shall be based on mining production, and proceeds of rentals shall be paid into the proper tribal fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am in favor of general legislation along this line allowing the mineral lands to be leased for the benefit of Indians, but I do not favor special legislation unless I know something about the conditions existing in the particular reserve. I am not opposing this particular amendment, I will say to the Senator from Washington, but I should like to know the object of it exactly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a matter which has been recommended by the Interior Department and the Indian Bureau. These two reservations have been opened for settlement, the agricultural lands have been allotted to the Indians, and the surplus opened to homestead. There are still reserved, however, a quantity of Indian land that was not allotted and that was not open to homestead, some of it forest land. There has been a great desire on the part of people living in the vicinity to prospect that land, it being supposed that minerals are there. Of course if there is mineral there, it ought to be developed for the interest of the State and for the interest of the Indians.

This amendment provides that there shall be rentals collected by the Secretary of the Interior to be paid into the tribal funds; that rentals shall be based upon mining production; and that there shall be no charge for prospecting.

Mr. FALL. Does the amendment provide for prospecting prior to location upon the reserve? Does it allow persons to go on the reserve for the purpose of prospecting?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does.

Mr. FALL. Would the Senator accept an amendment, inserting the words "and the Mescalero Apache Reservation, in New Mexico"?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If it does not in any way lead to such opposition as to defeat the amendment, I should be glad to accept it.

Mr. FALL. I do not see why it should cause more opposition than the original amendment. I should like very much to have that amendment to the amendment inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington insert "and the Mescalero Apache Reservation in New Mexico."

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to have the amendment read. My attention was diverted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to lease for mineral purposes unallotted land on the diminished Spokane and Colville Reservations in the State of Washington and the Mescalero Apache Reservation in New Mexico for periods not exceeding 25 years, on such terms and conditions as he may determine, to citizens of the United States applying therefor, provided no charge shall be made for prospecting. Rentals shall be based on mining production and proceeds of rentals shall be paid into the proper tribal fund.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, strike out the proviso beginning at line 21 and ending with line 8, page 83.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that proviso is attached to an appropriation of $10,000 for continuing the construction of the irrigation system in the Uinta Indian Reservation, and it reads as follows:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be used to hold, maintain, and operate said systems so as to secure to the Indians their paramount rights to so much of the waters of the streams in said reservation as may be needed by them for agricultural and domestic purposes, and to regulate the use, enlargement, and extension of said systems by any person, association, or corporation under the provisions of the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 325), only upon the acquisition of a right thereto as provided in the act of March 1, 1899 (30 Stat. L., p. 941).

It is a little difficult to understand exactly what is meant by the proviso. It can only result in confusion. I presume the object of the proviso is in some way to enlarge the Indian rights to the waters upon this reservation. It is in line with the attempts which were made in the Indian appropriation bill of last year to interfere with the laws of the various States, which constitute the controlling rule with reference to the appropriation of water.

This first appropriation for the construction of this irrigation system was made in 1906. It is very carefully worded and it ought not to be in any manner interfered with by a proviso of this character. It was fully considered at that time. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs appeared before the Committee on Indian Affairs and was heard at great length with reference to it. He insisted that some provision should be put in the law at that time which would recognize some right in these Indians superior to that which was given to them under the laws of the State of Utah, and after a full hearing and full consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs—the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] will very well remember the circumstances—several days were spent discussing it, and the committee put into the bill the provision which I am going to read, and it was adopted by the Senate after consideration.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand the chairman of the committee accepts the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not hear the chairman say so.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Utah was out at the time, but his colleague brought up the matter and called the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood in the absence of the junior Senator from Utah, when his colleague brought up this matter, the chairman of the committee was ready to accept the amendment, striking out the proviso.

Mr. ASHURST. So far as I am given any authority as chairman of the committee I have no objection to the amendment at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I will ask, without reading, to insert in the RECORD, so that the conferees may have the matter before them, the language contained on page 355 of the session laws of 1906, volume 34, under the head "Irrigation," and ending with the words "Uintah Reservation," on page 376.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IRRIGATION.

For constructing irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes in Utah, the limit of cost of which is hereby fixed at $600,000, $125,000 of which shall be immediately available, the cost of said entire work to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of the lands within the former Uintah Reservation: Provided, That such irrigation systems shall be constructed and completed and held and operated and water therefor appropriated under the laws of the State of Utah, and the title thereto until otherwise provided by law shall be in the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the Indians, and he may sue and be sued in matters relating thereto: And provided further, That the ditches and canals of such irrigation systems may be used, extended, or enlarged for the purpose of conveying water by any person, association, or corporation under and upon compliance with the provisions of the laws of the State of Utah: And provided further, That when said irrigation systems are in successful operation the cost of operating same shall be equitably apportioned upon the lands irrigated, and, when the Indians have become self-supporting, to the annual charge shall be added an amount sufficient to pay back into the Treasury the cost of the work done, in their behalf, within 30 years, suitable deduction being made for the amounts received from disposal of the lands within the former Uintah Reservation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask that my amendment may be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 31, after the word "accident," in line 20, I move to insert the words "and such other Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 36, line 23, after the word "benefited," following out a suggestion made by the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and then insert:

And provide for notice thereof being served upon any allottee affected thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. On page 38, between lines 14 and 15, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk. It covers a certain tract of land that has heretofore been used for a day school which has been discontinued, and it provides for conveyance to the independent school district No. 10, with a provision that such conveyance shall not operate to interfere with any existing rights of allotment in said land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 14, following the amendment heretofore agreed to, insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to Independent School District No. 10, of Mahnomen, Mahnomen County, Minn., for the purpose of a demonstration farm in connection with the agricultural department of the public schools of said place, that certain tract of land which has been heretofore reserved for an Indian day school, but which day school has been discontinued and abandoned, which tract of land is described as follows, to wit: West half of the southwest quarter of section 11, township 144, range 42 west of the fifth principal meridian, in Minnesota: Provided, That such conveyance shall not operate to interfere with any existing right of allotment of said lands, and after such conveyance shall be made, if the grantee shall for more than three years cease to use the said lands and premises for the purposes herein specified, the same shall revert to the United States for the use of the White Earth Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

NEW YORK HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration of an emergency piece of legislation which passed this body about 10 months since, but instead of its being acted upon in the House a precisely similar measure passed the House and it is now reported back to the Senate. It provides for the removal of Coenties Rock, a reef in New York Harbor, which is now a menace to navigation, and it authorizes the Secretary of War to make use of certain allotments under his control for the purpose of the excavation. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is very familiar with it and the entire Conference Committee has given its approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York for unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution?

Mr. GRONNA. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 366) authorizing the Secretary of War to use any allotment made under the provisions of an act approved October 2, 1914, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," for the improvement of East River and Hell Gate, N. Y., as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to use any of the allotment made under the provisions of the act approved October 2, 1914, entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," for the improvement of East River and Hell Gate, N. Y., together with any funds heretofore appropriated for the said improvement and now available, for the removal of Coenties Reef in accordance with the report submitted in House document No. 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session, for the improvement of East River and Hell Gate, N. Y., to the extent of removing said Coenties Reef: Provided, That the work hereby contemplated shall not be commenced until assurance satisfactory to the Secretary of War shall have been received that the city of New York, or other local interests, have made provision for the removal of said rock beyond the depth specified in said project to the depth of 40 feet: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as adopting the said project beyond the removal of said Coenties Reef to the extent and in the manner specified.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. LANE. I wish to submit an amendment, on page 77, after line 3. Here is a report from the department in regard to it. It is merely transferring funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 3, after the amount "$4,000," add the following proviso:

Provided, That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of certain lands belonging to the Indians of the Siletz Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon," approved May 13, 1910, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 3. That when such lands are surveyed and platted, they shall be appraised and sold, except land reserved for water-power sites as provided in section 2 of this act, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes covering the sale of town sites located on the public domain. That the proceeds derived from the sale of any lands hereunder, after reimbursing the United States for the expense incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall be paid, share and share alike, to the enrolled members of the tribe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have an explanation there as to why that change is desired?

Mr. LANE. In the original act which this repeals, the money was to be expended in building public schools, but the State has provided school facilities. There is no necessity for the use of money in that manner and they are asking now that it be distributed among the Indians in the proportion to which they are entitled to it.

There is a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior requesting that the law be amended in this manner. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 30, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I am in receipt, by your reference, with request for report thereon, of a copy of H. R. 15803, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the sale of certain lands belonging to the Indians on the Siletz Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon,' approved May 13, 1910" (36 Stat. L., 367).

The act of May 13, 1910, supra, authorized the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of lands reserved under the provisions of article 4 of the agreement with the Indians of the Siletz Reservation on October 31, 1892, and ratified by the act of Congress approved August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. L., 325), and also to sell for town lots or other purposes lands reserved for administrative, educational, and missionary purposes. It was further provided that water-power sites should be reserved from sale, and that 40 acres of what was then known as the Government farm should be laid out as a town site and divided into 5-acre tracts. Section 3 of this act provided that the proceeds derived from the sale of any lands sold as therein provided should first be devoted to reimbursing the United States for expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of the act, and those derived from the sale of lands reserved for administrative, educational, and missionary purposes, after making necessary deductions, should be used for the purpose of purchasing sites for day schools, erecting the necessary buildings, and equipping, supporting, and maintaining the same.

It is the policy of the Government to encourage the attendance of Indian children in public schools, and I am advised that the Indians on the Siletz Reservation have indicated a preference for them. There are already 14 public schools within the Siletz Reservation, and the public-school authorities of the State of Oregon are taking charge of the education of the Indian children on that reservation. Hence there is not at this time an apparent need for funds for purchasing sites for day schools, etc., for which purpose the act of May 13, 1910, limits the use of the proceeds derived from the sale of land. I believe, however, that any legislation which may be enacted should be sufficiently broad to enable this department to use the funds in question for school purposes, if later found necessary or desirable, or for the industrial advancement of the tribe. Much of the Indian land is good for agricultural purposes, and there is a considerable amount of grazing land in the hills. Dairying and fruit growing are the principal industries. These Indians, according to the latest statistical reports received in the Indian Office, own only 3 bulls, 138 cows and heifers, 120 hogs and pigs, 110 horses, 700 sheep, and 811 chickens. The superintendent in charge has heretofore suggested to the Indian Office the advisability of purchasing breeding stock and material for the improvement and advancement of the fruit industry. It is very probable some of the funds in question might be very profitably utilized for industrial improvements, and it is therefore suggested that the proposed bill be amended by striking out line 12, after the comma, following the word "act," and line 13 and inserting in lieu thereof "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, may be paid to or expended for the benefit of the Indians entitled thereto in such manner and for such purposes as he may prescribe."

I recommend that the bill be amended as suggested, and that it be given favorable consideration by your committee and the Congress.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the amendment general legislation?

Mr. LANE. I think perhaps it is, Senator. I do not think there is a doubt about it. It does not, however, call for any appropriation. It is merely to facilitate the work of the department by letting them use the funds in another manner.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator feels, however, that as the representative of his State he would like very much to have this done.

Mr. LANE. The Senator does feel like it. If the Senator from Montana wants to stop it, he can go right at it and he is welcome. He can take his choice about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will answer the parliamentary inquiry that it is general legislation.

Mr. LANE. It is for the benefit of Indians at the request of the department. The question is whether you shall spend the money for schoolhouses or turn it over to the Indians. The department says the Indians need it expended in another manner, as the State provides school facilities.

Mr. WALSH. I made the same kind of an appeal to the distinguished Senator last night in relation to legislation affecting my State that was urgently requested by the Interior Department.

Mr. LANE. That was protested against by the Indians on the reservation and this is put in at their request. If there are any Indians in Oregon who are not asking for this I have not heard of it.

Mr. WALSH. Of course I do not intend——

Mr. LANE. The Senator can do as he likes about it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Indian Bureau request this?

Mr. LANE. The Indian Bureau requests it. There is a letter here from the Assistant Secretary stating that this is a proper disposal of the money.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it satisfactory to the Indians there?

Mr. LANE. Yes; naturally, for they would be getting the money.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to make a suggestion. With due respect to the department, I do not care so much for what the department says as what the Senator from Oregon in this case or the Senator who represents the State says. If the Senator from Oregon who represents that State, and represents it well, is in favor of this legislation I am very glad to vote for it.

Mr. LANE. I thank the Senator from Arizona very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 14, insert:

There is hereby reappropriated the unexpended balance, amounting to $64,295.23, in the appropriations made in the acts approved June 30, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 77), making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, for continuing the construction of irrigation systems on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana, and made available for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1915, in and for such work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, that is an amendment to reappropriate the unexpended balance for the Fort Peck Reservation irrigation project. It lapsed through a misunderstanding between officials during the year ending July 1, 1914. The unexpended balance for the Flathead Reservation was inserted, and this stands on the same principle. If one is fair, the other is fair. We ought to make the projects consistent and not have any discrimination.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not think the Senator from Montana is justified in asking for a further increase in the appropriations.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator to speak louder so that we can hear him above the roar of conversation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not believe the Senator from Montana should ask for this appropriation. The matter was gone over very carefully in the committee, as he knows, and I believe he was treated very liberally.

It is true that there was a small unexpended balance from this appropriation last year, but I think it is also true the Senator from Montana—and I believe the hearings will show it—said he would be satisfied with the $187,000 added to the $500,000. We appropriated yesterday $687,000 for one of these reservation projects. We have appropriated for the State of Montana more than $1,000,000.

Mr. PAGE. More than $1,500,000.

Mr. GRONNA. I have not opposed those appropriations, but I shall be compelled to oppose the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I hardly think it is fair to the committee or to the Senate at this time to ask to increase this amount. As was stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] we made certain provisions in the committee, and very liberal provisions as we thought, with the understanding at that time, at least, that these other appropriations were not going to be urged. That matter having been determined, I do not think we should take it up now.

Mr. ASHURST. I must make a point of order on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 14, on page 53, insert:

There is hereby reappropriated the unexpended balance, amounting to $33,561.95, in the appropriations made in the acts approved June 30, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 77), making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and for other purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, for continuing the construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana and made available for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1915, in and for such work.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I respectfully make a point of order against that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to say merely a word. Some mention was made of my conduct being unfair. As I understand, that implies a breach of faith. I do not understand that there was anything unfair or any breach of faith in offering in the Senate an amendment that the committee had voted down. I feel now that I have discharged my duty to my constituents and my obligations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I admit the impeachment. I did not mean it quite in that sense. I did not deny the right of the Senator to move the amendment. I think he was acting in good faith as far as that was concerned, but it was not the understanding of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. I simply submitted it; I did not press it. I simply offered it in the Senate as well as in the committee, and I feel now that I have done my full duty.

Mr. ASHURST. Inasmuch as I made the point of order, it is due to the distinguished Senator from Montana to say that nothing done in the committee or here in any way would preclude the offering of this amendment or any other amendment he saw fit.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this is a rather unpleasant matter to me, but the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], referring to the Blackfeet provision, against the consideration of which he offered an objection last night, defeating its consideration, has repeatedly declared on the floor of the Senate that the Indians upon the Blackfeet Reservation had protested against the passage of that act, thereby putting the Senators from the State of Montana in the attitude of urging this legislation against the desire and against the protests of the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation. I take this opportunity to say that the legislation was introduced at the request of the Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation. Touching the matter to which the Senator referred, I have a letter from the secretary of the Blackfeet Council which gives the facts concerning the expression of opinion secured by the Senator from Oregon upon that matter. I ask that the letter be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator from Montana will withdraw the letter and not have it read.

Mr. WALSH. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. FALL. I do not think it ought to go into the RECORD, Mr. President. I do not think any such letter should be introduced. I know the Senator from Montana possibly feels a little bit of aggravation, but I do not think a letter should be introduced speaking of the manner of a Senator who was visiting a reserve as a member of a commission appointed by this body. I ask the Senator to withdraw the letter.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator from New Mexico, and to anyone else who is interested in the matter, that I have no quarrel at all with the Senator from Oregon upon this question; but the statement has been made here by the Senator from Oregon that this legislation is urged against the protest of these people. It is true that the Senator went there; that he secured a meeting of some of the Indians on the reservation; and that he secured an expression of opinion from them. The Senator from New Mexico will understand perfectly well, although many people will not, that it is a very easy thing to gather together a lot of Indians and get anything from them in the nature of an expression of opinion.

Mr. FALL. The Senator from New Mexico does understand that, Mr. President, and does think that Senators should be very careful rather to take the evidence offered before committees and the statements by the department than the private personal statements of certain parties on the outside of the committee room or who have no connection with the matter; but nevertheless, Mr. President, I again ask the Senator to withdraw this letter, and not to ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I think the expression just read is a reflection on one of the Senators which should not be allowed in this way; or, at least, I think it would be better that it should not go into the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. I read the letter over carefully, and I did not feel that it was any reflection whatever upon the Senator from Oregon. It undertook to state in detail to what extent he had informed himself concerning conditions on the Flathead Indian Reservation.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. However, if, in the opinion of the Senator from New Mexico, the letter is improper under the rules of the Senate, I do not even want to seem to be transgressing those rules; and I will content myself by saying that the secretary of the general council represents to me in the letter that the meeting was not regularly called, was not held in the usual place of the holding of meetings, and that general information about it was not disseminated over the reservation.

Mr. FALL. I think, of course, that is a perfectly proper statement.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter is withdrawn.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say one word about this matter before we go any further. A year ago when we were having the discussion on the Indian appropriation bill, when we had reached a point where a majority of the Senate were strongly against the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], he availed himself of the privilege of raising a point of order on a measure in which I was very deeply interested. He was then perfectly willing to kill a measure in which I was interested rather than let it go to the Senate on its merits. Fortunately the Chair overruled his point of order.

I want to say that his measure to-day is unquestionably open to a point of order. We are proposing now to pay Montana, in one case, $687,000, where we ought to pay but $500,000. I do not want to be an Indian and remember what was done to me last year by the senior Senator from Montana and raise a point of order on his pet measure.

But I want to say to Senators now, that there is no more faithful Senator on the Committee on Indian Affairs than the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], and I can not stand silent here and see him in any way maligned. I think that letter is positively insulting to him, and I am glad it has been withdrawn.

I want to say to the Senator from Montana that it would take but little more of this kind of procedure to have me feel perfectly justified in raising a point of order on his proposed appropriation of $687,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is discussing a matter that is quite irrelevant to the matter before us. I do not think the Senator would say what he has said if he had read the letter.

I have no disposition to find fault with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. I do not think that he ought to have held up to the Senate here that the Senators from Montana are unable to take care of the affairs of their State or that they are inimical to the interests of those Indians, who are in a way intrusted to their charge. I thought the least I could do to correct the impression that must be left on the Senate by the statement of the Senator from Oregon would be to put in evidence the official communication that I had from the secretary of the Indian council concerning the matter.

So far as maligning is concerned, I should certainly not endeavor to malign anybody.

Mr. PAGE. But, Mr. President, we have got through with this matter; it is now closed. I have yielded any objection I had to the Montana appropriation. I declined to make the point of order against it, although I regarded it as excessive. I do not think we ought now, after this matter has been closed, to bring in any aftermath and introduce a letter that reflects upon any Senator on our Indian Committee, especially one who has been so faithful as I know the Senator from Oregon has been in the consideration of this Indian bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, what became of the letter? Was it withdrawn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. LANE. Then I demand that the letter be read. The Senator from Montana has put it in, and he put it in in good faith and for just such effect as he thought it would have. I know the Senator when I see him, and the letter must be read. If it is not to be read at the desk, then pass it to me, and I will read it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. LANE. I prefer that the letter be read. It is a matter of personal privilege I am rising to.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LANE. There has been a letter put in, which started out with a reflection on me, and I think it was intended for that purpose, and I want the letter read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a question for the Senate to determine. Those in favor of the reading of the letter will say "aye," those opposed "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read the letter.

Mr. LANE. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment for an observation which the Chair has felt constrained to make a number of times in the last five or six weeks. There is a rule of the Senate providing that—

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

If that rule has not been violated a dozen times in the last six weeks, the Chair is unable to understand the English language. The Chair does not know how this present controversy arose in the Senate of the United States; but that letter imputes conduct unbecoming a Senator of the United States; and it seems to the Chair it leads to a discussion of matters that can not very well be settled inside of the Senate Chamber.

Mr. LANE. I beg pardon——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to say, if the Senator from Oregon will pardon me, that it is some time since I read that letter, and if I had read it over I would not have offered it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought not. The Senator will pardon the Chair, but ought not that letter to be withdrawn?

Mr. WALSH. I did withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was withdrawn?

Mr. WALSH. I withdrew it; but afterwards a motion was made that it be read.

Mr. LANE. I did not so understand.

Now, Mr. President, I think it a matter of privilege and right that I should be allowed to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Montana withdrew the letter and the Senator from Oregon had it read for his own information——

Mr. LANE. I wish to state that I think the Senator from Montana offered that letter in good faith and knowing well what he did when he offered it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. LANE. Now, if he withdraws it——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is an imputation again. This controversy must stop, and stop right here. The letter is out of the RECORD. The Chair will not hear anything more about it unless the Senator insists on it.

Mr. LANE. It would entertain the Chair if I did.

Mr. President, I do not want to create discord in this body or impute an unkindly motive to any man or to any Senator or even to the author of that letter; yet, in justice to myself, I should be allowed to make a statement of what the facts are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The letter is out of the RECORD.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 39——

Mr. ASHURST. Is that the Choctaw item?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It relates to grazing lands in the Crow Reservation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I have said several times, we are now in a position where we can proceed no further at this particular time, on account of the absence of Senators who wish to be here when the passed-over items are considered. I therefore ask unanimous consent, if no other Senator has an amendment to propose——

Mr. LANE. I have.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the item on page 11. Beginning in line 14, on page 10, the bill reads:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted property, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior—

And so forth.

Then, on line 7, page 11, there is a provision for a charge of $15, which is allowed to be made against the estate of the heir or heirs for the expenses incurred in making the investigation.

I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that in some cases these moneys are now already collected out of the tribal funds, and I inquire why should there not be an exception made in cases where they are so paid?

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. LANE. Then, I move to insert at the end of line 11, the words:

Provided further, That this shall not apply to property where tribal funds are being used to defray such expenses.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, at the end of line 11, after the words "as herein provided," it is proposed to insert "Provided further, That this shall not apply to property where tribal funds are being used to defray such expenses."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LANE. Now, Mr. President, on page 14, section 2, of the bill there is a provision reading:

SEC. 2. That the pro rata share of any Indian who is mentally, physically, or otherwise incapable of managing his or her own affairs may be withdrawn from the Treasury in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and expended for the benefit of such Indian—

And so forth.

I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that, in my opinion, that provision is too broad. It should read: "That the pro rata share of any Indian who is mentally or physically incapable"; while the provision as it now stands reads "mentally, physically, or otherwise." That would include a bald-headed person.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator move to strike out the words "or otherwise"?

Mr. LANE. I move to strike out the words "or otherwise."

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment is to an amendment which has already been agreed to. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment on page 14 was agreed to will be reconsidered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 14, line 8, after the word "physically," it is proposed to strike out "or otherwise"; and in the same line, after the word "mentally," to insert the word "or," so as to read:

That the pro rata share of any Indian who is mentally or physically incapable of managing—

And so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, on the same page—page 14—in section 5, it is declared:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person to induce any Indian to execute any contract, deed, mortgage, lease, or other instrument touching land held under a trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienation—

And so forth.

I think that is too broad. I am of the opinion that would work a hardship on the Indians, and on the very best and on the most intelligent Indians who are declared competent, as well as those who are not. If we make the provision read "That it shall be unlawful for any person to induce any Indian to execute any deed or mortgage" to his land, I think he would be amply protected.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator move to strike out the word "lease"?

Mr. LANE. Yes; I move to strike out the word "lease," for the reason that that would tie the hand of the Indian so that he could not part with his year's crop; the Indian could not make a lease; and it would be unlawful for any white citizen to go upon any reserve in any part of the United States and try to lease the land of an Indian for the most legitimate purposes. I think the provision as it now stands is too broad.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the amendment now offered is related to the amendment which was reserved, and which the Senator from Arizona tells us is not ready for consideration, appearing at page 50.

The amendment on page 39 relates to the execution of leases by the Crow Tribe——

Mr. LANE. On what page?

Mr. WALSH. On page 39—and likewise leases by individual Indians of the Crow Tribe. The Senator from Wisconsin, as I understand, desires to be heard on that, and perhaps another Senator who is not here.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it go over.

Mr. LANE. I will let it go over, then, to be considered in connection with that matter.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 21546, the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment, I am going to ask now, if no other Senator has an amendment, that the Indian appropriation bill shall be laid aside until 5 o'clock, at which time we will again resume its consideration.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, do I understand that it is laid aside for the purpose of considering, later on, certain amendments, or any amendments that may come up?

Mr. ASHURST. It is being laid aside because of the absence of several Senators who are unable to be here now, and who wish to be present when the amendments are discussed; but when we resume its consideration at 5 o'clock any amendment that is parliamentarily in order will be in order, as a matter of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before that motion is put I desire to say that I anticipated that when the Indian bill was laid aside the river and harbor bill would be taken up. That had been my understanding of what was going to happen. I think the river and harbor bill ought to be proceeded with. I do not want to stand in the way of the Senator's desires in reference to the deficiency bill, but it is very important that the river and harbor bill should be disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. First, is there a unanimous-consent agreement that the Indian appropriation bill shall be laid aside until 5 o'clock?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall not object to that unanimous-consent agreement, provided it is distinctly understood that this bill will be taken up again at 5 o'clock and will then be proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, of course, it must be taken up at 5 o'clock.

Mr. FALL. That being the case I have no objection.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Arizona that he may be able to take it up before 5 o'clock. Why not submit a request that it be taken up at the conclusion of the deficiency bill, and not later than 5 o'clock?

Mr. ASHURST. I am willing to make the request that the bill be taken up not later than 5 o'clock.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to that unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 21546.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope that will be opposed. I would rather see the other bill taken up first.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the usual course and the necessary and logical course in matters of this sort is that the supply bills which are necessary for carrying on the business of the Government shall be first disposed of. I do not think the Senator from Florida need be at all uneasy about the consideration and passage of his bill, but I think it ought to wait until this appropriation bill is disposed of. I think we can do it in the hour and a half that has been allotted for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that I presume there will be no difficulty in conference about the deficiency bill. The Senator knows that the House has passed an entirely different bill providing for river and harbor work than that which is now proposed by the Senate committee, and there may be considerable time consumed in conference over that bill. In view of that situation, does not the Senator think it would be better for us to take up now and dispose of the river and harbor bill? There is almost certain to be no trouble about the deficiency bill in conference.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know by what authority the Senator says that. Quite to the contrary, there is always trouble in the conferences on these appropriation bills. I think the time that is consumed in this discussion would enable me to get the bill through the Senate, if Senators will just let the matter go along according to the usual course of procedure. I hope the Senate will vote to proceed to the consideration of the deficiency bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator addresses me, I will say that I was simply making a suggestion to the Senator, not in a spirit of hostility at all, but I thought probably that he would see that some advantage would be gained by passing the river and harbor bill first.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not see any advantage in it. I believe it will be a saving of time and facilitate both matters if we proceed in the regular way to get rid of this appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I only have this to say: If the Senate desires to proceed to the consideration of that bill, which, I think, ought not to be proceeded with because of the difficulties we have to contend with in the river and harbor bill, and the very great trouble in adjusting the bill to suit the opposing interests of those concerned in opposition to many features of it, and the difficulty of having these agreed on eventually in the House, I know there will be delay. I wish very much we could proceed with the river and harbor bill. If the Senate takes up this bill, I want to give notice now that immediately following the disposition of this bill and the Indian bill I shall move to take up the river and harbor bill; or, if they are not disposed of very soon, I shall ask the Senate to lay them both aside and proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator that, even though we should decide to take up the river and harbor bill now, it would be impossible to dispose of it by 5 o'clock, when the unanimous-consent agreement would require us to resume the consideration of the Indian bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I doubt if it would.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand there would be more than that time, somewhere in the neighborhood of two hours' debate on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I venture to suggest, as a member of the committee, that I feel quite confident that the deficiency bill will not occupy a great deal of time. I know of no reason why it should.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 21546) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for committee amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered and disposed of.

The motion was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, after line 6, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service: To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 4, to insert:

Representation of interest of foreign Governments growing out of hostilities in Europe, etc.: the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $1,000,000 (Public resolution, No. 48, Sept. 11, 1914) to enable the United States to fulfill the obligations devolving upon it in connection with or growing out of its representation of the interests of foreign Governments and their nationals, and to extend temporary assistance to other Governments and their nationals, made necessary by hostilities in Europe and elsewhere by transferring or advancing funds for diplomatic and consular expenses and for the care or benefit of citizens or subjects of foreign nations, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the same purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 5, after line 10, to insert:

Expenses of Tariff Board: To pay amounts due on account of expenses incurred by the Tariff Board, for which bills were not rendered until after the appropriation was exhausted, fiscal years 1911 and 1912, $84.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 5, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in making payment of losses accruing under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, to pay said losses out of premiums received for the insurance of American vessels, their freight and passage moneys and cargoes, against war risks (until exhausted) before having recourse to the amount of $5,000,000 appropriated for said purpose, and the amount of premiums heretofore and hereafter received are hereby appropriated for such purpose in addition to the amount specifically appropriated therefor by section 7 of said act.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee if he can tell me about how much premium money has been paid in?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is a letter here on the subject. I think it is about a million and a half dollars. There has been a good deal more collected than has been paid out. This simply provides that in paying losses they shall first use the receipts from premiums; otherwise, as the Senator knows, the principal fund would soon be exhausted. If they should always pay out from the $5,000,000 for losses and not replenish it at all, the fund would soon be exhausted. This amendment simply provides that the receipts shall first be used to pay the losses, and then the appropriation of $5,000,000, or such part of it as may be needed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the Senator to state that the premiums will equal the losses?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The premiums so far have exceeded the losses. There is a balance to the credit of the fund in the way of profit from the insurance business which has been done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. So that the losses thus far have been met, and more than met, by the premiums?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They would have been had they been authorized to use them, but the Treasury Department did not have a right to use those funds in that way. This gives them the right to use them in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 21, to insert:

QUARANTINE STATIONS.

Savannah, Ga., quarantine station: For dredging, repairs, and other improvements at the quarantine station near the city of Savannah, Ga., at a total cost not to exceed the sum hereby appropriated, $28,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 2, to insert:

Honolulu, Hawaii, quarantine station: For the removal of the wharf of the quarantine station at Honolulu, Hawaii, and its recrection, including all necessary new materials, at a new location within the new harbor lines established by the War Department, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 7, to insert:

The foregoing construction under quarantine stations shall be under the supervision and direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 7, after line 16, to insert:

Section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887 (34 Stat. L., p. 584, at p. 594), as amended June 29, 1906, February 25, 1909, and June 18, 1910, be further amended by inserting after the word "memoranda," as used in the sixth and twelfth lines, respectively, of the fifth paragraph of said section 20, the words "including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be," and by inserting after the word "Act," in the seventh line of said fifth paragraph, the words "and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto," and by inserting at the end of said fifth paragraph the words "Nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting any rule of evidence now in force in courts of the United States," so that the said fifth paragraph of the said section 20 of the said act as amended shall read as follows:

"The commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by carriers subject to the provisions of this act, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic as well as the receipts and expenditures of moneys. The commission shall at all times have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by carriers subject to this act, and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto, and it shall be unlawful for such carriers to keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the commission, and it may employ special agents or examiners, who shall have authority under the order of the commission to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers. This provision shall apply to receivers of carriers and operating trustees. Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting any rule of evidence now in force in courts of the United States."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I make a point of order against the whole of this amendment, beginning on line 17, page 7, and going down to and including line 10 on page 9, on the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is no doubt whatever about its being subject to the point of order. I believe it is meritorious legislation, and I had hoped no point would be made against it; but if the point is made, it undoubtedly is well taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is clearly general legislation.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 14, to insert:

A complete statement showing the employments under this and all other appropriations heretofore made for the Interstate Commerce Commission, as well as for valuation of carriers, shall be made to Congress at its next regular session, and under similar appropriations for subsequent fiscal years at each succeeding regular session thereof. Said statements shall show, under each division or title of organization, the names of all persons employed under the Interstate Commerce Commission, alphabetically arranged, the State from which each is appointed, rate of compensation paid to each, together with a full itemized statement showing how the moneys appropriated for the fiscal years 1914 and 1915 have been expended under said commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Federal Trade Commission," on page 10, after line 15, to insert:

The sum of $300,000 appropriated in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1916 is made immediately available for the employment of special agents, special examiners, and legal counsel, at such rates of compensation as may be determined by the Federal Trade Commission: Provided, That no salary authorized herein shall in any case exceed $7,500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 22, to insert:

For the rental of such building or quarters as may be necessary for the housing of the Federal Trade Commisson and its employees, in addition to what may be provided in the Department of Commerce Building under the provisions of the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1916, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 11, after line 19, to insert:

East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co.: That from and after January 1, 1915, the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co. shall pay annually to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia for its use of the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge across the Eastern Branch the sum of $460 per annum, and in addition thereto shall also at its own expense keep its rails and tracks on said bridge in good repair to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and all amounts due under the provisions of existing law by said railroad company up to and including December 31, 1914, on account of repairs to said bridge, be, and the same are hereby, remitted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any good reason why the amount of the tax should be remitted, and if he knows exactly the amount that is due from the company to the District?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it is about $6,500, and the commissioners report that it is not collectible. It seems that the company is in bad condition, and is not able to pay these arrearages. The District Commissioners recommend that they be remitted, and that $400 a year be accepted in settlement of all present and future demands.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any likelihood, then, that the $400 will be paid hereafter?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We hope it will be, and I suppose there is good ground for the expectation. The company is not a strong one, and it is a very heavy assessment, I think, on this feeble company.

Mr. SMOOT. I am willing that it should go into conference; but I think it is a very poor business proposition to remit $6,000 of taxes to a concern and then agree to collect $400 hereafter, and, in order to collect $400, remit $6,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that the matter will have careful consideration in conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a very short road, only three-quarters of a mile long, and it will go into receivership hands if something is not done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 6, to insert:

Grand Army of the Republic Encampment: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to make such special regulations for the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, which will take place in the District of Columbia from September 27 to October 2, 1915, as they shall deem advisable for the preservation of public order and the protection of life and property, to be in force one week prior to said encampment, during said encampment, and one week subsequent thereto. Such special regulations shall be published in one or more of the daily newspapers of the District of Columbia, and no penalty prescribed for the violation of such regulations shall be enforced until five days after such publication; and said commissioners are authorized and directed to establish a special schedule of fares, applicable to public conveyances in said District, during the period aforesaid. Any person violating any of the aforesaid regulations or the aforesaid schedule of fares shall, upon conviction thereof in the police court of the said District, be liable for such offense to a fine not to exceed $100, and in default of payment of such fine to imprisonment in the workhouse (or jail) of said District for not longer than 60 days. The provisions herein contained shall take effect immediately, and the sum of $11,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and from the revenues of the District of Columbia, in equal parts, is appropriated to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry out the provisions herein contained, $1,000 of which shall be available for the construction, maintenance, and operation of public-comfort stations and information booths, under the direction of said commissioners. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to permit the committee on illumination of the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic to stretch suitable conductors, with sufficient supports wherever necessary, for the purpose of effecting the said illumination within the District of Columbia: Provided, That the said conductors shall not be used for the conveying of electrical currents after October 2, 1915, and shall, with their supports, be fully and entirely removed from the streets and avenues of the said city of Washington on or before October 20, 1915: Provided further, That the stretching and removing of the said wires shall be under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall see that the provisions herein contained are enforced; that all needful precautions are taken for the protection of the public; and that the pavement of any street, avenue, or alley disturbed is replaced in as good condition as before entering upon the work herein authorized: Provided further, That no expense or damage on account of or due to the stretching, operation, or removing of the said temporary overhead conductors shall be incurred by the United States or the District of Columbia: And provided further, That if it shall be necessary to erect wires for illumination purposes over any park or reservation in the District of Columbia that the work of erection and removal of said wires shall be under the supervision of the officer in charge of said park or reservation. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized to loan to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of street decorations, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of decorating the streets of the city of Washington, D. C., on the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, 1915, such of the United States ensigns, flags (except battle flags), signal numbers, etc., belonging to the Government of the United States, as in their judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment. The loan of the said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., to said chairman shall not take place prior to the 15th day of September and shall be receipted by him by the 15th day of October, 1915. For the protection and return of said ensigns, flags, signal numbers, etc., the said chairman, or his successor in office, shall execute and deliver to the President of the United States, or to such officer as he may designate, a satisfactory bond in the penalty of $50,000, to secure just payment for any loss or damage to said ensigns, flags, and signal numbers not necessarily incident to the use specified. The Secretary of War is authorized to grant permits to the citizens' executive committee for the entertainment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the use of any reservation or other public spaces in the city of Washington on the occasion of the forty-ninth national encampment, in the months of September and October, 1915, which, in his opinion, will inflict no serious or permanent injuries upon such reservations or public spaces, or statuary therein; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may designate for such and other purposes on the occasion aforesaid such streets, avenues, and sidewalks in said city of Washington as they may deem proper and necessary: Provided, however, That all stands and platforms that may be erected on the public spaces aforesaid shall be under the supervision of the said citizens' executive committee and in accordance with plans and designs to be approved by the Architect of the Capitol, the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds, and the building inspector of the District of Columbia. The Secretary of War is authorized to loan to the chairman of the medical department of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, or his successor in said office, for the purpose of caring for the sick, injured, and infirm on the occasion of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in the months of September and October, 1915, such hospital tents and camp appliances and other necessaries, hospital furniture, and utensils of all descriptions, ambulances, horses, drivers, stretchers, and Red Cross flags and poles belonging to the Government of the United States as in his judgment may be spared and are not in use by the Government at the time of the encampment: Provided, That the said chairman, or his successor in said office, shall indemnify the War Department for any loss to such hospital tents and appliances as aforesaid not necessarily incident to such use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "War Department," on page 23, after line 6, to insert:

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The internal-revenue taxes imposed by the Philippine Legislature under the law enacted by that body on December 23, 1914, as amended by the law enacted by it on January 16, 1915, are hereby legalized and ratified, and the collection of all such taxes heretofore or hereafter is hereby legalized, ratified, and confirmed as fully to all intents and purposes as if the same had by prior act of Congress been specifically authorized and directed: And provided further, That the Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized an empowered when in its judgment conditions require it, to enact further legislation to repeal, modify, or continue the taxes provided for in the acts above mentioned.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the necessity of that legislation?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the European war has disturbed the financial situation in all the countries of the world, including the Philippine Islands. They find themselves unable to conduct the government on the revenues they now have, and they have amended the revenue laws in a way which gives them about two and a half million dollars more revenue. That revenue bill has been passed by the Philippine Legislature, and the Governor General of the Philippine Islands has sent an earnest request here that the ratification of Congress be given in order to make that legislative act effective.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I inquire because I am ignorant as to the situation. Does it require an act of Congress to ratify that legislation before it becomes operative?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It does. It is not operative except with the approval of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If that be true, then does the Senator think it is wise to provide as he does in the proviso?—

That the Philippine Legislature is hereby authorized and empowered, when in its judgment conditions require it, to enact further legislation to repeal, modify, or continue the taxes provided for in the acts above mentioned.

By that Congress evidently gives its consent in advance to the Philippine Legislature passing any legislation it pleases upon the subject.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say very frankly that that objection occurred to my mind when the clause was put in the bill, and I have no objection to a limitation being placed upon it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me until I get through with what I am saying, the object was to give at least one year after this. I would be perfectly willing to provide that it should not continue longer than two years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If we are to retain our control over legislation of this character, passed by the local legislature of the Philippines, then we ought not to surrender it, as we apparently do by that proviso.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will ask the Senator from Utah if it would satisfy him to add, at the end of the clause, these words:

Provided, That the authority for further legislation by the Philippine Legislature shall not extend longer than two years.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I prefer that the proviso should go out altogether; and I make the point of order against the proviso.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief explanation to the Senator, since I am a member of the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well; I will withhold the point of order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that the bill which has passed the House of Representatives providing for self-government in the Philippine Islands provides that both branches of the legislature shall be elected by the Filipino people. That legislation has been transmitted to this Chamber, and the Senate Committee on the Philippines has approved, as far as it could, that feature of the bill. The only dispute existing between the members of the Committee on the Philippines is in relation to the preamble. We are almost solidly in favor of this experiment in regard to self-government by the legislative bodies elected by the Filipino people; and because of the fact that it is likely that that bill can not be considered in this session of Congress, there has been a communication sent here to give that same power, upon which the House of Representatives has passed its judgment, and I believe the united members of the Philippine Committee have passed their judgment in favor of that kind of legislation. Inasmuch as we likely can not get the Philippine bill before the Senate, it seems to me we ought to give them this power.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me, I think I can adjust this matter in a second. I am perfectly willing to have all of the language, from the word "directed," in line 16, to the end of the section, stricken out. That simply ratifies what has been done and gives no authority for the future. I am perfectly content to have that done. I think there is much force in the objection made by the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is entirely acceptable to me. I think that should be done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order lies against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Of course; and it will all go out if the Senator from Colorado should insist on it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I was just trying to beg; that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will cut the Gordian knot by sustaining the point of order to the clause.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think the point of order is made. The Senator withdrew his point of order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I simply withhold it. I should have made it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the part of the amendment from the word "directed" on line 16 down to and including the word "mentioned" in line 20 be disagreed to, and that the balance of the amendment be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first portion of the amendment, going down to and including the word "directed" in line 16, page 23.

The first part of the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the remaining portion of the amendment, from the word "directed" on line 16 down to and including the word "mentioned" in line 20.

The second part of the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 20, to insert:

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Shiloh National Military Park: For rebuilding the hotel upon the Shiloh National Military Park, destroyed by fire on December 23, 1913, and for furnishing the same at a cost not to exceed $1,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to lease the hotel upon such terms as he may prescribe, the proceeds to be applied by the Secretary of War, through the proper disbursing officer, to the maintenance and care of the park, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 17, to insert:

LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

The sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, is hereby amended by adding the Lincoln Memorial in Potomac Park, D. C., to the list of buildings to be supplied with heat, light, and power from the central heating, lighting, and power plant authorized by that act to be constructed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," on page 28, after line 11, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of "An act for the relief of Samuel Butler & Co.," approved March 3, 1913, $11,709.69.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Buildings," on page 32, line 19, after the words "House Office Building," to insert "including labor and material," so as to make the clause read:

For painting interior and woodwork of rooms and corridors of the House Office Building, including labor and material, $25,983, to continue available during the fiscal year 1916.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 24, after the word "building," to insert "including labor and material," so as to make the clause read:

Court of Claims Building: For repairing electric wiring, heating apparatus, roof, and other parts of the Court of Claims building, including labor and material, to be expended under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, and to continue available during the fiscal year 1916, $5,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 2, to insert:

Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum: For obstetrical instruments and apparatus to complete the equipment of Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, Washington, D. C., and for deficiencies due to and in connection with the construction of the new Columbia Hospital, etc., provided for in the act approved June 23, 1913, including labor and material, special and professional services, $7,500, to be paid one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That hereafter all repairs or improvements made to said hospital buildings and grounds shall be made under the direction and supervision of the Superintendent United States Capitol Building and Grounds under estimates submitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Territory of Alaska," on page 34, after line 3, to insert:

Alaska Engineering Commission: In the execution of the work called for under the act of March 12, 1914, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," authority is hereby granted to purchase from the appropriations made therefor articles and supplies for sale to employees, the appropriation to be reimbursed by the proceeds of such sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 36, after line 15, to insert:

Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co.: The District Court of the United States for the District of Alaska, third division, is authorized to direct its clerk to refund to Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co., out of any moneys now in the hands of said clerk, or which may hereafter be collected and turned over to him on account of licenses, the amount paid by said company for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1914, under section 460 of the act of March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. L., 1253, 1336, 1337), as a license tax of $100 per mile on each mile of road operated in Alaska; the law requiring such payment having been repealed by the act of July 18, 1914, entitled "An act to levy and collect an income tax on railroads in Alaska, and for other purposes" (38 Stat. L., 517): Provided, That said railway company shall be required out of said sum to pay in full the income tax prescribed by said repealing act of July 18, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, after line 12, to insert:

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I offer the following amendment to insert on page 6, after line 21.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 6, after line 21, the following:

Washington, D. C., building Bureau of Engraving and Printing, new: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to pay the P. F. Gormley Co. for extra excavation work performed at the new Bureau of Engraving and Printing, $2,311.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have one other amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 22, insert:

For salary of the judge of United States District Court for the Southern District of Georgia from April 1 to June 30, 1916, $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I desire to offer as an amendment to the bill the war claims. I find that such action has been taken in a previous Congress, first on March 3, 1887, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, the French spoliation claims were offered as an amendment to the general deficiency bill:

On March 2, 1891, the general deficiency bill was reported to the Senate by Senator Hale, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, with certain committee amendments, one being to include the French spoliation claims;

On April 27, 1896, Senator WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, reported an amendment to the general deficiency bill for the payment of French spoliation claims; and

On May 25, 1896, the war claims were offered by Senator Harris, of Tennessee, as an amendment to the general deficiency bill.

I therefore offer the war claims known as the omnibus claims bill as an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, is that a printed bill which has been reported and is now on the calendar?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. It is.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it will take a long time to read that amendment. I think I might as well make the point of order on it now, which is that the amendment is obnoxious to clause 4 of Rule XVI, which provides that—

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I make the suggestion that that exact point of order was decided in 1896 by the Senate by a decisive vote, and the point of order was overruled.

Mr. SWANSON. Is there not a law——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair is going to sustain the point of order, and if there is an appeal from the decision let the Senate decide it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Did the Chair sustain the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes; the Chair sustained the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, between lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on the site heretofore authorized in the city of Forrest City, Ark., a public building such as he may determine to be necessary for post office and such other public offices as may be located there, in said city of Forrest City, Ark., at a cost not to exceed $50,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To come in immediately after the amendment just agreed to, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

Mr. SWANSON. On page 45, after line 24, I propose to insert the following:

For compiling the Navy Year Book for the calendar year 1915, under the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to make a few general comments upon the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nevada first allow us to offer our amendments to the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I prefer to make my comments now, Mr. President.

I wish to call attention particularly to that provision of the bill which relates to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to emphasize the fact that the efficiency of that commission is likely to be very seriously impaired as a result of a recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Louisville & Nashville case.

For many years the Interstate Commerce Commission has construed the section which relates to its inquisitorial powers in such a way as to include in the phrase "accounts, records, and memoranda" the correspondence of railroad corporations. That interpretation of the Interstate Commerce Commission has been acquiesced in almost uniformly by the railroads of the country, and but little protest has been made against the exercise of that power. Recently, in the Louisville & Nashville case, it was determined by the Supreme Court that these words did not include the correspondence of the corporations under investigation. Thus, one of the most important powers hitherto exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission is arrested in its operation, a power that is essential in inquiries into transactions relating to rebates and to discriminations, and even the rates themselves, for frequently the transactions, in whole or part, relating to rebates, discriminations, and rates are involved in the correspondence of the company.

The case as it went to the Supreme Court involved a constitutional question, and it was expected that the Supreme Court would pass upon the question as to whether communications between the railroad counsel and the corporation were privileged under the constitutional provision regarding search and seizure; but the whole decision went upon a different point, namely, that the interstate-commerce act passed by Congress did not authorize inquisitions as to correspondence of a corporation, and was entirely confined to accounts, records, and memoranda.

Mr. President, in this exigency, at the close of the session the Interstate Commerce Commission addressed the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate upon this subject, showing the urgency of legislation upon it and the importance of including among its inquisitorial powers the power to examine the correspondence of a corporation, leaving, of course, the great constitutional question as to unreasonable searches and seizures to be determined by the Supreme Court.

That bill received the favorable action of the Interstate Commerce Committee by a very large majority, and I was instructed to report it to the Senate. I have made four attempts to report that bill to the Senate, but I have been blocked in every instance by the opponents of the measure. Points of order have been raised against its report whilst appropriation bills were pending, although such reports are frequently allowed as a matter of courtesy and by unanimous consent to be presented to this body. There is a determination that this question shall not be decided after debate upon its merits in this body, but that all the dilatory powers of the Senate are to be exercised to prevent even its consideration.

I have here, Mr. President, two letters from the Interstate Commerce Commission and one letter from the Attorney General, setting out the importance of this legislation, and I ask that the letters be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, February 24, 1915.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NEWLANDS: I am directed by the commission to bring to your attention the effect of the decision announced yesterday by the Supreme Court of the United States in No. 499, The United States of America v. Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., in which, among other things, it is held that the words "accounts, records, and memoranda," as appearing in section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended, do not include correspondence.

As a matter of practical interpretation, those words have long been recognized as giving the commission access, through its examiners, to the correspondence files of carriers subject to the act, although the legal departments of some of the railroads have questioned that interpretation. It has now been tested by the Louisville & Nashville, with the result above mentioned, and it is altogether probable that carriers generally who have heretofore afforded access to correspondence files will hereafter decline to do so, even if the commission felt warranted in instructing its examiners to ask for such access.

The commission feels under obligation to invite attention to the impairment of its efficiency which will result if such access is no longer to be had. The decision is rendered in a case growing out of an investigation requested by the Senate, and access to correspondence in that investigation was sought in furtherance of what the Senate desired. The report of the commission recently adopted and shortly to be presented to the Senate sufficiently illustrates the gaps left unexplored where access can not be had to correspondence and other miscellaneous papers; and if the commission is to continue to fully meet the desires of the Congress in conducting such investigations, it must, under this ruling, be armed with additional legislative authority therefor.

A letter addressed by the third vice president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. to the secretary of that company, attached to a contract or "memorandum of understanding with respect to the solicitation and routing of freight traffic, etc.," referred to in our report to the Senate responsive to Senate resolution No. 153, and reprinted as Appendix E to that report, contains the following language:

"While arrangements of this general character would ordinarily be kept in correspondence files, these are, notwithstanding, of such importance that I would prefer they be placed where they can always be preserved and readily gotten at."

In other words, according to the practice or custom of the carrier in question, contracts of the general character referred to are ordinarily preserved in the correspondence files. An examination of this contract shows the far-reaching character of its various terms and the general public significance of the document. Without this contract the commission would have been unable to answer fully, if at all, one of the most important questions addressed to it by the Senate. Without amendment, the existing law, as settled by the Supreme Court, would afford the commission no access to similar documents if forming part of the correspondence file, as was usual with this carrier.

But it is not alone in such investigations that the access to correspondence is needed. The experience of the commission, through its division of inquiry, in investigating charges of unlawful practices and in bringing instances of violation of the act to the Department of Justice for prosecution, has demonstrated that, if the individuals responsible for such practices are to be discovered and brought to trial, resort must be had in many instances to the correspondence files. If guilt is personal, as we believe it to be, the guilty person must be found by following the trail which runs through the correspondence.

Success in the prosecution of many such cases in past years has turned upon information obtained from correspondence files. The Government recently secured the imposition of a fine of $10,000 against a railroad company for granting concessions on shipments of fuel coal. The reasons given for the illegal practice were found in the correspondence files of that company. A few years ago the Government secured the imposition of a fine of $124,000 against certain of the trunk-line carriers receiving ore at the Lake Erie ports on a charge of conspiracy to violate the act to regulate commerce through the device of leasing their wharves to certain large shippers of ore. This case turned solely upon information obtained from the correspondence files. During the same period fines amounting to more than $50,000 were imposed upon certain of the Central Freight Association lines and the so-called theatrical trust, based upon conspiracy indictments charging concession from passenger rates. The detection of the conspiracy would have been impossible but for the access had to files of correspondence. A number of indictments now pending against the anthracite carriers are the outcome of examination of such files.

The foregoing are merely illustrative. A large number, perhaps half, of the prosecutions brought at the request of the commission have turned upon information obtained from correspondence, which often furnishes the connecting link between seemingly disconnected facts, and serves to disclose the motive or the essence of what was done.

Aside from criminal prosecutions, the commission would find itself greatly hampered in its other activities if deprived of access to such files. It has been the practice of some carriers in issuing vouchers not based on published tariffs to make reference by notation to the authority found in the correspondence file. The general auditor of one of the great railway systems some years ago directed cessation of this practice, as such reference might, even under the construction successfully contended for by the Louisville & Nashville in the case just decided, render the correspondence files a part of the voucher and thus accessible to the examiner. The discontinuance of this practice of notation has not changed the underlying fact that the authority for many disbursements made by carriers, and properly subject to investigation, is only to be found in some letter.

The same is true in adjustments between carriers where divisions or allowances are made which do not appear in the regular division sheets.

Again, in our valuation work the commission will encounter serious obstacles in its endeavor to fulfill the mandate of paragraph 4 of the valuation act of March 1, 1913, which requires the commission to "ascertain and report, in such detail as may be determined by the commission, upon the expenditure of all moneys and the purposes for which the same are expended." If the commission, through its accountants, can not examine the correspondence of carriers, it can not adequately comply with this requirement.

In the case of applications by railroad carriers to continue interest in or operation of carriers by water under the so-called Panama Canal amendment to the act, the correspondence files have been found to afford the most reliable data as to existing or possible competition.

It is manifest that if carriers know that their correspondence files can not be examined, they will confine to correspondence all understandings, instructions, or records tending to show violations of the laws which the commission is charged to enforce.

And, finally, it may be suggested that if legislation on this subject be deferred until after the mandate of the Supreme Court shall have issued under its recent decision a great mass of correspondence and other papers, containing matters material to such inquiries or investigations as the commission is now conducting or may have to conduct in the future, may be destroyed by the carriers before this commission is placed on a parity in that respect with the Federal Trade Commission. The act creating that commission, after defining documentary evidence as meaning "all documents, papers, and correspondence in existence at and after the passage of this act," proceeds in section 9 to give that commission, or its agents, access at all reasonable times to any documentary evidence of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against, for the purpose of examination, with the right to copy.

It is submitted that the Interstate Commerce Commission should be clothed with no less power, and the emergency presented is our warrant for submitting to you herewith a proposed amendment to the act. A communication of the same tenor is being addressed to the chairman of the House committee. Further or more detailed exposition will be furnished if desired.

Very truly, yours,

JUDSON C. CLEMENTS,
Acting Chairman.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1915.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NEWLANDS: In a decision announced on the 23d instant the Supreme Court of the United States held that the description "accounts, records, and memoranda," in section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, does not include correspondence files, and that, therefore, the commission can not demand access to the correspondence files of railroads as a means of obtaining information necessary to the proper enforcement of the act.

I have been shown a copy of the letter addressed to you by the acting chairman of the commission urging that section 20 be amended forthwith so as exprssly to confer this power, which heretofore has been claimed by the commission and generally acquiesced in by the carriers.

The right of the commission to have access not only to the accounts, records, and memoranda of common carriers, but also to their other documents, especially their corresponding files, is of the greatest possible value in obtaining evidence for use by this department in enforcing the provisions of the act prohibiting rebates, discriminations, etc. Therefore I wish to unite with the commission in urging that section 20 be amended as indicated. For the reasons stated in the commission's letter it is of especial importance that the amendment be enacted at the present sesssion of Congress.

I have the honor to remain,
Sincerely, yours,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, February 27, 1915.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: You ask an expression from the commission whether it would meet its views if there were added to Senate bill 7738, amending section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, the following proviso from H. R. 16586, as reported by you to the Senate July 23, 1914:

"Provided, That all communications between attorney and client giving or seeking professional advice shall be deemed privileged."

It is the view of the five members of the commission who are available for conference this afternoon that the proposed proviso should not be added to the bill for the following reasons, among others:

1. The language proposed in the proviso might be construed to exclude access to all communications signed by or addressed to any one of the staff of attorneys employed by a railroad, as well as to prohibit the use of such communications as evidence in proceedings.

2. If the language should be so construed, it would be an easy matter for the carriers to adopt the practice of having correspondence in respect to all matters as to which they might desire to exclude the Government from access to and inspection of the same, conducted with and in the name of such attorneys. Resort might be had also for the same purposes to outside attorneys selected for this purpose. It is not an uncommon practice now for railroad companies to have in their employment attorneys who are designated as staff officials, such as vice presidents, etc.

3. It will be obviously easy for contracts, understandings, instructions, arrangements, and even vouchers in payment of money to be transmitted as inclosures with letters to and from such attorneys, so that the same will be inclosed with the communications filed in the attorneys' correspondence files, and therefore made inaccessible under this proviso. Matters not covered by correspondence could be so filed and thus made inaccessible.

4. Since the carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce are engaged in a public service in which the interests and rights of the public are vitally involved it is not believed by us to be an unreasonable requirement that the Government should be able to keep itself thoroughly informed in respect to what they have done and what they do, to the end that it may be practicable to enforce the provisions of the act to regulate commerce against unjust discriminations and other violations of the act. This appears to have been well understood when the act to regulate commerce was enacted, as indicated by the requirements of section 12, to the effect that it is made the duty of the commission to keep itself informed as to the manner and method in which the business of the carriers is conducted, and this provision is in connection with the positive requirement of the statute that the commission shall enforce the provisions of the act. There is no more important respect in which these provisions should be enforced for the promotion of the ends of justice than as to unjust discriminations whether in the form of rebates or in the guise of many other devices which have been resorted to and which have not, as is shown by the records of the commission and the courts, been uprooted or eliminated. The reasons for the protection of confidential communications between attorney and client and against unreasonable search as to papers etc., do not, as we view it, apply with respect to this public service performed by common carriers the same as it does to individuals and others acting in private capacity, in respect to which the public has no interest except to see justice done as between individuals in regard to their private rights.

Yours, very truly,

JUDSON C. CLEMENTS,
Acting Chairman.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, Mr. President, I appeal to the good sense, to the good judgment, and to the patriotism of this body to devise some method, either by unanimous consent or otherwise, for the enactment of this needed legislation, legislation which simply perpetuates the exercise of a power that, with the acquiescence of the railroads and under the uniform custom of the Interstate Commerce Commission, has been exercised for many years, and without which the other powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission would be seriously impaired.

Is there any Senator here who is willing to put himself upon record as refusing consideration to a bill which may prevent the destruction of correspondence absolutely essential to prove some of the fraudulent practices that are alleged to have been engaged in by railroad manipulators, such as are alleged to have occurred with reference to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway system, the Rock Island system, and the Frisco system? Are Senators in this body to be partners in a conspiracy to destroy evidence? And yet we are told that these serious consequences may be the result of our nonaction now.

The urgency of this matter was so great that I was authorized by the Interstate Commerce Committee to present not only this bill but to urge the insertion of the bill as an amendment to the general deficiency bill. The Committee on Appropriations placed the bill as an amendment on the general deficiency bill, but, in my absence this afternoon, not knowing that the general deficiency bill was coming up, a point of order, I am told, was made against the amendment, and it was ruled out of order. I propose now to offer that amendment again, with variations which will make it properly a subject of consideration. Now, I offer the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am going to appeal to the Senator not to press the matter. I can assure him—in fact, I am sure he understands—that the amendment can not be made in order; there is no way to make in order a provision of that kind. I am in favor of it, but the Senator from Nevada must realize that it can not be added to this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It can go on this bill if there is no point of order made against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. But there are a number of Senators who have given notice that they would make the point of order, and they are on the floor ready to make the point.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to present the amendment; and if they desire to make a point of order and to aid in the disastrous consequences that may follow the failure to pass this legislation, let them go upon record. I offer the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has yielded. He has offered an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 16, it is proposed to insert the following:

That section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887 (34 Stat. L., 584, 594), as amended June 29, 1906, February 25, 1909, and June 18, 1910, be further amended by inserting after the word "memoranda," as used in the sixth and twelfth lines, respectively, of the fifth paragraph of said section 20, the words "including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be," and by inserting after the word "act" in the seventh line of said fifth paragraph the words "and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto," and by inserting at the end of said fifth paragraph the words, "Nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting any rule of evidence now in force in courts of the United States," so that the said fifth paragraph of the said section 20 of the said act as amended shall read as follows:

"The commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by carriers subject to the provisions of this act, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic as well as the receipts and expenditures of moneys. The commission shall at all times have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by carriers subject to this act, and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto, and it shall be unlawful for such carriers to keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the commission, and it may employ special agents or examiners, who shall have authority under the order of the commission to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers. This provision shall apply to receivers of carriers and operating trustees.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada when was this action of the committee taken? Was it on yesterday or the day before?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was taken last Saturday, I think. I was authorized to report the bill, and I have attempted to do so on several occasions since, but a point of order has been made against it.

Mr. NORRIS. I regret very much that a point of order has been or will be made against it; but I want to suggest to the Senator that, under the rules of the Senate, as I understand them, he might have given notice yesterday or Saturday of his motion, and the rules could have been suspended and the amendment made in order. If the Indian appropriation bill is not finished to-day, the Senator could give notice to-day and the rules could be suspended and the amendment made in order on the Indian appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has made the suggestion, but I hope that no objection will be made to the consideration of this amendment now, and that we can put it upon the general deficiency bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I am constrained to make the point of order against the amendment; and in regard to this proposed legislation, I wish to say that, as a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I notified the chairman that I was opposed to the proposed legislation at this time, and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations—and the chairman of the committee will bear me out in this, I think—I stated in committee that I would make a point of order against the amendment as a part of the appropriation bill. My position upon this legislation has been perfectly open and plain.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will excuse me, we have very few minutes, and I should be glad if he would allow us to proceed with the bill; but I will say that the Senator and others did give notice that the point of order would be made against the amendment, and everybody knows it is out of order.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will take but a few moments. I wish to state that remedial legislation of this kind may be perfectly proper when Congress has had ample time to consider it; but I do not think it is proper to come here at this late hour of the session, when consideration can not possibly be given to it, and try to remedy a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon which the ink is hardly dry. Therefore, Mr. President, I make the same point of order against the amendment that was previously made against the amendment as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will state——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have sent to the desk an amendment which I offer. I desire it to follow the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, under the heading of "Public buildings," and after the amendment already agreed to after line 21, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to cause to be erected and constructed, upon the lot now owned by the United States in the city of Forsyth, Ga., a public building such as he may determine is necessary and proper for the post office and such other public officials as may be located there, in said city of Forsyth, Ga., at a cost not to exceed the sum of $50,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does that amendment embody a bill that has been before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Has it been reported to the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why has not the bill itself been taken up and considered?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. A member of the House Appropriations Committee overlooked it when the matter was in the House and requested me to offer it for him here. I think it is eminently proper.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are a great many bills of that character on the calendar. I do not know how many; scores of them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know whether or not it is subject to a point of order. If it is, I shall make it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will state that Judge BARTLETT, who retires from the House on March 4, and who consequently is now rendering his last service there, is a member of the Appropriation Committee. This building is in his district, and he omitted to put it on the bill. It was a matter that he had expected to present and he requested me to present it for him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make the point of order that it has not been estimated for.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has it been estimated for?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not prepared to make a positive statement on the subject, but I do not think it has. I have not seen an estimate for it. Perhaps the Senator from Georgia can answer the question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not an estimate for it. I understood it had been estimated for, however.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have not seen any estimate for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the statement of the Senator from Virginia, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia subsequently said: I understand that the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection to the amendment I offered a few moments ago, and I ask to call it again to the attention of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My attention has been called to some circumstances connected with the matter, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, and of which notice was given several days ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, on page 50, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to consider and adjudicate, under the act of Congress approved July 27, 1912 (Public, 244), entitled "An act extending the time for the repayment of certain war-revenue taxes erroneously collected," the claims of trust companies or other claimants for refund of taxes illegally collected on capital, surplus, or undivided profits, in accordance with the decisions of the circuit court of appeals in the case of Treat, collector, v. The Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. and the Central Trust Co. of New York (185 Fed. Rep., 760–765).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. At the bottom of page 45 I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the foot of page 45 it is proposed to insert:

To pay Joseph S. McCoy, on account of additional services to the Committee on Finance, $350.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6 it is proposed to add to the amendment already agreed to at that point the following:

The limit of cost of a public building heretofore authorized at Uvalde, Tex., be and hereby is increased from $50,000 to $60,000, and $10,000 is hereby appropriated to complete the building.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment to follow the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and refund the sums paid for documentary stamps used on foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries, and covering claims not filed prior to January 1, 1913, $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For additional fireproof construction and other betterments: Post-office building, Garden City, Kans., $6,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "$2,953,203.97" and insert:

$3,121,203.97, including $71,000 for the payment of indemnities recommended by the commissioners appointed pursuant to joint resolution of Congress approved August 9, 1912, directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory, etc., and $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for similar investigation to be made and payment of similar damages incurred since May 11, 1911.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the amount which was appropriated by the provision which is sought to be amended is for the deficiency incurred in guarding the border of the United States and Mexico, and also the exigency arising from the removal of the troops from Vera Cruz. I do not care to discuss this matter at any length. I simply want to state, with reference to the amendment I have proposed, that the last Congress authorized an investigation to be made by the Secretary of War as to damages resulting from the wounding and death of American citizens on this side of the line through the action of Mexicans upon the other side. That investigation was held. The amount, as found by the officers of the War Department under the direction of the Secretary of War, was $71,000. The Senate did its duty in attempting to provide for the payment of those claims so found to be due. So far we have not been successful in getting the appropriation made. The purpose of this amendment is, if there is a deficiency to be appropriated for, a matter of sending the Army of the United States to the Mexican border and using it there for the purpose of preventing American citizens from defending themselves, then there should at least be, where there is $3,000,000 appropriated, a small appropriation for the payment of damages to the families of the American citizens who have been killed and wounded while the American Army has been used in this way.

There have been more deaths and woundings and damages incurred recently, to the extent of 57 persons wounded or killed at Naco, Ariz. They are American citizens; and when this Government is making appropriations and accepting amendments to a bill of this kind for an addition to a post office in any State of this Union, and where it is making a deficiency appropriation of $3,000,000 for the use of the troops of the United States as they have been used, it can certainly appropriate $175,000 more for the payment of damages to its own citizens, killed by its own fault on this side of the line.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, we only have seven minutes left before this bill will be displaced. I hope we will have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Let us vote.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will. I am not endeavoring to detain the Senate one minute longer than I can help.

The statement made by the Senator from New Mexico is correct by the record, except that there was a misprint in the amount. It should be seventy-three thousand instead of seventy-one thousand, because the findings were different from the print, for that matter; but that can be brought before the conference and considered there, provided the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. FALL. That can be corrected; yes. I am ready to have a vote on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted on page 67, at the bottom of the page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 67 it is proposed to insert:

That there shall be established one additional division each of mental hygiene and rural sanitation in the United States Public Health Service, and said divisions shall be in charge of commissioned medical officers of the United States Public Health Service, detailed by the Surgeon General, which officers, while thus serving, shall be assistant surgeons general within the meaning of section 3 of the act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency and change the name of the United States Marine Hospital Service."

The duties of the division of mental hygiene shall be to study and investigate mental disorders and their causes, care, and prevention. The duty of the division of rural sanitation shall be to investigate improved methods of rural sanitation and the prevention and suppression of communicable diseases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I wish to offer an amendment which is subject to a point of order, but I hope no one will make it. It is a bill to pay Simon M. Preston $5,838.36. It is a claim bill, but this gentleman is now 94 years old. The bill has passed the Senate and has been favorably reported by the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As the Senator knows, it is out of order; but I will not make any point of order against it. I will keep it in if I can, but I do not expect to be able to keep in an item like this. I ask for a vote on it.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will leave his last remark out of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Simon M. Preston, of Seattle, Wash., the sum of $5,838.36, being the amount of the defalcation of D. C. Kearns, a deputy collector of internal revenue under the said Simon M. Preston, and repaid to the United States Government by the said Preston, and its collection by him from the said D. C. Kearns having been prevented by the pardon of the said Kearns by the President of the United States and the remission of the fine equivalent to said sum of $5,838.36.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have one other amendment, an estimate for which was sent down by the department, and which I will send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

Depots for coal, 1913—Bureau of Equipment: The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to reimburse from the unexpended balance of the appropriation for "Depots for coal," fiscal year 1913, each of the following persons in the sums set after their respective names, namely: Merl La Voy, $80; D. R. Reese, $75.95; William R. Reese, $144; David Harries, $48.35; C. E. Anderson, $70.23; William N. Dean, $78.50; Earl Kelso, $59.75; R. L. Belton, $56.60; Alphonso Guibert, $64.70; F. B. Sample, $132.45; Edward Evans, $96.30; William Matson, $92.50; James Saers, $98.30; Lee R. Wilson, $25.26; W. A. Selvig, $153.14; and R. V. Ageton, $42.40; in all, $1,318.43; the said sums being the appraised value of the personal belongings of each of the persons stated, which were lost while being lightered ashore at Katalla, Alaska, from the steamship by which transported from Seattle, Wash., the said persons then being under contract with the Navy Department to go into Alaska to assist in the work of investigating the availability and adaptability of Alaskan coal for the use of ships of the United States Navy or any vessels of the United States under the authority contained in the naval act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stats., p. 338; act Aug. 22, 1912, vol. 37, sec. 1, p. 388).

Mr. JONES. I wish to say, about this amendment, that the personal belongings of these men were on board a lighter that was blown across Katalla Bay, and it sank, and all their belongings were lost. The Navy Department has appraised this property, and the amount set out in this amendment is what the department found to be the value of the articles belonging to each of these men. They are poor men, and ought not to be required to await the slow processes of getting a claim through Congress. Furthermore, they were in the employ of the department at the time. The department has submitted the claims here as estimates, and Congress ought to make the appropriation without any delay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, extend the time within which final proof is required to be submitted upon any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to July 1, 1914, such extension not to exceed three years from the date of allowance thereof: Provided, That the entryman or his duly qualified assignee has, in good faith, complied with the requirements of law as to yearly expenditures and proof thereof, and shall show, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, that there is a reasonable prospect that, if the extension is granted, he will be able to make the final proof of reclamation, irrigation, and cultivation required by law: Provided further, That the foregoing shall apply only to cases wherein an extension or further extension of time may not properly be allowed under existing law.

That where it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, with reference to any lawful pending desert-land entry made prior to July 1, 1914, under which the entryman or his duly qualified assignee under an assignment made prior to the date of this act, has, in good faith, expended the sum of $3 per acre in the attempt to effect reclamation of the land, that there is no reasonable prospect that, if the extension allowed by this act or any existing law were granted, he would be able to secure water sufficient to effect reclamation of the irrigable land in his entry or any legal subdivision thereof, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, allow such entryman or assignee five years from notice within which to perfect the entry in the manner required of a homestead entryman.

That any desert-land entryman or his assignee entitled to the benefit of the last preceding paragraph may, if he shall so elect within 60 days from the notice therein provided, pay to the receiver of the local land office the sum of 50 cents per acre for each acre embraced in the entry, and thereafter perfect such entry upon proof that he has upon the tract permanent improvements conducive to the agricultural development thereof of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre, and that he has, in good faith, used the land for agricultural purposes for three years, and the payment to the receiver, at the time of final proof, of the sum of 75 cents per acre: Provided, That in such case final proof may be submitted at any time within five years from the date of the entryman's election to proceed as provided in this section, and in the event of failure to perfect the entry as herein provided, all moneys theretofore paid shall be forfeited and the entry canceled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to say that this is approved by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virgina, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9899) to authorize the laying out and opening of public roads on the Winnebago, Omaha, Ponca, and Santee Sioux Indian Reservations in Nebraska, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

R. 1698) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution to print 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Forty-ninth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print and bind in one volume the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statue of George Washington Glick.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20347) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 58, 70, 112, 114, 115, and 116.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of not more than three Army officers, whose duty it shall be to report upon the advisability of the acquirement by the United States Government of land near the Bay of San Diego, San Diego County, Cal., and elsewhere on the Pacific, Gulf, and Atlantic coasts, for an aviation school and training grounds of the Signal Corps of the United States Army, and said commission shall ascertain and report what would be the probable cost of acquiring such land; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray any expenses incurred by the said commission in the performance of the duties herein imposed upon it."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That chapter 6, Title XIV, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'1. The United States Military Prison, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., shall hereafter be known as the United States Disciplinary Barracks.

"'2. Persons sentenced to confinement upon conviction by courts-martial or other military tribunals of crimes or offenses which, under some statute of the United States or under some law of the State, Territory, District, or other jurisdiction in which the crime or offense may be committed, are punishable by confinement in a penitentiary, including persons sentenced to confinement upon conviction by courts-martial or other military tribunals of two or more acts or omissions, any one of which, under the statute or other law hereinbefore mentioned, constitutes or includes a crime or offense punishable by confinement in a penitentiary, may be confined at hard labor, during the entire period of confinement so adjudged, in any United States, State, Territorial, or District penitentiary, or in any other penitentiary directly or indirectly under the jurisdiction of the United States; and all persons sentenced to confinement upon conviction by courts-martial or other military tribunals who are not confined in a penitentiary may be confined and detained in the United States Disciplinary Barracks.

"'3. The government and control of the United States Disciplinary Barracks and of all offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein shall be vested in The Adjutant General of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall from time to time make such regulations respecting the same as may be deemed necessary, and who shall submit annually to Congress a full statement of the financial and other affairs of said institution for the preceding fiscal year.

"'4. The officers of the United States Disciplinary Barracks shall consist of a commandant and such subordinate officers as may be necessary, who shall be detailed by the Secretary of War from the commissioned officers of the Army at large. In addition to detailing for duty at said disciplinary barracks such number of enlisted men of the staff corps and departments as he may deem necessary, the Secretary of War shall assign a sufficient number of enlisted men of the line of the Army for duty as guards at said disciplinary barracks and as noncommissioned officers of the disciplinary organizations hereinafter authorized. Said guards, and also the enlisted men assigned for duty as noncommissioned officers of disciplinary organizations, shall be detached from the line of the Army, or enlisted for the purpose; and said guards shall be organized as Infantry, with noncommissioned officers, musicians, artificers, and cooks of the number and grades allowed by law for Infantry organizations of like strength: Provided, That at least one of said guards shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a battalion sergeant major.

"'5. The commandant of the United States Disciplinary Barracks shall have command thereof and charge and custody of all offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein; shall govern such offenders and cause them to be employed at such labor and in such trades and to perform such duties as may be deemed best for their health and reformation and with a view to their honorable restoration to duty or their reenlistment as hereinafter authorized; shall cause note to be taken and a record to be made of the conduct of such offenders; and may shorten the daily time of hard labor of those who by their obedience, honesty, industry, and general good conduct earn such favors—all under such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe.

"'6. The Secretary of War shall provide for placing under military training those offenders sent to the United States Disciplinary Barracks for confinement and detention therein whose record and conduct are such as to warrant the belief that upon the completion of a course of military training they may be worthy of an honorable restoration to duty or of being permitted to reenlist; may provide for the organization of offenders so placed under military training into disciplinary companies and higher units, organized as Infantry, with noncommissioned officers, except color sergeants, selected or appointed from the enlisted men assigned to duty for that purpose pursuant to the provisions of paragraph 4 hereof; and may provide for uniforming, arming, and equipping such organizations.

"'7. Whenever he shall deem such action merited the Secretary of War may remit the unexecuted portions of the sentences of offenders sent to the United States Disciplinary Barracks for confinement and detention therein, and in addition to such remission may grant those who have not been discharged from the Army an honorable restoration to duty, and may authorize the reenlistment of those who have been discharged or upon their written application to that end order their restoration to the Army to complete their respective terms of enlistment, and such application and order of restoration shall be effective to revive the enlistment contract for a period equal to the one not served under said contract.

"'8. The Secretary of War may, from time to time, designate any building or structure or any part thereof under the control of the Secretary of War and pertaining to the Military Establishment as a branch disciplinary barracks for the confinement and detention of offenders whom it is impracticable to send to the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; and all branch disciplinary barracks and all offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein shall be subject to the laws respecting the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and the offenders sent thereto for confinement and detention therein.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendment of the Senate numbered 107 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
HENRY A. DU PONT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES HAY,
S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, it was impossible to determine from the reading of the report just what the conferees have proposed. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether the conferees have agreed in regard to the amendment striking out the provision in the bill which appears on page 70?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to lay before the Senate in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement the Indian appropriation bill, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I ask the Senator from Arizona to yield to me just a moment to finish the conference report?

Mr. ASHURST. If it leads to no discussion I will yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator from New York asked a question about it. I will say that the conferees have agreed to everything except one item and that is the one known as the Taylor system. If the report is adopted I shall move that the Senate insist upon the amendment in this agreement and ask for a further conference.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon as to what the conferees did on the Taylor system amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They simply carried out the vote of the Senate. The House provision was stricken out of the bill on the floor of the Senate and your conferees have so far sustained the action of the Senate.

Mr. JAMES. So there has been no concurrence between the two Houses upon that amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We have been unable to agree as to that single amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment No. 107, ask a further conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. DU PONT conferees on the part of the Senate.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ASHURST. If the matter leads to no discussion whatever, I will yield.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I present out of order a unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee on House bill H. R. 5849, to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and I submit a report (No. 1054) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the report.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let the bill be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] reports favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 5849) to amend section 100 of an act entitled "An act to codify and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill go to the calendar.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I hope the Senator will not interpose that objection. This comes with the approval of the entire Judiciary Committee. In the State of Ohio there are at the present time but five places for the holding of Federal courts. In the State of West Virginia, across the Ohio River, there are 11 places. The purpose of the bill is to allow Ohio one additional place to hold courts.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection at all to the bill.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is an emergency bill.

Mr. SMOOT. But I want to say to the Senator that it is not fair to Senators who have allowed their bills to go to the calendar for reports to be made to the Senate, and the bill to be considered when reported without ever having a chance to get to the calendar. If these bills are sent to the calendar the Senators who are interested in them will be interested in taking up the calendar. I think we ought to take up the calendar and consider it, and when that time comes this bill will pass the Senate.

Mr. O'GORMAN. This bill would have been passed by this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But there has been objection.

Mr. SMOOT. There are other bills on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona insists on the regular order. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

NOTE FROM THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The Senate:

In response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on February 18, 1915, requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate the note received from the British Government dated February 10, 1915," I transmit herewith a copy of the paper requested.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 2, 1915.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. I desire, out of order, to ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object to the immediate consideration of the bill. The report can be submitted.

Mr. WHITE. Then I will ask leave to withdraw the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be withdrawn.

INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN NEBRASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9899) to authorize the laying out and opening of public roads on the Winnebago, Omaha, Ponca, and Santee Sioux Indian Reservations, in Nebraska, with an amendment to amend the title so as to read:

A bill to authorize the laying out and opening of public roads on the Winnebago, Omaha, Ponca, and Santee Sioux Indian Reservations, in Nebraska, and on Indian reservations in Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator state just exactly what the amendment is.

Mr. WALSH. It just modifies the amendment so as to include the State of Montana with Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It amends the title. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was concurred in.

SURVEY OF OYSTER BEDS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk.

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state to the Senator that it is merely a concurrent resolution requesting the return of a bill that has been sent to the President. It is a small bill which I introduced and which has in it a clerical error.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go to the calendar; there is not any doubt in the world but that it will be passed when the calendar is taken up.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I want the return of the bill now, so that I will have some chance to get it through by the 4th of March. This is simply a concurrent resolution to request the return of a bill that has gone to the President, an unimportant bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean that it has gone to the President?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thought the Senator would have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas submits a concurrent resolution, which the Secretary will read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 37) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill S. 3362, an act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce, through the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Fisheries, to make a survey of natural oyster beds, bars and rocks, and barren bottoms contiguous thereto in waters along the coast of and within the State of Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. When the bill is returned I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby it was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. That can be done just as soon as it has been returned to the Senate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes. I desire to give notice of the motion at this time.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGER BOY.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 561), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That a messenger boy be appointed, for service between the Capitol and the Senate Office Building, at the rate of $600 per annum, to be selected by the Sergeant at Arms and paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

REVENUES OF RAIL CARRIERS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following order:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be authorized and directed to print as a part of Senate Document No. 466, Sixty-third Congress, the illustrations accompanying the testimony and exhibits relating to the 5 per cent case as submitted to the Senate by the Interstate Commerce Commission in response to Senate resolution 310, Sixty-third Congress, and the order of April 14, 1914.

The document was ordered printed, but not the illustrations.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator what was the expense of printing that document?

Mr. FLETCHER. I really do not recall the expense.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not the large document, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the document that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] obtained an order to have printed. It is the testimony and hearings in the rate case. The order was to print the document but not the illustrations. This covers the illustrations. They ought to go with the document.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that.

The resolution was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF MALARIA.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, some time since Dr. Robert Wilson, chairman of the State Board of Health of South Carolina, asked me to get from the Public Health Service the best material available on the subject of malaria and its prevention and cure. I send to the desk a manuscript prepared by Dr. Rupert Blue, the Surgeon General, which I ask to have printed as a public document. It contains several illustrations, but as the cuts are already available no extra expense will be necessary on that account, and I ask that they be printed also.

As there is likely to be a great demand for this document, owing to the widespread prevalence of malaria, I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, and I hope it will order 50,000 copies printed for public distribution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 56) of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the journal of the forty-ninth national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1915, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment, on page 39, relative to the tribal grazing lease of the Crow Reservation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not desire to make a point of order against this amendment. Whether it is open to such or not I am not prepared to say. I have given no attention to that question. It would seem upon a hasty consideration of the amendment that it would be easily obnoxious to an objection of that character. I feel, however, that it is so germane to the portion of the bill of which it forms a part that it may very properly be considered upon its merits, and I desire to address myself for a short while to that feature of the bill.

It does seem to me that it must have been very hastily considered by whoever was its author, if indeed it received any consideration at all in the light of the past legislation of the Nation upon the subject with which it deals. Indeed, Mr. President, it revolutionizes a policy that has been adhered to without variance ever since the organization of our Government. It puts in effect a policy which is entirely inconsistent with the entire basis of the bill that is before us for consideration. We make appropriations to take care of the Indians. The Nation exercises guardianship over them, and it has long been held that the National Government occupies the relationship of trustee for these Indians because they are incompetent to take care of their own affairs.

Likewise, Mr. President, it has long been the policy of the Government that individuals should not be permitted to negotiate with Indian tribes looking to securing from them any kind of interest in lands set apart for their use. So, Mr. President, over a hundred years ago, as early as 1794, the Congress of the United States passed a statute forbidding any individual to enter into any negotiations with any Indian tribe looking to the securing of the right of occupancy or the title to any lands which had been set apart for their use. So likewise, Mr. President, repeatedly statutes have been passed denouncing as utterly void any contract which should be entered into by any person with any individual Indians by the operation of which the individual should secure any interest in lands set apart for the Indian under allotment law or otherwise.

This amendment, Mr. President, reverses the policy of the Government in both these respects. I shall address myself to that a little later on. But, Mr. President, regardless of that, I want to call attention to the language of the amendment and to the practical operation of it.

In the first part it provides:

That hereafter no tribal grazing lease or permit on the Crow Reservation shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior without first procuring the consent of a majority of the members of a council regularly called by said Indians.

Then it continues:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the application of any Indian allottee on said Crow Reservation, to build a fence in full compliance with the laws of Montana, sufficient to hold or turn all stock, inclosing the allotment of any Indian allottee, the same to be reimbursed out of any distributive tribal funds to which said Indian may be entitled; and such Indian allottee shall be permitted to lease his allotted lands when so fenced as aforesaid for a term not exceeding five years to any person or persons desiring to lease the same without interference on the part of any Government official.

So in the first place it lays down the proposition that negotiations may be begun with the entire tribe looking to the acquisition of lands for grazing privileges over the entire tract of land. In the second place that in the case of allotments negotiations may be instituted and carried on with the individual looking to the acquisition of the right to occupy his allotted lands.

Mr. President, the general principle to which I adverted finds very appropriate expression in the provisions of this bill found at pages 14 and 15. There you will find a statute very wise in its provisions and in entire conformity to the policy which has heretofore been pursued in our dealings with the American Indians. That statute amends a statute passed in the year 1910 which reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person to induce any Indian to execute any contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument purporting to convey any land or any interest therein held by the United States in trust for such Indian, or to offer any such contract, deed, mortgage, or other instrument for record in the office of any recorder of deeds. Any person violating this provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

That policy, as I said, Mr. President, is expressed again in this proposed amendment, which reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person to induce any Indian to execute any contract, deed, mortgage, lease, or other instrument touching land held under a trust or other patent containing restrictions on alienation, or to procure the execution by any Indian of any such instrument, or to be a party with any Indian to any such contract, deed, mortgage, lease, or other instrument, or to offer any such contract, deed, mortgage, lease, or other instrument as aforesaid for record.

Senators will recognize in this the very language of the act of 1910. Then the penalty is provided, and it continues:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to any contract, deed, mortgage, lease, or other instrument authorized by law to be made. Any Indian or his heirs in the possession of any live stock, their increase, or any other personal property issued by the United States or purchased with trust funds and held in trust by the United States, may lawfully sell, transfer, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of such property only with the consent in writing of the United States Indian agent or superintendent having jurisdiction over such property and not otherwise. Any person who shall induce any Indian to sell, transfer, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of, or shall procure the sale, transfer, mortgage, or other disposal by any Indian, or shall be a party with any Indian to the sale—

And so on, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. President, under the provisions of the amendment found at page 39 the Crow Indians, so far as the execution of leases upon either their tribal lands or their allotted lands, are to be taken out from under the operation of that statute.

I wish to advert first to the existing statute, which forbids the conduct of negotiations which the first part of the proposed amendment now undertakes to authorize. It is section 2116 of the Revised Statutes, and reads as follows:

SEC. 2116. No purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians, shall be of any validity in law or equity, unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution. Every person who, not being employed under the authority of the United States, attempts to negotiate such treaty or convention, directly or indirectly, or to treat with any such nation or tribe of Indians for the title or purchase of any lands by them held or claimed, is liable to a penalty of $1,000.

It is now proposed to reverse that policy, and to allow anyone to go upon an Indian reservation and to enter into negotiations with the tribe for the purpose of securing a lease of tribal lands, which, however, must be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs before it becomes effective.

I want to refer, for the information of the Senate, to the history of that legislation for two purposes: First, to establish how fixed it is in the policy of our Government, how ancient it is; and, in the second place, to disclose, for the information of the Senate, what the reasons were which impelled the Government so long to adhere to the policy which it expresses. I read the statute from the third volume of the Federal Statutes Annotated, at page 373. There it will be disclosed that this act is the act of June 30, 1834, chapter 161, fourth Statutes at Large, at page 730.

It was contended at one time, Mr. President, that that statute did not reach to the case of one who went upon an Indian reservation with a view to secure from the tribe a contract which would permit the party thus securing it to utilize the reservation lands for grazing purposes. The validity of contracts thus entered into was submitted to the Attorney General, Augustus H. Garland, in the year 1885. His opinion briefly reviews the legislation upon the subject, and, with the indulgence of the Senate, I shall read from the opinion, on page 236, as follows:

Our Government has ever claimed the right and from a very early period its settled policy has been to regulate and control the alienation or other disposition by Indians, and especially by Indian nations or tribes, of their lands. This policy was originally adopted in view of their peculiar character and habits, which rendered them incapable of sustaining any other relation with the whites than that of dependence and pupilage. There was no other way of dealing with them than that of keeping them separate, subordinate, and dependent, with a guardian care thrown around them for their protection. (3 Kent Com., 381; Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S., 517, where most of the cases on this subject are cited and discussed.)

Thus in 1783 the Congress of the Confederation by a proclamation prohibited "all persons from making settlements on lands inhabited or claimed by Indians without the limits or jurisdiction of any particular State and from purchasing or receiving any gift or cession of such lands or claims without the express authority and directions of the United States in Congress assembled," and declared "that every such purchase or settlement, gift, or cession not having the authority aforesaid is null and void, and that no right or title will accrue in consequence of any such purchase, gift, cession, or settlement." By section 4 of the act of July 22, 1790, chapter 33, the Congress of the United States enacted "that no sale of lands made by any Indians, or any nation or tribe of Indians within the United States, shall be valid to any person or persons, or to any State, whether having the right of preemption to such lands or not, unless the same shall be made and duly executed at some public treaty held under the authority of the United States." A similar provision was again enacted in section 8 of the act of March 1, 1793, chapter 19, which by its terms included "any purchase or grant of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indians or nation or tribe of Indians within the bounds of the United States." The provision was further extended by section 12 of the act of May 19, 1796, chapter 30, so as to embrace any "purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto."

So, Mr. President, the word "lease" was included in this statute as early as the year 1796, and from that time to this it was deemed contrary to the wise policy of this Government to permit anyone to go upon an Indian reservation with a view to securing a lease of the Indian lands from the tribe.

As thus extended it was reenacted by the act of March 3, 1799, chapter 46, section 12, and also by the act of March 30, 1802, chapter 30, section 12.

In the above legislation the provision in terms applied to purchases, grants, leases, etc., from individual Indians as well as from Indian tribes or nations; but by the twelfth section of the act of June 30, 1834, chapter 161, it was limited to such as emanate "from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians." And the provision of the act of 1834 just referred to has been reproduced in section 2116, Revised Statutes, which is now in force.

That is the statute which I have read. The Attorney General continues:

This statutory provision is very general and comprehensive. Its operation does not depend upon the nature or extent of the title to the land which the tribe or nation may hold. Whether such title be a fee simple or a right of occupancy merely is not material. In either case the statute applies. It is not therefore deemed necessary or important in connection with the subject under consideration to inquire into the particular right or title to the above-mentioned reservations held by the Indian tribes or nations, respectively, which claim them. Whatever the right or title may be, each of these tribes or nations is precluded, by the force and effect of the statute, from either alienating or leasing any part of its reservation or imparting any interest or claim in or to the same without the consent of the Government of the United States. A lease of the land for grazing purposes is as clearly within the statute as a lease for any other or for general purposes, and the duration of the term is immaterial. One who enters with cattle or other live stock upon an Indian reservation under a lease of that description made in violation of the statute is an intruder, and may be removed therefrom as such, notwithstanding his entry is with consent of the tribe. Such consent may exempt him from the penalty imposed by section 2117, Revised Statutes, for taking his stock there, but it can not validate the lease or confer upon him any legal right whatsoever to remain upon the land; and to this extent and no further was the decision of Judge Brewer in United States v. Hunter (21 Fed. Rep., 615).

That opinion was rendered, Mr. President, because of the fact that it was contended that these leases might be negotiated, and stockmen, men commanding immense herds of cattle, acting under the advice, emanating from some source or other, to the effect that leases of this character could be effected, went upon the reservation, carried on a campaign upon the reservation, gathered the Indians upon the reservation into tribal councils or other aggregations of that character, and procured them by campaign methods and other similar activities, the nature of which will very readily occur to all of us who have had more or less to do with politics, securing resolutions from the tribal councils authorizing the execution of leases. Under those leases they went on and occupied the reservation, and the question arose as to the validity of those leases.

Mr. President, we are not so much concerned with the question as to whether those leases were or were not valid, as we are with the reasons, if there are any, for the policy of the law which declared them to be void.

A certain cattle company, known as the Flournoy Livestock & Real Estate Co., secured from the Indians grazing leases covering extensive reservations in the State of Nebraska. The validity of those leases came under consideration by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in the case of Beck v. Flournoy, found in 65 Federal Reporter, at page 30, and I want to read from the body of the opinion in that case the following passage:

It is manifest, we think, from an inspection of the various acts to which reference has been made above, that Congress did not intend to authorize, and has not in fact authorized, the members of the Winnebago Tribe of Indians to whom allotments of land have been made in severalty under the act of February 21, 1863, and the act of February 8, 1887, to lease or otherwise dispose of their right to use and occupy the lands so allotted to them. The act of February 21, 1863, declared that the lands allotted under that act should be vested "in the Indian and his heirs without the right of alienation." The fifth section of the same act further provided that the members of said tribe should be deemed "incapable of making any valid contract with any person other than a native member of their tribe without the consent of the President of the United States." The subsequent act of February 8, 1887, is equally, if not more, specific. It declares that "if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned (to wit, the term of 25 years), such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void." These limitations upon the power of the Indians to sell or make contracts respecting land that might be set apart to them for their individual use and benefit were imposed to protect them—from the greed and superior intelligence of the white man. Congress well knew that if these wards of the Nation were placed in possession of real estate, and were given capacity to sell or lease the same, or to make contracts with white men with reference thereto, they would soon be deprived of their several holdings; and that, instead of adopting the customs and habits of civilized life and becoming self-supporting, they would speedily waste their substance, and very likely become paupers. The motive that actuated the lawmaker in depriving the Indians of the power of alienation is so obvious, and the language of the statute in that behalf is so plain, as to leave no room for doubt that Congress intended to put it beyond the power of white men to secure any interest whatsoever in lands situated within Indian reservations that might be allotted to Indians. This conclusion is fortified by an amendment to the act of February 8, 1887, which was adopted on February 28, 1891 (26 Stat., 794, ch. 383), whereby power was conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe regulations and conditions for the leasing of lands allotted to Indians under the previous act of February 8, 1887, whenever, by reason of "age or other disability," the allottee was not able to occupy or improve the land assigned to him with benefit to himself. It is manifest that the amendment in question, authorizing allotted land to be leased in certain cases, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, was unnecessary if power to execute leases of allotted lands had already been conferred by previous enactments or treaty stipulations. The last-mentioned act, therefore, is a legislative declaration that Congress did not intend by any previous statute to authorize the leasing of any lands that might be assigned to Indians to be held by them in severalty.

Those limitations were imposed to protect them—

But, Mr. President, that did not seem to reach the case, and it became necessary for the Government of the United States to take further action; indeed, the President of the United States issued a proclamation directed especially at this particular cattle company and others occupying similar positions who had gone upon the Indian reservations and had secured leases. The proclamation commanded them to leave the reservation, and declared that he would resort to the military arm to put them off; but that did not seem to be sufficient to the authorities of the United States, and they went into the United States court and secured an injunction against the parties, forbidding them under the color and pretext of these leases from going upon or occupying the reservation. I will read briefly from the opinion in that case, which was brought by the Government of the United States, but will first read the facts from the syllabus, as follows:

Leases made by members of the Omaha and Winnebago Tribes of Indians, of lands allotted to them in severalty under the acts of Congress of February 21, 1863, August 7, 1882, and February 8, 1887, without the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, are wholly void.

I will now read from the body of the opinion, but I will abbreviate what I would otherwise say about this matter, because I rather despair of getting the attention of many Senators to this rather important matter; but it recites the existence of the facts substantially as I have recited them. I now read from page 893 of the opinion:

If the executive branch of the Government deems it necessary, for the proper performance of this treaty stipulation with the Indians, to forbid the occupancy of these lands by white men, it has the right so to do, especially in view of the fact that in all the legislation touching the same Congress has uniformly prohibited the alienation of the lands and has expressly declared that all contracts between the Indians and persons not native members of the tribe shall be wholly null and void. Even if it should be the fact that the Indians living upon the allotted lands are no longer to be deemed tribal Indians, but have in fact reached the full measure of citizenship, and if it should be held that the allotted lands no longer form part of the Indian country, it would be no less true that the United States had agreed that these lands should be set apart for the occupancy and benefit of the Indians, and that the Congress of the United States, when it authorized the allotment of lands in severalty, had forbidden the alienation of the lands for the period of 25 years, with the modification that in case of the disability of an allottee, by age or otherwise, to cultivate the land allotted, the same might be leased under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and it is clearly the duty of the United States to prevent the alienation of the lands during the period named and to preserve them for the use and occupancy of the Indians, and to that end it may rightfully forbid the occupancy of the lands by persons not members of the tribes.

And the following:

It thus appears that the leases under which the defendants claim the right to the possession of the lands allotted in severalty are wholly void, having been taken in direct violation of the provisions of the acts of Congress under which the allotments in severalty were made; that the occupancy of the lands and the cultivation thereof by the defendants is wholly inconsistent with the purpose for which the lands were originally set apart as a reservation for the Indians and with the object of the Government in providing for allotments in severalty; that such occupancy is held contrary to the rules and regulations of the Department of the Interior and is held not for the benefit, protection, and advancement of the Indians, but for the benefit of the original lessees and their subtenants.

So they go on and announce the reasons why this policy was pursued.

Then, Mr. President, the allotments upon this Crow Indian Reservation are made pursuant to the provisions of what is known as the Dawes Act, passed in the year 1887, under which any contract made by an Indian touching his land or the occupancy of the same was declared to be utterly nugatory and void. The act will be found at page 494, third volume of Federal Statutes, annotated, and I read the concluding portion of the statute referring to the allotments, which are inalienable for a period of 25 years, according to its terms.

Then the statute concludes:

And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted, as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely void.

And it is held that the lease is within the terms of that statute.

Mr. President, we have repeated that policy in the provisions of this bill found on pages 14 and 15; but under the provision of the amendment proposed on page 39 it is intended to reverse this policy, and allow the Indians upon the Crow Indian Reservation to make leases of their lands, for a period not exceeding five years, to any person or persons desiring to lease the same, without interference on the part of any Government official. I think it will be difficult for anyone, in the face of the history of legislation in relation to the Indians, to justify in any way whatever that provision of the proposed statute.

So, Mr. President, with reference to the first part of the amendment. Why, Mr. President, this is an invitation. I know well how profoundly sympathetic with the Indians upon the Crow Indian Reservation are the gentlemen from whom this amendment emanated and with whom it originated; but I say, as I said in opening this discussion, that it could not have received their serious consideration and reflection. Why, it would be an invitation to every scalawag in the West to go to the Crow Indian Reservation and secure leases from these poor, ignorant, incompetent Indians, who are not able to speak the English language and are unable to take care of themselves, that being the justification for our legislating upon the subject at all. If the Indian upon the Crow Indian Reservation is in a situation where we may trust him to make a lease of his allotment for a period of five years without any interference on the part of any Government official at all, we should throw open the whole Crow Indian Reservation; we should withdraw our guardianship over these Indians. We should not be legislating upon this subject at all.

So with reference to the leases to be negotiated concerning the tribal lands and with the tribe as a whole. If the tribe as a whole is able to take care of its tribal lands, why should it not do so? This will be an invitation to carry out a regular political campaign upon the Crow Indian Reservation on the part of rival aspirants for the lease of the lands.

I ask you to picture for yourselves the awful situation upon the Crow Indian Reservation that would result from the inauguration of any system of this character. Let me go a little further, and let me show you how impossible it is that this could be put into effect.

The Indian allotments of the Crow Indian Reservation amount to 320 acres. The Indian has an opportunity to select 40 acres of irrigable lands and 280 acres of grazing lands, or he may select the entire 320 acres in a body. A fence of sufficient length to inclose a tract of 320 acres is exactly 3 miles long. Now, it costs practically $100 a mile to build a fence in the State of Montana sufficient to turn stock; so it will take just $300, on that estimate, to build a fence around any 320-acre tract upon the Crow Indian Reservation—$300!

Now, what do the leases upon the Crow Reserve at the present time produce? They produce practically 8 cents an acre. If that is taken as a proper basis of calculation, 320 acres will produce annually $25.60. But let us double that and say that it will produce $50 annually. Your fence costs you $300. It will take 6 years, at double the fee that is now obtained, to get back even the cost of inclosing 320 acres within a fence. So the proposition is that when one of these Indians, no matter how incompetent he may be, no matter how uninformed he may be, no matter how ignorant he may be, demands that $300 of his money shall be utilized for the purpose of building a fence around his 320 acres of land, that money must be taken out and put to that purpose. And to what end? Why, everybody recognizes that after a period of 6 or 8 years the fence would be valueless. In other words, by the time he got back the money that the fence cost its period of life would be practically over, and it would be necessary to rebuild it. So that it is impossible to have any return on this matter at all.

But, furthermore, what could a man do? The only course from which any revenue can be derived from these lands by the use of them is to allow them to be grazed over. But what will a man do with 320 acres of land inclosed in a fence? You could not lease for grazing purposes a tract of that character. Moreover, the man who had the water hole upon his tract within his fence would be able to lease that tract at a very handsome price to the man who had a big herd of stock in the neighborhood, because he could get them in there for the purpose of watering them, and no one else could get in at all, and the other tracts could not be leased at any figure.

Mr. President, if any Indian is cultivating any portion of his 320-acre tract; if he is cultivating it to grain crops; if he has a garden upon it; if he even has hay growing upon it, which he desires to cut, that ought to be fenced so that it shall be protected; but you do not want to fence any of this land if it is to be leased for grazing purposes.

I have no interest in this matter. It is a matter that is absolutely of no consequence to me personally, whether this amendment is carried or not; but I feel sure that the amendment was not drafted in consequence of any very well-thought-out plan of utilizing these lands.

The Senator from Michigan suggested on yesterday that inasmuch as some of these lands are tribal lands held in common and others of the lands are allotments held in private ownership, and the herds graze over both classes of lands, the allottee ought to have such proportion of the entire amount paid as his allotted land bears to the entire area over which the cattle graze. I fully agree with him about that. I think that would be quite just, and I should be very glad to join the Senator from Michigan in supporting an amendment of that character. But this amendment, from first to last, is in contravention of a policy the wisdom of which has never before been questioned.

I apprehend I know something about how this came up. Some controversy has arisen regarding the leases on the Crow Reserve. It is contended before the joint committee of the Senate and House that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, either corruptly or with a very remarkable want of good judgment, gave out the leasing privilege at much less than its true value. I do not feel as if I care to go into that inquiry at this time. I desire simply to say that the commissioner advertised in the usual way through the newspapers, that certain bids were submitted, and those bids were rejected; the commissioner, wisely or unwisely, believing that he could get a higher price for the leases. A second advertisement was called for. The bids submitted in response to that were equally unsatisfactory—indeed, more unsatisfactory—to the commissioner, and he again rejected those bids, and the advertisement was put in the papers for the third time; and upon the third advertisement the leases were let to some gentlemen who reside in the city of Omaha, Nebr. I do not know whether my colleague has any acquaintance with them or not. I imagine he has not. I have not. I do not know who they are.

Mr. MYERS. Who is that?

Mr. WALSH. The Omaha people who got the Crow leases.

Mr. MYERS. No; I have not.

Mr. WALSH. I might say in this connection that some of our own people were bidders for the leases, but the commissioner declined to award the leases to them, and so they went beyond the bounds of our State. Now, I do not undertake to say whether it was wise or unwise, but I do undertake to say that until we have some further information about the matter that will justify, in some measure at least, this revolution in our relations and our negotiations with the Indians on the Indian reservations, I should think the amendment ought to be rejected.

Furthermore, I desire to inquire what reason there is why this system should be pursued upon the Crow Indian Reservation and upon no other Indian reservation? The conditions are just exactly the same on every other Indian reservation in my State. They are exactly the same upon the Blackfeet Indian Reservation. They are exactly the same on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation. They are exactly the same on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. The conditions there are exactly the same as the conditions in other States, so far as I am informed. What is there about the Crow Indian Reserve that calls for special legislation, and for the abandonment with reference to that particular reservation of this policy which has stood the test of many, many years?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I hope I shall not be considered presumptuous if I discuss the Indian question in a State other than Michigan. I have very little sympathy with the idea that a member of the Indian Committee or a Member of the Senate should be foreclosed from criticizing any item which happens to be approved by the Senators from the State wherein the reservation or the Indian tribe is located. I have great faith always in, and I am glad to listen to, the Senators from any State where there are Indians; but I assume that I was placed upon the Indian Committee, as other members of the committee were placed upon it, for the purpose of investigating the affairs relating to the Indians not only in the State of the Senator but every other State in the Union. So I say I hope that I shall not be considered as an intruder if I shall make any suggestions which do not happen to coincide with the views of the Senators from the State where the tribe under discussion happens to be located.

I am not familiar with the amendment to the extent of having studied it before it was put upon the bill. I am, however, in hearty sympathy with the idea suggested in the amendment. The Senator from Montana has occupied a good deal of time in proving, through decisions of the courts, that the law is to the effect that white people can not contract with the Indians. I assume that that is conceded. I did not suppose that there was any great question about that; but this provision proposes to change that in some particulars.

I do not believe our Indian laws have worked so perfectly during all our experience with them that the laws pertaining thereto should be held entirely sacred. I do not think we have made a very great success of the Indian problem. Indeed, it is difficult for me many times to understand how we could have handled it worse than it has been handled. It is a deplorable fact, but it is true that the Indian has not made great progress in many States of the Union and on many of our reservations. I think we have failed to recognize the fact that before we can get an Indian civilized, before we can make him a citizen of the United States, entitled to the privileges and the rights of citizenship, we must at least bestow some degree of responsibility upon him. He may make mistakes, and he probably will lose some of his property, but I would rather he would lose it than that we should lose it for him. I would rather he would experiment with some of the property belonging to him than to have the United States waste it upon old, moss-covered theories that have been disproven because of their inefficiency throughout the years.

This proposition is that the Crow Indians—and this applies to any other tribe; I will admit to the Senator from Montana that it would apply to other tribes equally well—shall be consulted through their tribal authorities, authorities which are recognized for many other purposes, and that they shall determine whether this property of theirs shall be leased for grazing purposes or whether it shall not be leased. I think myself it is a good step. I realize, as I said to the Senator from Montana yesterday, that it may lead to some difficulty, but it will not be a greater one than the ones already existing. It will not result more disastrously, in my judgment, than the conditions now in vogue. Therefore I think it would be a good thing to allow them to assume the responsibility to determine whether they want their property leased or not.

That is the first part of this proposition, the one about which the Senator speaks. I can see that there is some trouble in that, and I think I should be glad to change that a little; but even the provision as prepared and introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin would not leave the situation any worse than it is at present. That is the proposition—that if the Indian wants his allotment fenced, and he has the money with which to fence it, that disposition shall be made of his money.

The Senator from Montana says it will cost a large amount of money, and that it will be a useless waste of his patrimony to put it into a fence when he can not lease it; and the Senator bases his ideas of the lease largely upon what is paid for the range; but if we double it, he said or intimated yesterday that he would not get enough out of it to pay for the investment in the fence.

I assume, Mr. President, that the Indian is not going to have his allotment fenced unless he knows what he can do with it. This does not apply simply to leasing for grazing purposes, but the Indian may use it for agricultural purposes or he may lease it for agricultural purposes. With other Indians combined they can fence their property and may get the avails out of their allotment. As it is now they are getting absolutely nothing according to the reports that are made to us, and I think it is admitted by the department. This makes dissatisfaction with the Indian. He feels that he has property; under the courts it is a vested right the Indian has when his allotment is made to him, and to see that allotment used by these rangers, these stockmen, without paying 1 cent to the owner of the allotment, creates dissatisfaction. It is entirely unsatisfactory.

They feel that if it were fenced they could use that land and get something out of it for themselves. Cases have been brought to our attention many times on the Crow Reservation and I think it is not disputed that some of the Indians have protected their allotments even though they did not have sufficient fences and they have finally grown some hay, and they have stacked it on their allotments only to have it destroyed when the range was depleted by the stock of the lessees who have come up to their weak and insufficient inclosures and torn them down and the stock has eaten up their hay.

Mr. President, believing as I do that the Indian should be given responsibility, that he should be taught to do something for himself, I have favored this proposition. I think I would be quite as well satisfied at this time, inasmuch as we are starting upon the proposition, to allow the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to ratify the lease so that he should not be overreached. I know the amendment provides that if any advantage is taken of the Indian it shall be declared void.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator from Michigan it is my purpose to offer three or four amendments for perfecting the leases and one for perfecting it in that respect, and I will read it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will be glad if the Senator would.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to have his criticism of the language.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, we are unable to hear the Senator from Wisconsin on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I said it was my purpose to offer some three or four amendments to the proposed amendment before a vote is taken upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was just about to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that I thought some amendments should be made to the provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the point which is being discussed at this particular moment by the Senator from Michigan, it is my intention to propose this amendment: In line 10, on page 10, after the word "of," the fourth word in that line, to insert "inadequate compensation provided in said lease or of unfair terms or conditions contained therein or of," and after the word "lessee," in line 11, the words "as a tenant," so that that portion of the proposed amendment when amended would read as follows:

> And the Secretary of the Interior shall have the power, in case of inadequate compensation provided in said lease or of unfair terms or conditions contained therein, or of any unfair treatment of the lessor by the lessee as his tenant, to cancel or revise said lease.

Then follow it by the following:

> Such lease shall be made upon forms furnished by the Interior Department and approved by the Secretary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That would be entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. President. I think that would prevent the abuse of the Indian by those conscienceless lessees who might otherwise take advantage of him.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, Mr. President, the amendment now proposed would make the proposed amendment much less objectionable; but if the Senator will permit me, I want to suggest to him that the opportunity to overreach the Indian would be very little reduced even by that amendment, because the leases would be prima facie valid. The lessee would go into possession of the leased property, and on an Indian reservation, perhaps more than anywhere else in the world, possession is nine points in a lawsuit. It would be necessary for the Indian to complain to the Secretary of the Interior that he had been overreached in the matter. As a matter of course, he does not know whether he has been overreached or not; he is not a business man, so he is unable to say about that, and he would be obliged to come down here to Washington or have some lawyer come down to Washington and enter a suit before the Secretary of the Interior to annul and cancel the leases.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I do not think that the danger of being overreached is as great as the present system of overreaching which exists so far as the property of the Indian is concerned. He is practically getting nothing out of it now. Where, as I said, he has had the advantage of raising a crop of hay he has lost it. He gets nothing. This will get him something, and it will be a step in the direction of securing to him more perfect and complete rights.

Therefore, I say, I think it is time for Congress to begin some real positive constructive work which will mean the liberation of the Indian himself and secure to him the rights which the Government is supposed to give him when it allots him land.

I am glad the Senator is not going to make a point of order on this amendment. I hope, if it goes in, that it will remain in the bill after conference. I think it is the least thing we can do to show our real interest in the Indian himself.

The Senator has brought up certain imaginary evils, or possible evils—it may be probable evils—but we have got to meet this question sometime. It is time we began, and I am very glad indeed that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has offered this amendment, because, it seems to me, it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will not detain the Senate long. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] seemed to be under the impression, from what he said, that the joint commission appointed to investigate Indian affairs were under the impression that the department was acting corruptly in making these leases or including in the leases for grazing lands on the Crow Reservation the allotted lands of the Indians. I do not think any member of the commission thought anything of the sort. I never heard anyone say anything of the sort.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator could not have understood me.

Mr. LANE. I may have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I said it had been suggested before the commission here that corruption had existed.

Mr. LANE. It is true it had been. Many such complaints as that were made, and the matter was called to the attention of the commission; and the statement was also made that, included within the grazing terms permits as they now are called, formerly called leases, there were thousands upon thousands of acres of lands which had been allotted to individual Indians. For the use of this land the Government did not receive any pay, nor did the Indian whose allotment it was. I think that statement was fully borne out by testimony of the officials of the department itself and the records of the department.

If such a condition did exist, the suggestion which was made to the minds of the commission, or at least the impression which was made upon me, was that there was an injustice being done to the Indian individually, and, secondly, that later along he would have a just claim against the Government upon which he might recover the money which was justly due him.

There was about $160,000 a year collected from these leases, and included in these leases were large numbers of individual allotments. There was a similar case, I am informed, where the firm of MacMurray and some other gentlemen—I have forgotten their names—brought suit against the Government for the refund of such moneys for some Indians in Oklahoma and had recovered judgment. If that condition does exist on Crow Reservation and others, there is going to be trouble sooner or later. The Indian is dissatisfied, the Government will be punished by having to pay the claim, and nobody will be benefited except the lessees, one of whom has made probably a million dollars from these unjust grazing grants, much of the gain coming from the free use of the allotted Indian lands.

We had some hearings and upon page 2043 of the hearing held before the joint commission of the Congress of the United States, Part 15, dated January 26 and including July 14, 1914, there is a statement from a man by the name of William D. Weekley, who is a clerk in the Indian Office. His duties at that time consisted in handling the leases of the tribal lands, and the question was put to him as to whether there was any allotted lands included in the permits, and he said he understood that there was, and he went on to say that the lease contained the provision that the permit was void as to allotted land. The Government could not collect rent from it. It was void.

He further stated that—

> It is customary, however, to allow them to use all the unfenced lands in the district, and the Indians were allowed to carry whatever stock they had on the unfenced lands.

I then asked him if—> the Indians' unallotted land was allowed to go into the general range?

Then he said further, on page 2044:

> As I recall, there was nothing in the lease about that—that is about the Indians being allowed to fence.

I asked him were the Indians allowed to fence after the lease was made.

> As I recall, there was nothing in the lease about that; but so far as I know they were always to fence any lands they wished to use themselves.

That is, they could fence their allotments any time, but they did not do so in any instance which was brought to our attention within the limits of these large leases.

Further along in the hearings this condition was brought to the attention of the assistant commissioner, Mr. Meritt, and at that time Mr. BURKE, a Representative in Congress and a member of the commission, called his attention to the fact that it did exist, with the statement that these permits had been given, and that the permittee was allowed to use the allotted lands. The question was asked of Mr. Meritt by Senator TOWNSEND:

> You were asked a question a little while ago as to whether you thought it was legal—

To lease these allotments within the permit granted to the lessee.

> Mr. BURKE, I think, asked you the question whether you thought it was legal to lease the allotments or to include these allotments in these leases. Was that question ever submitted?
> Mr. Meritt replied: "No, sir; Mr. BURKE brought the question up the other day for the first time, and I have considered the question somewhat hurriedly since then. It is my opinion that we are depriving the Indian of a treaty right when we go ahead and lease the reservation and permit the lessees to allow their cattle to roam over the allotment of the Indian."

Now, that is the case and that is all the case. The Indians had applied for permission to the Indian Bureau to be allowed to lease their lands to people who offered them a fair rental for the use of them. The permission was refused, and then came the question as to whether or not this Government was not being made liable for a claim for damages by the Indians; and if so, was it not our duty to put a stop to that manner of doing business?

Mr. Commissioner Sells himself stated in regard to this question:

> While I suspect that there is a question as to whether or not there is a legal point involved there, I think it would perhaps be best to consider that. It is very helpful to have these things suggested, and I gladly welcome them. I think that it would be entirely proper, Senator and gentlemen, that regulations should be promulgated covering that particular thing and going further than that very much. I see no reason why an Indian on such a lease holding—I speak now of a large one—should not at his pleasure inclose it. I insist that we have a right if he asks for it. It is his right that he should be protected in, and that if he wishes to lease it to anyone it is his privilege that no one has the right to deny him.

These matters were carefully considered. Such charges had been made time and again and there was a question as to whether or not the Government would not get itself into trouble if it continued to do that which was illegal in handling these lands. This provision which has been drawn by the Senator from Wisconsin was merely aimed to cover that defect and remedy the method which is now being pursued.

A while ago the Senator from Montana implied that the effort on the part of the Senators from other States to correct this was intended as a personal affront to him. With me it has been merely a matter of securing justice for a class of people whose affairs were, in a measure, intrusted to me to take care of for them.

In regard to the reference which was made earlier in the afternoon as to the conditions on the Blackfeet Agency, I would say that I stopped off on the Blackfeet Agency as a member of the joint commission appointed to consider their affairs, as well as those of other Indians. Without prejudice I made a report relating to conditions as they came under my personal observation. I did not enter into the bickerings and differences of opinion which exist on that reservation between the two contending parties as to the manner in which they wish to have their affairs handled. The next morning after I arrived there I asked the superintendent of the reservation to show me what they were doing with the reclamation project, and he and I and two mixed-blood Indians got into an automobile and started for the Seville unit, which is about 25 miles east of Browning. On our way a tire became punctured and we were held up. Finally there came along a man in a Ford. He was one of the reclamation engineers. On his invitation, the superintendent and I got in and rode with him, and we left the mixed-blood Indians behind.

We went to the experimental farm on the Seville unit and examined it. We saw what crops were being raised by the farmer there—the alfalfa and flax, and the stubble from which they had cut grain hay, and the vegetables which had been grown. We looked at what he had stored away in his root house and his flax and hay; we had dinner at the house, and after we were through and ready to go away the mixed-blood Indians arrived.

It was said a while ago in reference to my visit there that I had nothing to say about what I saw; I did not say anything, and it was not wise to talk then or there. The writer of the letter to Senator WALSH came with a number of others and demanded to know what my report was going to be; quite naturally I refused to answer the question. The police of the reservation were "set upon" witnesses and frightened them from coming to me. Full bloods and others were badgered and threatened if they did so. The proof was—and I certified to it in my report to the commission—that the land there, with water upon it, seemed to be capable of raising good crops of hardy vegetables and hay.

Later along, within four days after I was there, I think, or within a few days after—I will read what I had to say on the subject—two Government inspectors followed me upon that reservation without my knowledge, without my knowing that either one of them was going there. One of them was the chief inspector of the Indian Bureau and the other one was an inspector from the Department of Justice. I want you to see their report and compare it with mine. We wrote independent reports. I will read what I had to say in regard to that reclamation unit, and afterwards I will read you what they reported:

Why any one should have inaugurated or authorized the large expenditure which has been incurred in constructing the reclamation project which I visited and others which I saw without having also and at the same time provided means for the Indians to profit by their use is a puzzle to me.

There was not another farm in sight. There are not to exceed a dozen Indians, so far as I know, who are receiving any benefit from the reclamation project for which their lands are held reimbursable to the tune of about a million dollars.

The lands of the Seville unit are no doubt the most valuable of any on the reservation and could be made the basis for the self-support of many of the Blackfeet Indians for a long time to come if properly and wisely managed with that sole object in view. As it now is, however, the Indians can not use them and they do them no good, and because they do not use them their nonuse is used as an argument to secure the consent of Congress to sell them to white people.

On page 664 of this report, which is one of the hearings before the joint committee, February 11, 1915, part 6-A, is the report of these two gentlemen who represented the Government, one of them the chief inspector of the department, which was inspecting and reporting upon its own work; not a man ordinarily who would give his department any the worst of it; surely not prejudiced against his own department. He says, near the bottom of page 664, in reference to this reclamation project on the Blackfeet Reservation:

As a matter of fact, an Indian or white man would need to expend some two or three thousand dollars on each irrigable allotment in the fencing of same, the building of a house, barn, a well, and breaking the land before he could expect any returns.

The Indians have not the means to do this, and with the climatic conditions as herein outlined it is exceedingly doubtful whether any great amount of this land which can be irrigated will ever be successfully farmed, and it will be difficult to persuade the Indians to live on the irrigable portion of their allotments.

* * * * * * *

There has been expended up to October 31, 1914, the sum of $942,413.58 on the Blackfeet Reservation irrigation project out of the tribal funds, and it has been estimated by the Reclamation Service that $2,000,000 additional will be required to complete this irrigation project.

The benefits derived by the Indians from this large expenditure of money have been practically nil. There are not to exceed 30 or 40 Indians attempting to farm under this whole project, and some of these have only small garden patches.

This is from the report of the chief inspector of the Indian Bureau himself in regard to the manner in which the affairs there were handled under the reclamation project.

The man who wrote here the letter which was expunged from the RECORD was one of 8 persons, out of an assembly of perhaps 300, who voted in favor of selling these lands at this time under the existing law, and also under the terms of the bill to which I objected last night. Charges have been preferred against this man by another Indian that he preys upon the grazing lands of the tribe and grazes sheep upon them in partnership with outside white men on shares.

I wish now to call attention to some other statements which were made by me, and compare them to those which were made by the Government inspectors. I read from page 654, where I stated that—

So far as I could see or ascertain, with one exception, no Indians or anyone else was engaged in farming or had entered upon their allotments upon this unit.

That confirms what the inspectors said. They did not see to exceed 20 people and they were all over the reservation, while my visit was a brief one, and did not extend over so much territory. On page 655 of my report I stated:

Near the foot of Heart Butte I found a subagent or farmer in charge of the station. At the time I was there he was engaged in building a barn to shelter the stallions which had been issued to improve the stock of horses owned by the Indians in that neighborhood.

The blooded stallions, if you please, Senators, with which the bureau is going to improve the stock of these, our wards.

The wind was biting cold and the barn had not been entirely inclosed from lack of lumber, which had to be hauled 40 miles to complete the work. The stallions had run down badly from lack of shelter and insufficient food.

The report of the inspectors says in relation to the same animals—and that report is signed by both of them—

There were four stallions stationed at this point, and just prior to our arrival a rough board roof had been placed on the log building constructed for them. Prior to this time these horses had stood out through heavy storms with the snow 3½ feet deep.

They were going downhill as fast as they could, and would be useless perhaps before spring.

The inspectors went through that reservation more fully and carefully than I did; they saw the witness who came in and complained to the commission and to the committee; they also met up with the mixed blood who has done me the honor to write to the Senator from Montana concerning my visit there. So they had both sides. They had nothing to do with the commission; they were detailed by the Government itself, and after my report was read before the joint commission Mr. Linnen, the chief inspector of the Indian Bureau, asked to make a statement, and in that statement he said, as is shown on page 660:

I simply want to say this: I have heard Senator LANE'S report read with much pleasure, and can confirm it, as can also Mr. Cook here [indicating Mr. Cook], who was with me when I made a subsequent investigation of the Blackfeet Reservation. I can confirm everything he has stated as being absolutely true.

With relation to two or three matters which he mentioned, I want to say this: He speaks of one white man over in the irrigation district who he said was nearly financially ruined because he could not get water. I personally saw the letters from the chief engineer of the irrigation service out there to the superintendent of the Blackfeet Reservation, as early as March 22 of last year, calling attention to the fact that the water was ready for delivery in any quantity that he desired to ask for, and that he wanted him to request when he wanted the water, stating for how many acres, so that he could turn it on. He stated to us that the reason why the water wasn't furnished more promptly was because of the neglect of the superintendent; that the water was there to turn on.

Then he says later along in the report that the superintendent has been suspended. Since then I am told he has been dismissed.

Now, Senators, many of these Indians were living in a condition of absolute destitution. I have several photographs here of some of the houses in which they live. Here [exhibiting] is a photograph of a house where a family of eight Indians lived. In that house there was no food. I examined the box in which they kept their food, and it was empty. One 4-year old child had no clothing on except a man's sack coat. It possessed not a stitch of other clothing; it was barefooted and bareheaded, and aside from its coat, which was unbuttoned, the child was bare from the top of its head to the toes of his little feet. The mother had given birth to a child the day before and was up and around, taking care of her family, sleeping on the ground in a pile of old rags. That was the condition which had fallen upon those unfortunate people whose lands had been tied up in a reclamation project which had involved an expenditure of about $1,000,000 and which would require $2,000,000 more to complete.

Six hundred out of the 900 children were without school facilities. One man, his wife, and two children were eating flour mixed with potatoes, and they had lived on such food for six months in spite of the fact that the Indians had $200,000 in the Treasury to their credit and that this individual Indian was owed $50 for services performed for the Government.

They asked me if I would protest against the passage of this bill. They said that if their lands had to be sold to keep them from starving, rather than starve to death they would sell them, but they would prefer not to sell them if they could hold out. They were starving, and were eating prairie dogs and were killing them off the plains of the country; they were eating skunks, if you please. Did you ever eat a skunk? It will keep you alive, but it is not good to eat.

I said I would object to the bill for them, and that I would do so without prejudice to the Senator from Montana. I would be a dog if I did not voice the objections of these poor, helpless folk.

The Senator from Montana had been upon the reservation but a short time before I was there, but he did not go into the Indians' homes, look into their grub boxes, and kick over their beds to see how they lived. I did, and that is the difference between the point from which we view the subject.

It was not to hurt his feelings that I reported the conditions; it was not to offend him in the least that I objected to his bill; it was due to the fact that I deemed it my duty and supposed that he did not know or appreciate what the awful conditions were. These Indians are human beings, and I know he would have objected, as I did, if he really understood the conditions there, and would continue to do so until these people are given time to get upon their feet and are lifted along and helped as a human being ought to be helped until he can help himself.

The Government has had charge of that reservation since 1855, 60 years ago, and on that reservation lived the full-blooded Blackfeet Indians. I remember the Blackfeet as long back as 50 years ago, when I was a boy, and my people had to work their way across country in Montana at a time when a portion of Montana was part of the Territory of Oregon, of which my grandfather was the first Territorial governor, and where I was born before it became a State. They had to fight their way through that country, and the Blackfeet and the Crows fought to a finish. In those days they were men; they were and still are communists and kind to their friends and kindred.

On this same reservation I found that there were some Indians who had small herds of cattle and others now in the bread line who had had large herds a few years ago, which, however, had disappeared, for the reason that when one Blackfeet Indian owning cattle finds another Blackfeet Indian starving he goes out and kills his calf or his steer or his cow and gives of it to his neighbor to eat. The white man might take a lesson in kindliness of heart from the Blackfeet Indians. He is not a bad man who divides with you his last bite of food and does it with no hope of reward. That is what has become of the cattle of the Blackfeet Indians. They are eating one another's cattle, and many are poor because they have been feeding their starving friends.

Helen Clark, the well-known Blackfoot woman, who handled the adjustment of many of the allotments in Oklahoma, high bred, well educated, one of the finest women anywhere, told me that she had but about 40 head of cattle left, and in two years more or three years she would have none, because she was feeding them to her fellow tribesmen who were starving. She could not bear to see them go that way while she had a hoof left. It takes a good woman to do that. What an example they set for us!

So, I have protested against extravagant reclamation schemes upon the Blackfeet and other reservations, pledging millions of dollars' worth of the property to pay for them, with the Indian forced and driven down to live on the flat lands, where nothing but the grasshopper lives since the buffalo has gone, without a house or a plow or a hoe, and where the cold winter winds whistle and pierce, where an Indian never did live and never will live, without a dollar to raise a crop, without a 10-cent piece to build a house, put down there to lose his water rights and lands and to starve, when with his lands, which are valuable under an intelligent method of handling, he could be made self-supporting. The methods on which they are proceeding will make him a pauper, and the State of Montana will have to support those Indians just so sure as we pursue our present methods. That is my sincere belief.

In connection with the Crow leases, I think we are piling up a just claim which this Government will have to pay and which it ought to be made to pay.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. LANE. Just a moment. The Indian is not allowed to collect rentals for the use of his land, and is being kept out of the use of it.

Without prejudice to anyone, I have resisted these things; I have fought against them, and because I fought them I have brought down upon myself the insulting letter from the mixed-blood parasite on the full bloods which was put in here to-day by the Senator from Montana; but I say unto you now that so long as I stay in the Senate I am going to keep on protesting every time there is an opportunity, without fear of God, man, or devil, for I will not stand for that kind of a game.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I merely desire to say, lest there should be a misunderstanding, and for the information of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], that practically the first duty with which I charged myself when I came to Washington two years ago was to go and visit Secretary Lane and lay before him some of the conditions on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, which have aroused the interest of the Senator from Oregon, upon information coming to me from Miss Clark, whom the Senator has so justly extolled, and other people thoroughly informed about conditions on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation. I should not like it to be understood that the Senators from Montana have been either unacquainted with or regardless of conditions on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I ask permission to print in the RECORD my report to the joint commission and also the report of the inspectors as a part of my remarks. I hope there will be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., January 25, 1915.

The honorable the JOINT COMMISSION
TO INVESTIGATE INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I herewith respectfully submit for your consideration the following statement concerning some of the conditions which I found to exist on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana. This report is necessarily incomplete, for the reason that the limited time did not permit a full investigation of the affairs of that agency.

I arrived on the eastbound train at Browning late in the evening of November 26, 1914, and learning that a dance was being held in a public hall, I visited it and found many young Indians of both sexes there. In their personal appearance and conduct they were a fine body of young people.

The following four days were spent in traveling about the reserve and in consultation with any and all persons who desired to present their views concerning general conditions upon the reservation about which there has been much complaint, with their ideas regarding the changes necessary to improve the same.

Some eight or nine hundred thousand dollars have been expended upon the lands of these Indians to install reclamation projects, and being desirous of seeing what had been accomplished in this direction, I requested the superintendent (Maj. McFatridge) to accompany and show the same to me. Accompanied by him and some of the mixed-blood Blackfeet Indians, I was taken to the experimental farm, which is located 25 miles east of Browning, on the Seville unit, near which point many allotments have been made to the Indians. This is the land a portion of which it is desired by some to sell and throw open to white settlers, and concerning which a bill is now on the Senate Calendar granting the authority to so dispose of it. Many of the Indians are opposed to having such disposition made of those lands, and contend that their best interests will be sacrificed if such action is taken. In order to test the sentiment of the Indians respecting the same and to ascertain as nearly as I could what proportion of them desired a sale of the lands to be made at this time, I called for an expression of opinion from a body of them, consisting of about 300, who had gathered in council to consider the subject, and there were but 8 votes in favor of selling the land, and among these eight there were some who are said by other Indians to be either profiting from the use of Indian lands not their own or to be acting in harmony with the wishes of the whites who desire to secure such lands.

On my arrival at the experimental farm I found that the farmer, who is said to be an industrious man who would be capable of placing a large acreage of this land under cultivation for the Indians if given the help and means to do so, had himself cultivated a number of acres of ground and had successfully raised good potatoes, some turnips, as well as a crop of oats for hay, some flax, and in addition had a good start on a small tract with alfalfa, which seems to prove the contention that the land is fertile and will raise crops of certain hardy vegetables and grains when irrigated.

So far as I could see or ascertain, with one exception, no Indians or anyone else was engaged in farming or had entered upon their allotments upon this unit. The one exception to which my attention was called was where a white man, the husband of an Indian woman, had put in a crop of oats upon his wife's allotment and had miserably failed for the reason that he could not secure water until July, at which time it was too late to save his crop, which he lost, along with his labor and the seed used in planting it. I afterwards met this man and he told me that he was thoroughly discouraged and stated that the failure to secure the water necessary for his crop had left him financially broke. If his statement that the superintendent either wilfully or carelessly neglected to turn water into the ditch is true, he had just cause for complaint and his experience will serve to effectually discourage Indians from attempting to farm the lands under this and other reclamation projects on this reserve.

This project at this point, as a means by which Indians can earn a livelihood by farming the adjacent lands lying under it, will assuredly be a failure unless they are provided with means to not only put it into cultivation, with an assured supply of water, but in addition are provided with houses, agricultural implements, seeds, and a sufficient supply of provisions to last until they can secure return from their crops. My reason for making this statement is that the country is entirely bare of everything but grass, is swept by cold winds in the winter, and there is neither game nor fish upon which they could subsist. If the Indians possessed or were given cattle, sheep, or horses to graze upon the surrounding grass lands and used their allotments to raise grain, hay, or alfalfa hay for their stock, and vegetables for themselves and families, they probably could and would make a success if they industriously attended to their affairs. It would, however, be setting them to an impossible task and it would be too much to expect them to make a success of it if such was not done.

Why anyone should have inaugurated or authorized the large expenditure which has been incurred in constructing the reclamation project which I visited and others which I saw without having also and at the same time provided means for the Indians to profit by their use is a puzzle to me. The lands of the Seville unit are no doubt the most valuable of any on the reservation and could be made the basis for the self-support of many of the Blackfeet Indians for a long time to come if properly and wisely managed with that sole object in view. As it now is, however, the Indians can not use them and they do them no good, and because they do not use them their nonuse is used as an argument to secure the consent of Congress to sell them to white people.

The canal at Seville and in many other places is scraped out of loose and porous soil and much water will be wasted, enough perhaps for a few years and until the banks become settled "in place" to cause those located on the lower stretches of them to suffer from a shortage of water at the time they most need it. Upon the other hand the lands of others higher up on the projects will be inundated and their crops will be drowned out. There are many wooden gates and bulkheads along the lines which I saw and much money will have to be expended to replace them later along.

The experimental farm as an object lesson to the Indians has thus far proved to be of but little value to them for the reason that but a few of them live near it, and it is entirely away from the routes which they use in traveling back and forth to and from the agency, yet it has proven that the land is fertile.

I visited the Indians in the Heart Butte country. There are said to be about 400 Indians living in that section, which lies some 40 miles south of the agency at the foot of and near the Rocky Mountain Range. I found the Indians living in wretched single-room shacks located upon allotments along or near the banks of various streams which flow down from the near-by mountain range. The lands are mostly said to be unfit for diversified farming, and that while in some places some of the hardier vegetables could be raised, I was informed by those who are familiar with that district that frost late in the spring and early in the fall prevail to such an extent that even the raising of oats was uncertain, and I saw some fields where they had failed to mature from that cause.

The condition of the full-blood Indians in this district, many of whose homes I visited, was pitiable. I found families consisting of as many as six or eight persons living in single-room shacks, and in some instances the beds were made down on the floor, with insufficient bedding; such bedding as they did have frequently consisted of old rags and sacks or scraps of coverlets. In all cases they were dependent upon the aid of stoves in order to keep from freezing, and in consequence the cabins were superheated and insanitary. The Indians are not to blame for this latter condition, for the reason that the wind which sweeps down off the mountains in winter is piercing and cold, and in order to exist at all with an insufficient supply of clothing and a meager food supply it is necessary that they herd together and exclude the penetrating cold air as best they can. This condition is bad for them, and will result eventually in their entire destruction, no doubt, for the reason that if one member of the family becomes infected with tuberculosis or trachoma, both of which are quite common among them, or any other contagious disease, every condition is favorable for the disease to spread to all the members of the family and to other visiting Indians, the Indians being fond of visiting one another.

I attach herewith a photograph of the shack where eight Indians are living in this district at this time. It is illustrative of the type of house in which many of the full-blood Blackfeet Indians in this bleak region live. At this place I found that the mother of a family of six children had given birth to a baby the day before, and was up and around, but she fled to her bed of old rags on the floor on our arrival. There was no food in this house, and how the family sustained itself I do not know. Two of the smaller children, from 4 to 6 years of age, were almost entirely without clothing. One little boy had on nothing but a man's sack coat, unbuttoned from his neck to his bare feet. He had apparently been put into the coat in order that he might receive his guests with proper respect, and in the hurry some one had forgotten to button it, and he was but half covered, being in a state of nature on a front presentation from his chin to his toes, his little body being protected from the weather by nothing aside from a coating of accumulated dirt.

Near the foot of Heart Butte I found a subagent or farmer in charge of the station. At the time I was there he was engaged in building a barn to shelter the stallions which had been issued to improve the stock of horses owned by the Indians in that neighborhood. The wind was biting cold, and the barn had not been entirely inclosed, from lack of lumber, which had to be hauled 40 miles to complete the work. The stallions had run down badly from lack of shelter and insufficient food. It is but fair to state that 1,500 pounds of oats, the first supply they had received, had arrived a few days before I was there, and it is to be hoped that the condition of the unfortunate animals will improve. The attention of the agent and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been called to this condition, and I assume that hereafter an effort will be made to relieve the miserable situation, if it has not already been done.

The Indians living adjacent to this subagency in the small shacks heretofore described are poorly clad, have no means of livelihood, and are almost entirely dependent upon the Government for the rations on which they subsist. There is no game in this country, or at least not enough to afford them subsistence, and I was informed that to keep from starving they had killed and eaten all the prairie dogs which formerly had their habitat thereabout, and also had resorted to eating skunks. It is alleged by some Indians that they are intentionally being starved in order to compel them from necessity to consent to the sale of their irrigable lands.

I visited at the old agency, which is located some 10 or 12 miles from Heart Butte, between it and the agency, and found that rations were being issued to a number of full-blood Indians. I was informed by the subagent in charge that rations were issued in varying kinds and quantities, some receiving the so-called full ration and others only a portion of it. The day I was there he had run out of beef before completing the issue.

The ration being issued at that time consisted of 10 pounds of flour per month; 2½ pounds of meat per week for each person, the ration of meat being weighed as it is cut from the dressed carcass, the bone (about 30 per cent of the whole) being weighed in as a portion of the ration; three-fourths of a pound of beans per month (four-tenths of an ounce per day), with no bacon or salt pork to cook them with, and without which they are not palatable; 2½ pounds of sugar.

I submit for your inspection a full day's ration each of cooked beef and beans, in order that you may have food—for thought. The rations which were being issued were not enough to support life, and many Indians have no other means of support.

At one house I found a family of one man and five children with no food in the house except some meat composed of short ribs cut from the beef, with a soup bone, about 5 pounds net of beef for one week for this family.

I am relating these facts as I saw them for your information, without prejudice, that you may know the condition of these unfortunate wards of the Government. At the old agency I found that a school for the children was being conducted by an Indian teacher, a member of another tribe, who is said to be a good and competent man. He informed me that he did not have room for all of the children of school age in that vicinity. In this connection I would also say that I was informed by Supt. McFatridge that there were about 400 children of school age on the reservation that could not and did not attend school for the reason that there were not sufficient facilities in the way of schoolhouses or teachers to care for them.

The 400 Indians who live there and have selected their allotments in that country, it seems, have done so for the reason that it wa stheir old home, the only one they knew, and it was watered by streams which flow down from the mountains from which they could secure water for themselves and their horses and cattle. It was near the timber, and the agency for many years had also been located there. When the railroad was built the agency was removed to a point near its line on the unwatered, wind-swept plains, and these Indians, mostly full bloods, from lack of means to build homes or to move to the new location, were left behind and in a way became marooned and tied down, by circumstances over which they had no control, to their wretched present condition. The majority of the Indians I met could neither speak nor understand English, and hundreds of their children are being allowed to grow up without an education of any sort. Owing to this lack of knowledge the affairs of large numbers, if not nearly all, of the full bloods and their children are left at the mercy of the more shrewd half bloods or the whites, or both acting in conjunction, with results that are deplorable. They are unable, owing to their inability to speak English and from lack of education, to protect themselves from acts of injustice done them and are thus deprived of any remedy for their relief and have been left to rot through the incompetence or willful neglect of those in charge of them and their affairs. Many complaints of this condition have been made in their behalf by others to no effect. Indeed, it has heretofore and is now said to be unsafe for anyone who can be "reached" to present their claims or complaints to Congress. It is "cords to the wrists and gyves to the heels" for anyone who undertakes the thankless task, and such persons are pursued and harassed, and the sole effort which is afterwards made seems to be to cover up the evidence and put upon trial the complaining witness in place of trying to remedy the evil or punish those guilty of the wrongdoing.

While upon the reservation I had experience with these tactics. Having heard that a member of this commission was there to ascertain the conditions of their affairs, many Indians came to the agency and called upon me and gave expression to their views concerning the same. It was not long, however, until I was informed by some of them that the police of the agency had warned them against their doing so and had threatened to arrest some of them for attending illegal meetings. It was only after I warned some of the policemen that they were interfering with the work of the Congress and would be held responsible for the same that they desisted. Right foxy and well able to care for themselves are the gentry who are responsible for the gross mismanagement of the Blackfeet and other Indians.

This agency was established early in 1855, presumably and ostensibly for the purpose of supporting and civilizing these people, and thousands upon thousands of dollars have been appropriated by Congress and expended by the Indian Bureau for that purpose. At this time, after 60 years have elapsed, it has at last been ascertained and has been officially reported to the Indian Bureau that out of 950 children of school age 631 such children (two-thirds of the entire juvenile population) do not attend school, due to the lack of schools and teachers. Two out of every three children are being allowed to grow up in ignorance, while at the same time the tribe has about $200,000 to its credit in the Treasury and over $900,000 has been expended in installing reclamation projects which do not benefit them. Comment on such a state of affairs would be but idle waste of time. It is but fair to state that the Indian Bureau is scurrying about at this time in a hurried attempt to relieve some of the most patent of these evils.

No implements or seeds or teams, it is said, have been issued to these Indians with which to farm during all these years and their physical condition is worse than it was before the Government took charge of them.

A few of the full-blood Indians have small herds of cattle, but these are diminishing rapidly, for the reason that they are killing them off to feed their starving neighbors, it being the custom with them to divide their food to the last mouthful with their hungry neighbors. The result of this generous and kindly conduct on their part, I was informed, has been that full-blood Indians, some of whom a few years ago had fine herds of cattle, are now without any and are in their turn in the bread line and living upon the charity of their neighbors, eked out by the scanty rations issued to them by the Government. Others who still possess a few head of cattle are parting with them for the same purpose and in a few years will also be without any.

The effects of a starvation diet upon these and other Indians, and the fact that they have been starved in the past and are still being starved, has been called to the attention of this commission and to the Indian Bureau many times in the past. It is well authenticated and can be established beyond a question of doubt to any fair-minded person that starvation is the primary though indirect cause of many deaths among them. This not only should not be, but is due to either gross carelessness and a lack of official fidelity to a sacred trust or something worse, and proceedings before the Department of Justice should be invoked if it is not remedied.

In a general way it may be stated that that portion of the Blackfoot Agency lying contiguous to the mountains near Heart Butte is better adapted for grazing than any other purpose. This also applies to the entire reservation. The lands in the eastern portion of the reservation under the reclamation project, however, if irrigated, would no doubt raise hardy vegetables, such as sugar beets, or some other farm product of that kind. I believe that crops of the hardier vegetables and perhaps of the hardier grains can be raised upon it; this conclusion is based upon what I saw at the experimental farm.

The last day of my stay the Indians held a council, at which there were some 200 or 300 Indians present, and upon a vote being taken all but 8 persons decided not to sell any of their lands which lie under the reclamation projects at the present time, for the reason that they did not consider that they would receive a price equivalent to its value, and for the further reason that if these lands passed out of their hands that there were not sufficient other lands which could be used to raise feed for the cattle. I am of the same opinion myself and consider the lands under the reclamation scheme, with the exception of small isolated and scattered tracts, to be the most valuable lands the Indians possess, and the only lands of much value for anything but grazing purposes. The lands on the reservation are mostly grasslands and are well suited for raising horses and cattle and sheep, all of which have been and are now being raised there successfully. In order to make a success of stock raising, however, as a means of permanent support to the Indians, it is incumbent upon the Government, and in my opinion it is its sacred duty, to ascertain whether or not alfalfa can be raised successfully under the reclamation schemes and, if so, to plant it and raise sufficient feed of that or some other sort to winter stock which should be issued to the Indians. If it is proved that the lands will raise such crops it is idle to say that the Government can not do so. The farmers who have charge of the experimental and other farms, if given the help necessary, which can be readily obtained from among the Indians themselves, with proper agricultural implements could easily seed a large body of land to alfalfa or oats sufficient to insure the feeding of large herds of such stock.

The condition of the full-blood Indians is deplorable, and if the present system is not improved it seems to be hopeless. The mixed-blood Indians in some instances are said to be doing fairly well. There is, however, no evidence of general prosperity among the Indians. Complaint is made that many Cree Indians have come upon the reserve from Canada and are being issued rations the same as full-blood Blackfeet Indians, thus depleting their supply, and are also allowed to use the stallions which have been purchased for the benefit of the Blackfeet Indians and are accorded many other privileges which are denied to the full-blooded Blackfeet Indians.

If the condition of the Blackfeet Indians at this time is to be taken as an index of the character of trusteeship which the Government imposes upon other Indians, the work has been a failure. The spectacle is a depressing one and calls not only for immediate relief but for an entire and permanent change in the manner of handling their affairs.

Many complaints were made to me of specific instances of injustice, but in all such cases I advised that they be written out and sworn to and submitted to this commission. Instances were cited to me where thrifty part-blood Indians were defrauding the full-blood Indians in many ways, such as underpaying them for use of their allotments, infringing on the community lands, etc. I found one Indian, with his wife and two small children, who for months had been living upon potatoes and flour while at the same time the Indian Department owed him $60, the claim for which was not disputed, for work done for that department. This is but a sample of the grievances of which they justly complain.

One of the Government employees, a white man, informed me that their condition was so pitiful and they were so helpless that he spent half his wages in buying provisions for them.

Upon inquiry I was informed by some of the Indians that the superintendent had never visited their homes to investigate their conditions of living, and not more often than once a year had he even ridden through the country in which they lived.

I visited the Cut Bank boarding school for Indian children of both sexes. The food supply the day I was there seemed to be sufficient and of good quality. Beds and bedding were mostly clean and seemed ample. Many little children, however, wearing old and worn-out shoes, and their bare feet were to be seen through the holes in them. Some shoes had only a part of a sole upon them. This condition was inexcusable.

The lavatory in the boys' department, owing to neglected repairs to waste pipes, gave out an intolerable odor. With a good herd of about a dozen cows, less than 2 gallons of milk a day was being obtained. This is due to bad management, but is indicative of the methods which generally prevail on this reservation.

I submit for your perusal, but not for the record, as I have received no authority to place it there, a letter from a former employee on that reserve, which calls attention to some of the conditions on the reservation which bear out the assertions made by others. This employee was dismissed from the service, presumably for "kicking against the pricks."

In regard to this method of retaliation upon those who complain, I would say that it is difficult to ascertain facts in regard to many abuses for the reason that the Indians fear that they will be subjected to cruel treatment if they dare to make such complaints. They claim that they are afterwards blacklisted and discriminated against by the officials over them if they do so.

Respectfully submitted.

REPORT OF INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS OF THE BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

[E. B. Linnen, chief inspector; F. S. Cook, special agent, Jan. 9, 1915.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 9, 1915.

Hon. CATO SELLS,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: We have the honor to report that in conformity with your verbal instructions we have made an investigation of affairs on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, and now have the honor to report as follows:

Said reservation contains an area of 1,525,000 acres of land, which is composed mostly of rocky, rolling prairie land. There are 2,641 Blackfeet Indians and 620 heads of families. Allotments have been made to all Indians on said reservation up to June 5, 1912, but no allotment schedule has yet been approved and no trust patents issued to any of these Indians. Three hundred and twenty acres have been allotted to each Indian.

The northern boundary of said reservation is about 58 miles in length, the east boundary 60 miles, the west boundary about 60 miles, and the south boundary from 30 to 35 miles. Of the 2,638 allotments on said reservation, approximately 750 of same are fenced in whole or in part.

The full-blood population of said reservation comprises 541 males and 648 females, a total of 1,189; the half bloods or more number 592 males and 527 females, or a total of 1,117; of less than one-half blood there are 182 males and 153 females, a total of 335, or a total of 2,641 Indians on this reservation.

The number of acres allotted is 844,160. The number acres of timberland is 27,674. The agency, school, and mission reservation comprises 2,262 acres. The number of acres allotted to Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas is 8,080, and the number of acres unallotted is 642,824, making a total acreage of 1,525,000 acres.

About 4,000 acres of the irrigable lands are on the proposed Cut Bank unit, upon which no work of construction has been begun, and consequently the Indians will be unable to use their allotments for some time on account of not having water for their lands.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

The general conditions as at present obtaining upon this reservation are very far from being satisfactory. There is but very little farming being done on said reservation, and but few gardens of any consequence have been planted. Consequently, the Indians have no potatoes or other vegetables to provide for their needs and the needs of their families during the winter months.

As a matter of fact, this is not what can be properly classed as an agricultural country, as there are killing frosts almost every month in the year, and but few crops are maturing in this rigorous climate.

The growing season is very short and irregular. There was a snowfall of 11 inches on the 22d day of August during the year 1911, and frosts generally occur during the month of June.

This is a grazing country, and stock does exceptionally well upon the nutritious grasses. The winter season is long and severe, and a ton and a half to two tons of hay per animal is needed to carry them through the winter.

The live stock has been steadily decreasing on said reservation, as shown by statistics taken from the live-stock records of the Blackfeet Reservation. There has been a decrease of about 4,000 head of cattle since the year 1911, and at the present time there are but about 11,200 head of cattle belonging to the Indians on said reservation. The number of horses belonging to the Indians is about 9,282.

This decrease in cattle is largely due to the generous issuing of permits to sell their cattle and to sell their she stock, the calves and yearlings, which is unwise and against the best interests of the Indians.

Our investigation showed that the benefits derived by the Indians from the farmers stationed on said reservation were practically worthless. No effort has been made to teach the Indians to farm, and no seeds or farming implements have been furnished for the Indians.

The farmers stationed at the various districts farmed little patches and did not raise enough vegetables or crop to supply the needs of themselves or families and the Government teams furnished them.

The garden crops and vegetables which they raised they have used for their own benefit, and the oat and grain crop raised was cut to provide hay for their teams.

These farmers state that they have had no instructions from the superintendent to go among the Indians and encourage them to plow their lands and raise crops and grain; that they have not been furnished with the necessary farming implements; and that they have not been furnished with cereal or garden seeds for distribution to the Indians.

Each of the farmers admitted that this is not a farming country, and that practically all of the white men and half-breeds who have attempted to farm have made a failure of same, and that by reason of the climatic conditions it is almost useless to attempt to farm.

They also stated that during the past year there was only approximately 1,000 acres in cultivation on said reservation. This includes irrigable land as well as the nonirrigable.

There has been expended up to October 31, 1914, the sum of $942,413.58 on the Blackfeet Reservation irrigation project out of the tribal funds, and it has been estimated by the Reclamation Service that $2,000,000 additional will be required to complete this irrigation project.

The benefits derived by the Indians from this large expenditure of money have been practically nil. There are not to exceed 30 or 40 Indians attempting to farm under this whole project, and some of these have only small garden patches.

The majority of those who are attempting to farm under this irrigation system are squaw men or half bloods, and several whom we interviewed advised us that they do not believe that farming on said reservation is practicable.

As a matter of fact, an Indian or white man would need to expend some two or three thousand dollars on each irrigable allotment in the fencing of same, the building of a house, barn, a well and breaking the land before he could expect any returns.

The Indians have not the means to do this, and with the climatic conditions as herein outlined it is exceedingly doubtful whether any great amount of this land which can be irrigated will ever be successfully farmed, and it will be difficult to persuade the Indians to live on the irrigable portion of their allotments.

The majority of the full bloods live in the Heart Butte district, on the southern part of the reservation, about 35 miles distant from the agency proper at Browning, Mont.

These Indians live in little, poor, one-room log houses, and the majority of them are very poor and in destitute circumstances, and a large majority of them will have to receive rations during the present winter to prevent hunger and suffering.

No ration station has been provided in this district, which was so badly needed, and no provision has been made to alleviate the suffering. The farmers and other Government employees had not made a house-to-house canvass as heretofore directed, and the neglect to supply rations and distribute them to the needy has caused some suffering.

This we promptly remedied; a proper canvass made to ascertain what Indians were in want, and rations hauled to each district with instructions to the farmer in charge to distribute them promptly to the needy ones and relieve their hunger and distress.

Our visit to the boarding school, which is located about 6 miles northeast of the agency on Cut Bank Creek, disclosed a deplorable condition of affairs at said school. The whole plant had been allowed to run down, and there was no system, method, or discipline. There was no head to said school, the principal having been removed some time ago, and the whole plant showed neglect and the need of a strong guiding hand.

During our visit the school was closed down because the flues in the boiler had been burned out by reason of neglect. The lavatories in the boys' dormitory could not be used and were in a very insanitary condition, and the whole dormitory presented a very bad appearance. While the girls' dormitory was in a better condition, there was necessity for many improvements.

The pupils complained that they did not have enough bedding; that they were not properly supplied with heavy underwear, stockings, shoes, overshoes, gloves or mittens, caps, warm skirts, night dresses, and that there were not enough towels.

Some of the tableware was old, chipped, cracked, unsightly, and insanitary porcelain ware which should have been condemned long ago.

A fine dairy herd of Holstein cows had been practically ruined by neglect, and they were housed in an old dirty stable which was not even provided with windows, and there was no supervision in the care or milking of same by the Indian boy pupils. The herd of 20 fine Holsteins was practically dried up and the 7 being milked were giving only about 1½ gallons of milk per day.

This herd was dirty and filthy and we had to condemn one cow. The only feed for these animals was swamp hay.

The engine or pump house is provided with a gasoline engine, which is used to pump the water from the well to the reservoir on the hill above the school. The engine room was exceedingly dirty and filthy, the floor covered with refuse, coal, and water.

This pump house is also provided with a coal stove to heat same through the winter months, and within 8 or 10 feet of which was a 52-gallon tank of gasoline. We immediately instructed the engineer to remove this gasoline, which he stated he would do at once.

Suffice to say he did not obey these instructions, and several days later we learned that there was an explosion of this gasoline in said pump house, and one of the schoolboys was quite badly injured by reason of same.

The pupils complained that they did not have enough to eat at times, and that they did not have potatoes to eat more than once or twice each week. We found that there were some 600 bushels of potatoes in a root cellar about 300 yards distant, and all that was necessary was for some of these potatoes to be carted over to the kitchen. Suffice to say this whole plant showed absolute neglect and the want of a head.

In the school commissary we found but very few articles, and were informed that practically all of the school supplies were at the agency warehouse.

Upon our return to the agency we found a large amount of woolen underwear, stockings, shoes, overshoes, mittens, gloves, caps, hoods, woolen skirts, shawls, blankets, canton flannel, dress goods, handkerchiefs, dishes, oil for the floors, and practically all of the numerous articles which were needed so badly at the said school.

We immediately had these articles loaded on several wagons and taken to said school, with instructions to properly dispense them to these pupils. This neglect we deem quite inexcusable.

The baker at said school did not even have any firewood with which to heat her ovens. In the sewing room they did not have any needles, buttons, or thread, although in the warehouse at the agency we found a great abundance of these and other articles.

The sanitary condition of the pupils, chiefly the boys, was very poor as regards personal cleanliness. They were untidy as to their clothes and insufficiently bathed. Ninety-one storm windows were not put on the buildings, and the grounds around the buildings were littered with refuse, and piles of coal and ashes were dumped at convenient points. About 47 per cent of the scholars have eye irritation.

We received numerous complaints from the Indians to the effect that they had not been paid for wood and hay which they had sold to the agency and delivered at the various farming stations, some of these items dating back two or three years.

Many of the Indians also complained that they had not been paid for stock which had been killed by the Great Northern Railroad, and that they had been reporting the loss of this stock to the superintendent for several years past, but could get no satisfaction.

We found that permits were being issued promiscuously to the Indians for the sale of their live stock, cattle, and horses, and that they had been permitted to sell large numbers of their she stock, calves, and yearlings, against the best interests of the Indians.

Upon checking over the agency live-stock records we found that between June 24, 1912, and December 22, 1914, permits had been issued to sell 2,079 cows and 111 calves, so that it is no wonder that the live stock has been decreasing.

In the agency office we found no system, method, or discipline, and the office work in arrears. Some of the letters and data which we inquired for could not be located, and there was no proper system for filing and handling the mail.

We found that the superintendent had been absent from the reservation about one-third of the time, engaged in various other duties; that the office force had not been sufficient and competent, and that the superintendent rarely ever visited the various stations on the reservation; that he had visited but few of the Indian homes, and that he did not know the actual condition of his Indians.

Until just recently there had been no doctor visit the full-blood Indians in the Heart Butte district for about a year, and there is no proper communication with this district, which is badly needed.

One day school which we visited at old agency is being conducted in an old dilapidated log building, and there is much need for a new day school building at this point. There is also necessity for a new day school in the Heart Butte district, where there are some 66 pupils of school age within a radius of 5 miles from the subagency. These are practically all full-blood children.

From the foregoing it may be observed that the conditions on said reservation, as we found them, are deplorable.

STOCK RAISING.

This is a good reservation for the raising of live stock, which we believe to be the best and main industry and the one best suited to the Indians of this reservation.

Said reservation has a carrying capacity for many more cattle and horses than occupy same at the present time.

As heretofore stated, there are but about 11,200 head of cattle belonging to Indians on said reservation, and this number has been steadily decreasing by reason of permits having been issued promiscuously to the Indians to sell their she stock and young stock.

During the fiscal year 1911, 6,598 head of Indian cattle were sold; during the fiscal year 1912, 8,286 head of Indian cattle were sold under permit, of which number 3,440 were cows and 390 were calves. During the fiscal year 1913, 3,638 head of Indian cattle were sold, of which number 1,017 were cows; during the fiscal year 1914, 2,427 head were sold, of which 976 were cows. In addition to this number of cattle sold, some four or five hundred head were slaughtered each year under permits.

There are 10 permittees grazing stock on said reservation, said permittees running 4,462 head of cattle and 339 head of horses, at the rate of $2 per head per annum.

Of the 44 stallions purchased on said reservation, only 5 had been assigned to full bloods, 3 are stationed with the agency farmer at Heart Butte, 3 with the agency farmer at old agency, and 3 at the agency barn at Browning.

Of the 100 bulls placed on said reservation for distribution to Indians only 27 have been assigned to full bloods.

The number of heads of families owning cattle is 222; the number of individual Indians owning cattle is 888. The number of heads of families owning horses is 343, and the number of individual Indians owning horses is 1,372.

Of the total number of Indians owning cattle on said reservation 23 per cent are full bloods and 77 per cent mixed bloods, while of the total number of Indians owning horses 52 per cent are full bloods and 48 per cent mixed bloods.

There are a number of intelligent mixed-blood Indians who are engaged in stock business and who are making a success of same. Some of these men have heretofore tried farming and stated to us that they got about one crop out of seven. This same ratio was confirmed by white men who have attempted farming on this reservation, and the consensus of opinion of all persons familiar with conditions on said reservation is that this is primarily a stock country.

It has been a great mistake to permit the Indians to dispose of their she stock and their young stock and to depreciate their cattle herds on said reservation. In many instances an Indian who has but a few head of cattle has received permission to dispose of same and has sold them to the Indian traders or half bloods, who make a business of buying their stock and who afterwards disposed of them at a profit.

We are firmly of the opinion that the stock industry should be paramount on this reservation and that this stock industry has not heretofore been properly managed.

We believe that if a herd of cattle were placed on this reservation, the same as on the Crow, and properly handled and safeguarded, that in time these Indians would become self-sustaining.

In our various trips over the reservation we discovered large herds of horses but very few cattle on the range, and if this condition were reversed we believe it would be in the best interest of the Indians.

AGRICULTURE.

As heretofore stated, we believe that this reservation is best adapted for stock raising, and it is doubtful if farming will ever be made a success on this reservation. There are not to exceed 40 Indians who are now engaged in farming on this reservation or in the raising of garden patches of vegetables.

The Indians have not been properly encouraged to farm or in planting their crops, and they have not been furnished with seeds or given farming machinery with which to put in crops, and the farmers have not gone among the Indians to encourage them in farming.

Arthur J. Crim, the farmer located in the Heart Butte district, where the full bloods are located, has been stationed there for a little over a year.

He states that when he was sent there by the superintendent his instructions were: "I will send you over some lumber to build you a little warehouse on the end of your cabin to store supplies in, so you will have something to issue to the old people or the Indians."

He states that the superintendent gave him absolutely no instructions with relation to farming in his district or in assisting the Indians, except: "He told me I was expected to look after the whisky business there."

He states that during the spring of last year he started to build a dwelling house, a commissary, a large horse barn, a small horse barn, and a wagon shed; that he and various Indian employees got out the logs and put them up; that no lumber or shingles, doors or windows, or hardware were ever furnished him with which to complete these buildings. He states that he never had any rations to distribute among the Indians and was never furnished with any seed wheat, oats, barley, or vegetable seeds for this purpose.

He further stated that he was never furnished with farming implements and that he did not go out among the Indians to assist them in farming or in the planting of their crops. He did encourage some of the Indians to plow their ground, but that some of the ground was not planted because they did not have garden seeds.

There are 90 families in this district, practically all full bloods, comprising 465 Indians, and they are the poorest Indians on the reservation.

He states that the superintendent did not furnish him with a plow, harrow, or any other farming implements for the little farming which he did at his station, and that he had to borrow a plow and a harrow to do what little work he did. He states that the physician has visited his station once during the past six months.

We found this farmer and his wife living in a little log house belonging to an Indian by the name of Margaret Marceau, and he has occupied the house and barn of this Indian for a year and has paid no rent.

The only means of livelihood the Indians have in this district is that during the summer months some of them have worked on the irrigation ditches for the Reclamation Service.

This farmer stated that upon one occasion when he complained of the destitute circumstances of the Indians, Supt. McFatridge stated: "Let them go to the devil if they can't save their money."

There were four stallions stationed at this point, and just prior to our arrival a rough board roof had been placed on the log building constructed for them. Prior to this time these horses had stood out through heavy storms with the snow 3½ feet deep.

We found that there were no rations at said station and no warehouse within which to store rations. We at once ordered lumber, windows, doors, nails, and other hardware and building materials sent out from the agency, and also rations for the needy Indians. Also rations were sent to this station for the Indians to work for.

There are 66 children of school age in this district, and a day school should be promptly supplied at this point.

There is no means of prompt communication with this point, as there has been no telephone line constructed, although poles and wire have been purchased and on hand for some time. This makes it very inconvenient, as there is no doctor or field matron at this point.

Your attention is invited to the fact that this farmer, Crim, and his wife, have purchased some live stock from Indians. They purchased two head of horses or ponies, five head of cattle, some of which were calves, and without a permit, and afterwards disposed of four of these cattle at a profit.

This dealing in Indian live stock by employees is prohibited, and we have the honor to recommend that you take such action in the premises as you deem warranted.

We took the affidavit of Mr. Crim, which we inclose herewith and marked "Exhibit A," and to which your attention is respectfully invited.

Mr. W. H. Soedt is the farmer stationed at Seville in the irrigation district, about 35 miles east of the agency. He has been at said station nearly three years.

He is provided with a four-room house, barn, team, harness, wagon, plow, harrow, rake and a mower. No seeds of any kind have ever been furnished him for distribution among the Indians.

During last season he farmed 26 acres under the ditch and raised some oats, barley, flax, alfalfa, timothy, potatoes, and parsnips. He raised 4 tons of alfalfa on 7 acres, and 55 sacks of potatoes.

There are no full-blood Indians in this district, and this farm might be properly called a demonstration farm to show the Indians that crops would grow.

Supt. McFatridge visited his station twice during the summer of 1913 and twice during the present season. This farmer stated that the superintendent instructed him to see that the Indians farmed, but there are no Indians in his district and his nearest neighbor is 5 miles distant.

About 400 acres were planted in said irrigated district during the present season.

He says that the season is very irregular, but he believes that small grain would grow in that section. The soil is very gravelly, red clay, and very sticky when wet. Plows must be sharpened each day, as the land is very rocky.

This farmer frankly admits that he has not made a success of farming in that district, although he has worked hard. He realizes that he has not accomplished anything beneficial to the Indians, and is surprised that he has been allowed to continue to farm.

Albert Acord is the farmer in the old agency district, in which there are about 300 families and about 800 Indians.

He says that a few of the Indians are farming small patches, mostly gardens; that a few have in from 25 to 40 acres, and that the superintendent has visited his district twice since last March, for about half a day.

He has no list of the Indians in his district, nor of the needy Indians, and no farming implements have been furnished for distribution among the Indians, except in one or two instances. He believes that alfalfa could be successfully raised in the irrigated portion of his district.

No doctor has been stationed there, and there is no house for one to live in. No field matron's quarters or any field matron has ever been supplied.

The old school building at this point is in very poor condition. One hundred and forty-five Indians in this district have been drawing rations, and we understand that if the winter is severe probably 20 more should be put on the ration list.

No flour has been furnished for rations since last spring and there has been a shortage in rations since last June. No beef is furnished these Indians for rations and very few of them in this district have raised any vegetables or have anything for the winter.

This farmer raised a fairly good garden last year, but is receiving the benefits for himself and family.

In other words, he is using the vegetables from the Government farm for his own family use.

Supt. McFatridge says that he has but few requests from the Indians for the irrigable lands and that the Indians do not want these lands Only about 12 families are making their homes on the irrigable lands, and only about two or three of these families are full bloods. That is in what is known as the Two Medicine irrigation project.

There are 25 or 30 Indian families living on or adjacent to the irrigable lands on Badger Creek, practically all of whom are full bloods, and some 12 or 15 families, two-thirds of whom are full bloods, are living on Two Medicine Creek.

Supt. McFatridge also states that his son has not purchased any hides from Indians since the winter of 1911, at which time quite a few of the cattle died. As heretofore stated, some $942,413.68 of the tribal funds have been expended on the Indian irrigation project on said reservation to date, and it is estimated that an additional $2,000,000 will be required to complete these various projects. It is shown that but very little benefit has so far accrued to the Indians from this large expenditure of money.

These Indians are not an agricultural people but are a stock raising people, and it is extremely doubtful that any great number of these Indians could ever be induced to engage in farming.

By reason of the high altitude and the killing frosts which occur almost every month in the year, farming has not been a success for those who have engaged in same. About one crop out of every seven has been the result of those who have attempted farming on this reservation.

Many of these Indians have 40-acre tracts of land in the irrigable district, but they can not be induced to live on same; and, indeed, very few of them have the means necessary to do so.

We estimate that at the least calculation it would require from two to three thousand dollars to establish a residence on one of these irrigable allotments; to fence and break the same, to build a house and barn, a well, etc., and to purchase a team and farming implements necessary to carry one through a farming season. Sufficient means would also be necessary to sustain themselves, their families, and their stock until a crop could be raised.

At the agency we found a steam plow which cost about $3,393, and which has been of very little use thus far. The maintenance cost has been very large and during the past two or three years it has been used to plow possibly 1,000 acres. The cost of upkeep of this engine, the cost of fuel and labor, has been excessive, and the superintendent himself admits that same has not been a success.

From the foregoing it will be observed that successful farming has never been carried on on said reservation and it is doubtful if same will prove successful even in the irrigable section where so large an outlay has been made.

We can not but believe that it would be unwise to expend any further great amount of these tribal funds upon this irrigation project, because of the fact that the Indians are not receiving the benefit, and we do not believe that the Indians will ever reap any great benefit from this large outlay of money.

We called upon the project manager, Mr. C. J. Moody, at Browning, Mont., to furnish us with data and information relative to the cost of this irrigation project on the Blackfeet Reservation, which he kindly did, and which we herewith inclose for your information, together with blue print showing the various projects, which we mark "Exhibit B."

This data also gives the number of Indians employed on this irrigation work in various capacities, and shows the amount of money which has been paid to Indians for hauling supplies, etc. This is the only real benefit derived by these Indians from this project.

SCHOOLS.

The boarding school is located on Cut Bank Creek, about 6 miles northeast of the agency. This plant accommodates about 150 pupils, and during our visit there were 78 girls and 68 boys in attendance.

The plant consists of two two-story brick dormitory buildings, one one-story brick school building, one two-story employees' quarters, a pump house, and a laundry building.

We found this plant to be in a very run-down and dilapidated condition. There was no principal at said school, quite a few temporary employees; no one in charge or seeming to care what happened. There was no system, method, or discipline, and every employee seemed to be doing about as they saw fit.

During our visit the school was closed because of lack of heat, the flues in the boiler having been burned out because of neglect. The boys' dormitory building was dirty and insanitary, the toilets out of use awaiting repairs, and the pupils were personally unclean, especially the boys.

The pupils were untidy as regards to the care of their hair, teeth, hands, and clothing, lax in discipline, and with a growing spirit of insubordination.

The buildings were unclean and there was irregularity at to the heating. Ninety-one storm doors and windows had not been put on the buildings, and many of them were unserviceable for want of glass. Some of the bed linen was very unclean.

The children complained that they did not have enough to eat; that they did not have sufficient blankets and slept cold, and there was a deficiency in such supplies as towels, stockings, underwear, shoes, overshoes, night dresses, handkerchiefs, gloves, skirts, aprons, etc.

The engine room was dirty and unkempt; the machinery in need of repair; a coal heating stove in the engine room and a tank of gasoline within 8 or 10 feet of same. This later exploded, although we had ordered same removed. The engineer was incompetent. The fire hydrants were frozen up so that there was no fire protection. The floors in the various buildings were badly in need of oiling, although there was plenty of oil in the warehouse at the agency.

There was one root cellar without any storm door and the vegetables therein were frozen. There are no wards provided for sick pupils, and no towels were issued to the pupils for two days. The only bath towels in use were those cut from old bedspreads. The toilets which are not in use have been in a very filthy condition.

The temporary disciplinarian is an Indian boy, who has no control over the boy pupils. There was no flag at either the school or the agency during the whole of our stay.

The laundry is a one-story brick building, without any drier, and the laundress runs the laundry to suit her fancy or as often as she sees fit.

Each building is heated by a separate heating plant and lighted by acetylene gas. The grounds are strewn over with ashes, tin cans, and other refuse dumped in the most convenient places.

Many of the pupils complained that they were not getting enough to eat, and that they did not have enough bread. Instead of serving the bread upon plates on the table, two small pieces of bread were placed at each pupil's plate.

Some of the tableware, especially the pitchers, was unsightly and insanitary, old, chipped, and cracked porcelain ware, although there were plenty of dishes in the commissary at the agency.

The baker did not have wood with which to heat the ovens, and the seamstress did not have thread, buttons, or needles, although the agency warehouse was well supplied with same.

The nice dairy herd of Holsteins has been neglected, and the Indian boys permitted to milk and care for same without any supervision; consequently these cows are about dried up and ruined. From the 7 cows being milked, from 4 to 8 quarts was the daily supply, and about half of this milk was sent to Supt. McFatridge almost daily. The only feed provided for this dairy herd is swamp hay. It is underfed, carelessly managed, and improperly housed, being in an old, leaky barn without windows, and the stock shivering during the inclement weather. The sanitary condition of the building is very bad.

There were but 3 hogs at said school, although the refuse from the table would care for from 15 to 20 very readily, and we consider that no better investment could be made around a plant of this kind than raising sufficient hogs to consume the refuse from the table.

The milk was not sufficient to supply the wants of the children in any degree.

The kitchen and the bakery were being kept clean and neat.

The one-story brick commissary was untidy and unclean, and nothing in order in same. Meat choppings were all over the floor, and although the commissary is a good one and sufficient to accommodate the supplies for the school, there were practically no school supplies there, although in the commissary at the agency there were plenty of shoes, overshoes, underwear, gloves, mittens, caps, hoods, muslin toweling, dress goods, handkerchiefs, and almost all of the articles which were so badly needed at this school. We had all supplies which were available sent to the school at once.

There can be no excuse for this neglect.

The small girls' playroom, in the dormitory, needs some chairs and benches furnished, and the parlor for the larger girls should be provided with seats and other accommodations. There were no books, magazines, games, or needlework of any kind to interest and keep these girl pupils happy and contented during the winter months.

A large coffee urn and large cooking utensils are badly needed at this school, as well as a large bread box in which to keep the loaves of bread.

There was a frame building for the 6 horses at this school, but no oats had been furnished since last July until about a week prior to our visit.

The employees at the school complained that they were obliged to pay $50 for a cook stove for their mess house.

During our visit 19 of the larger girl pupils asked permission to state their grievances to us, and their complaint was that they did not get enough to eat; that the coffee was very poor; that they did not have milk for same or for the oatmeal; that they had only butter about once a month; that they had no sugar for their coffee; that the food was improperly cooked, and that they often left the table hungry.

They stated that the dormitory was not warm enough, and that they slept cold because they did not have enough blankets; that their night dresses were changed only once a month, and that they did not have winter underwear, handkerchiefs, stockings, shoes, overshoes, and that some of their feet were on the ground.

They also stated that they had no jackets, toothbrushes, and not enough towels, and that the matron did not treat them kindly nor considerately; that she made fun of their appearances and called the girls "mules" and "devils," and struck some of the small girls in the face. They stated that in bathing once a week it was very cold.

They said that they had no books or magazines to read; that there was not half enough chairs in the sitting room, and complained bitterly of their treatment by the matron, Miss Emma A. Walters.

We subsequently learned that this matron had disciplined some of these girls, because they had talked with us, although we advised her that it was their privilege and that she must not do so.

We saw enough to convince us that this matron is unkind and unsympathetic toward these girls, with no motherly instinct, and by reason of her continuous faultfinding with the other employees at said school and creating strife and dissension, and because of her treatment of the girl pupils, we believe it is in the best interest of the service that she be promptly transferred or dismissed. She is in bad health, cranky, and disagreeable, and can not accomplish good work.

A physician by the name of Eugene W. Hill has recently been assigned to said school, whom we found to be a cultured, pleasant gentleman, and whom we believe, with proper encouragement, will perform good work there. Upon our suggestion he made a report on the conditions as he found them to exist at said school, and this report we inclose herewith for your information, and mark same as "Exhibit C."

There are but two day schools on this reservation and we visited one of them at old agency.

This Badger Creek day school was being conducted in an old dilapidated log house, which was a part of the original agency building, and is some 35 or 40 years old.

The teacher and housekeeper were doing the best they could with the means provided, and there were 23 Indian pupils in attendance. The children at this school are provided with a noonday meal.

A new day-school building is badly needed at this point, and also there should be a day school provided in the Heart Butte district.

There are 955 children of school age, between the ages of 5 and 18 years, on said reservation, of which number 75 boys and 81 girls are attending the boarding and day schools.

Eight boys and 13 girls have been transferred to other Government schools; 25 boys and 29 girls are in the mission school; 42 boys and 43 girls attend the public schools; 2 boys and 6 girls attend private schools; and there are 631 children of school age on said reservation who do not attend any school. Of this number, 357 are boys and 274 are girls, all between the ages of 5 and 18 years.

Two teachers are provided for this school—one, a principal, at $90 per month, and a primary teacher at $75 per month. The janitor is paid a salary of $40 per month, and the fuel amounts to $15 per month, making a total of $220 per month to maintain this school.

The taxes are insufficient to provide this sum for a school term of nine months, and the Government has heretofore supplied one of the teachers. Some difficulty arose, however, and it became unsatisfactory to the school directors.

No Government teacher has been provided this year, although we understand that authority has been granted for such purpose. The fact is that the school directors and the superintendent of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation can not get along harmoniously.

Inasmuch as the large majority of the children attending this school are Indian children, it would seem but just and right that the Government pay its proportionate cost of the upkeep of said school.

We learned that in one of the day schools on said reservation, which we did not visit, only five or six pupils were in attendance, and therefore it would seem to us that said school should be abolished.

The Holy Family Mission School, which is conducted by the Catholic Church on said reservation, is about 14 miles southeast of the agency.

We visited this mission school and found that there were 54 Indian girl pupils and 52 Indian boy pupils in attendance at said school, ranging in age from 7 to 17 years. This school is presided over by four sisters of charity, two teachers, and two priests. No payments are made by the Government for the care of these children, except that rations are furnished monthly.

We found this school to be clean and sanitary, and the children appeared to be well fed, well clothed, and all conditions looked favorable.

Of the pupils attending said mission school, 21 boys and 25 girls are Chippewa Piegans, members of Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas.

Complaint has been made by some of the Blackfeet Indians to the effect that these Chippewas are being allowed to attend this school and furnished with rations which were paid for them from their tribal funds, and that the Blackfeet children could not attend this school on account of the accommodations.

Public school district No. 9 is located on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the town of Browning, Mont.

The funds with which to conduct said school are raised by taxes which are paid largely by the Indian traders on the reservation, and this school is maintained for the benefit of the white and Indian children in the vicinity of the town of Browning. During our visit there were 69 Indian children and 7 white children attending said public school.

In this connection we file a letter from Mr. P. A. Peterson, clerk of the school board, dated Browning, December 15, 1914, which letter we mark "Exhibit D."

AGENCY.

The agency proper on this reservation is located near the town site of Browning, Mont., 2 miles from the railroad station.

The main office building is a large two-story frame building which was at one time used as a hospital. The offices used by the superintendent occupied about one-quarter of the floor space of this building.

The interior of the building is very unclean and presents a very bad appearance. The rooms used for offices are very poorly arranged and inconvenient, in our opinion, in every way.

The files and other records present a very disorderly appearance and there appears to be no system of handling the mails or the other records in the office.

The mail which is received is not dated upon receipt and there is no one directly responsible, as we could ascertain, in the care of the files or the answering of the mail.

It is impossible to ascertain from the files in said office whether any certain letters have ever been received or not. The whole interior of the office needs renovating and cleaning up and a proper filing system inaugurated, to expedite the handling of the correspondence and to protect the records and preserve the files.

In our opinion the superintendent is very negligent in the manner in which he handles his office and the employees under him. He trusts a great deal to his memory for answering correspondence and adjusting complaints.

By his method of handling the correspondence and adjusting the many complaints which are presented to him from time to time he has become disliked by a great number of the full-blood Indians, for upon him the majority of this class of the Indians rely to adjust their troubles.

It might be justice to the superintendent to say that he no doubt, in a great many cases, intends to give their complaints consideration and adjust same, but in his method of handling them he forgets them, and a great many of the Indians have come to think that he is dishonest and makes these promiscuous promises to them merely to get rid of them, and from the many complaints which we have heard, and from his manner of handling them after they were brought to his attention, it would raise some doubt in our mind as to whether or not he was sincere in taking care of these complaints.

He justifies the condition of his office and the office records in a small manner by saying that he has been called away from the reservation a great deal of the time in the past year, and that during his absence he was short of proper clerks and his office work has become in arrears because of this.

We have no reason to doubt but that much of the delinquency in the handling of his office and his correspondence can be attributed to his incompetent help, but he states that at the present time he believes that his office force is sufficient and competent.

During our many visits to his office it did not impress us that he has proper or sufficient help at this time to handle his work, although inasmuch as he has no individual Indian deposits or land to care for, no trust patents having issued to these Indians, the work in this office is much lighter than at most agencies, and it would appear that with the number of clerks he now has in the office, if they were competent, the work should be handled with dispatch and correctness and the files kept in first-class order.

It is certainly no credit to the service to find an office in the condition that this one is in, and it leads us to believe that the superintendent is not adapted to office work.

This being true, and the fact that the superintendent has not made a personal investigation of the many districts of his reservation to ascertain the true condition of the poorer class of the Indians, his efficiency must be confined then to the work which he has performed at various times off of the reservation.

There is no vault provided at said office for the protection of the records, and should a fire occur there they would undoubtedly be a total loss.

There are two 2-story frame warehouses at the agency in fairly good condition both inside and out.

While at the boarding school we found a great shortage in proper clothing, both for the boys and girls, and in our inspection of the agency warehouse we found practically all of the articles needed at the schools and which should have been in the warehouse at the boarding school where they were assigned, and which under our direction were taken to the school.

The supplies in this warehouse were fairly well arranged and cared for.

Rations are issued the first Friday in each month to the indigent Blackfeet Indians at one of these warehouses, and the first Saturday in each month to the Rocky Boy Band of Chippewas. All of the supplies at the agency are stored in one of these warehouses.

We found the reimbursable machinery at the agency out in the weather, in the snow and exposed to all sorts of weather, although sheds were provided for its housing, and which we ordered done immediately.

There is a blacksmith and carpenter shop at said agency, both of which are being fairly well conducted.

The agency jail is a two-story frame building, the lower part of which is used for cell rooms and the upper part for sleeping quarters for the policemen. The building is not modern, and inconvenient to keep clean and sanitary as it should be.

Upon our arrival we found the jail very dirty and insanitary. We ordered the same cleaned up, and this was done upon different occasions during our stay upon the reservation.

At this agency there are eight policemen, including the chief of police, whose duties are to look after the jail and perform police duty such as found upon an Indian reservation.

It might be well to state here that the town of Browning, Mont., is on the reservation proper, adjoining the agency; as no trust patent has ever been issued for the land, the town is under the jurisdiction of the superintendent.

The only police protection afforded the people of Browning, a town of some 500 inhabitants, is the Indian police force at the agency.

The sanitary conditions of the town are not good, for the reason that there are no modern buildings, no sewage or water systems, and a great deal of the refuse is thrown out of the back doors, and the whole town presents a very untidy and insanitary appearance.

We learned that a great deal of gambling was being carried on in the town of Browning, and no determined effort was being made to stop the practice.

We advised the superintendent of some of the places where the gambling was being carried on, and upon our suggestion the places were raided and 21 men were arrested and brought before the Indian court, 16 of whom were fined $25 each, 3 were fined $10 each, and 2 were fined $50 each.

It is common knowledge in the town of Browning that gambling has been practiced there openly for some time past, and the morals of the town are very bad, a great many young Indian girls roaming the streets, and no restraint seems to have been placed upon them or the young Indian boys they take up with.

It is worthy of note that the chief of police was living in open adultery with an Indian woman, not his wife, and that he has been so living for the past four years. Upon our suggestion he was removed, as other Indians can not be expected to obey the law when the chief of police sets them such an example.

We found many similar cases on the reservation and in the town of Browning, where Indians were living in open adultery with Indian women and girls. We brought a number of such cases to the attention of the superintendent, who had these parties brought in to the agency in an effort to put a stop to such practices.

We found several worthless old horses eating their heads off at the agency stable, which we condemned and two of which were killed.

The large amount of manure from the agency stable is hauled out and dumped by the wayside instead of enriching the agency garden, which appears to have been wholly neglected.

Three new doctors have recently been sent to said reservation, one of whom is stationed at the boarding school at Cut Bank, one at the agency, and the other will be stationed at Old Agency when quarters can be made available there.

These physicians are such newcomers on said reservation that they do not know the actual health conditions as they now obtain, but we do know that a large per cent of the Indians are afflicted with trachoma and quite a number with pulmonary trouble.

The water supply of the town of Browning is taken from the creek flowing through the village, and from which all the cattle and horses drink, and can not be but insanitary.

There are four good two-story frame houses at the agency, in which the superintendent and the employees reside. There are also numerous other small cottages in which the Indian police, the laborers, and the other employees reside. None of the buildings are modern.

ROCKY BOY'S BAND OF CHIPPEWAS.

There are about 173 Chippewa Indians on this reservation, not of whom have been allotted 80-acre tracts of land in the northwestern part of the reservation near St. Marys Lake. The altitude on this part of the reservation is about 6,000 feet, and the lands are adapted only to grazing. These allotments have not been approved, and but very few of these Indians live on their allotments.

These Indians have no homes and no means of building any; they have no cattle to graze on their allotments, and as a rule are in destitute circumstances.

They hang around the town of Browning and work at odd jobs, and work on the irrigation project during the summer months.

The superintendent sends rations to about 300 Chippewas at Box Elder, Mont., on the Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, sending a man from the agency to make this issue once each month. The Chippewas on the reservation are rationed once each month at the agency.

FINANCIAL.

We checked up the books of accounts of the superintendent and found that on December 22, 1914, there was a balance due the United States chargeable to Supt. McFatridge in the sum of $15,135.78, as follows:

Individual Indian money (not bank accounts)	$875.00
Miscellaneous receipts, Class II	87.20
Miscellaneous receipts, Class III	275.00
Miscellaneous receipts, Class IV (school)	50.15
Miscellaneous receipts, Class IV (agency)	258.60
Indian moneys, proceeds of labor (Indians)	2,315.74
Indian schools, support, 1914	36.25

Indian school and agency buildings, 1914	$115.00
Industrial work and care of timber, 1915	230.00
Pay of Indian police, 1915	185.00
Pay of judges, Indian courts, 1915	14.00
Support of Indians of Blackfeet Agency, Mont	3,643.52
Blackfeet Reservation 4 per cent fund	3,874.72
Indian schools, support, 1915	2,234.31
Interest on Blackfeet Reservation 4 per cent fund	253.35
Support of Chief Rocky Boy's Band of Chippewas, and other Montana Indians	607.97
Indian school and agency buildings, 1915	780.60
Cash balance which should have been on hand as shown by the books of accounts	770.35
Making a sum total of	15,135.78

We found that there was $281 in currency, $38.20 in silver, $5 in gold, and $121.08 in checks on hand, making a cash shortage of $325.07.

Supt. McFatridge had stated to us prior to this time that he had advanced money to the Indians out of his own personal funds in payments for wood or hay or other articles purchased from the Indians prior to the receipt of funds by him with which to pay the same, and his private account book showed that he had advanced to various Indians the sum of $328.17, which is $3.10 in excess of this shortage of $325.07. Thus it would appear that he was advancing Government funds to Indians prior to the receipt of Government funds for such purpose.

Supt. McFatridge stated that he had no individual Indian moneys, and his last monthly statement so showed. However, we found that he had received the sum of $740.39 for a minor by the name of George C. Kipp, who was attending school at Chemawa, from the sale of cattle of Joseph Kipp.

We found on hand a check dated November 14, 1914, drawn on the Old National Bank of Spokane, Wash., to the order of A. E. McFatridge, in the sum of $375; a sight draft, dated Browning, Mont., November 14, 1914, drawn on the Carstens Packing Co., of Seattle, Wash., to the order of A. E. McFatridge, in the sum of $315.39; and also a check of the same date drawn on the Old National Bank of Spokane, Wash., to the order of A. E. McFatridge, in the sum of $50, which he says he indorsed and sent to the superintendent at Chemawa for this George C. Kipp.

These checks and drafts were signed by Levi J. Bird, of Browning, Mont., so that on December 22, 1914, Supt. McFatridge had on hand the sum of $690.39 individual Indian moneys, which should have been deposited to the credit of George C. Kipp and shown on his books of accounts.

There was also due this minor the sum of $66.67, being one-third of two months' rent due on the hotel, at $100 per month (he being one of the three heirs to the estate of Joseph Kipp).

This estate had been permitted to be divided by Supt. McFatridge without the same having been probated or any guardian appointed for the minor children.

AUBREY ESTATE.

During the year 1909 one Charles Aubrey died on said reservation, leaving a widow and 10 children, of the poorer Blackfeet Indians, two of which children were minors, viz. Jeannette and Carrol. The mother, Louise Aubrey, is a full-blood Indian woman, 56 years of age, who can neither read or write the English language.

At the time of his death the said Charles Aubrey owned about 1,000 head of cattle.

In the fall of 1911 permits were issued by Supt. McFatridge to sell these cattle and divide the proceeds among the heirs. The estate had not been probated, no administrator had been appointed, and no guardian had been appointed for the minor children.

In this permit one authority was issued to sell 71 head of calves for beef, in another 26 calves, in another 4 calves, in another 2 calves, and in another 35 calves.

From the sale of this stock something over $32,000 was paid to Supt. McFatridge, who deposited same to his credit with Willets & Scriver, Indian traders at Browning, Mont., known as the Browning Mercantile Co.

After various debts were paid the money was divided and paid to the various members of the family by Supt. McFatridge by check.

Two of these children were minors and two were absent from the reservation when this division took place; Dora Aubrey was at Lethebridge, Canada, and Rosa Snook (née Aubrey) was residing in Arizona.

Prior to the sale of these cattle there was residing at Browning, Mont., one Charles E. Giddings, who was promoting a scheme to defraud these people out of this money when the sale of these cattle should be made.

His scheme was a Brazilian Stock Co., which corporation he alleged he had organized under the laws of Arizona as the Giddings-Aubrey Co.

Various members of the Aubrey family whom we interviewed stated that said Giddings gave them glowing accounts of large tracts of land which he owned in Brazil, and he was to engineer various enterprises, such as the lumber industry, the plantation industry, etc.

He persuaded these innocent, simple-minded people to part with their money and invest the major portion of the funds derived from the sale of this stock in his scheme, for which he issued them stock which is likely not worth the paper upon which it is written.

Some of minor children's money was turned over to other members of the family, who invested same in this worthless Brazilian stock, and likewise some of the money belonging to the children who were absent from the reservation was also invested by other members of the family.

This whole matter was done with the knowledge, consent, and approval of Supt. McFatridge. The widow, as well as the children, relied wholly upon his advice, as they had explicit confidence in him.

He was fully advised of their intentions, as the matter was talked over in his presence, and he so far acquiesced as to advise that he would himself invest had he not already invested his money in California lands.

The superintendent advised us that he had thought of sending his son to Brazil with this man Giddings, and that he had faith in what Giddings had told him.

The fact that this woman and her children did have confidence in Supt. McFatridge is evidenced from the fact that the money derived from the sale of this stock, amounting to approximately $32,000, was placed in his hands and by him personally disbursed and divided among the heirs. After the money was divided a large portion of it was given to this man Giddings.

Certificates of stock, showing the amount of shares due the various heirs, were distributed among them. Several of such certificates were left with Supt. McFatridge, who placed them in the safe, where they were found when we visited the agency.

The rights of these people were not protected by Supt. McFatridge, in whom they relied, and that he was derelict in his duty is a fact, as this deal was pending for several months and this man Giddings was on the reservation all of this time consulting with Supt. McFatridge and the various heirs relative to the purchase of this stock.

No effort was made on the part of the superintendent to investigate the merits of the company or whether or not this stock had any commercial value.

It is unnecessary to state that we believe that these cattle should not have been sold, particularly the she stock and the calves. Had these cattle been retained and properly handled, they would have made these Indian children quite independent.

In connection with this whole matter we herewith inclose for your information an affidavit of Mrs. Louise Aubrey, Mrs. Alice Martin, one of her daughters and one of the heirs, checks numbered 1 to 28, inclusive, drawn and signed by A. E. McFatridge, showing how he handled these moneys. We also transmit herewith eight checks received from Willets & Scriver, showing how some of this money was handled and showing that certain checks of Mrs. Louise Aubrey were cashed without any indorsements.

One check, in the sum of $6,867.80, drawn in favor of Phil Aubrey, we believe to have gone to this man Giddings.

We also inclose six certificates of stock in the Giddings-Aubrey Co. and the American-Brazilian Co. for your information; also a statement showing moneys deposited with Willets & Scriver and checks drawn by Supt. A. E. McFatridge.

We also inclose copies of permits issued by Supt. McFatridge for the sale of these and other cattle; also a letter addressed to Tom Aubrey by said Charles E. Giddings.

All of this data we attach together and mark as "Exhibit E," to which your attention is invited, with the request that when the checks and stock certificates shall have served their purpose you return same to the superintendent of the Blackfeet Agency for distribution to the parties entitled thereto.

We can not justify any excuse for permitting Indian wards of the Government and minors to be defrauded in this manner.

POWELL ESTATE.

About five years ago one H. A. Powell, a mixed-blood Indian of the Blackfeet Tribe, died on said reservation.

He owned quite an amount of property, among which were 10 shares of stock in the Broadwater-Pepin Trading Co., of Browning, Mont.

Subsequently permits were issued by the superintendent, and a number of cattle belonging to the Powell estate were sold.

The widow, Mrs. Mary Powell, complained to us that she could not get the stock in the Broadwater-Pepin Trading Co. nor an accounting; that most of the moneys received from the sale of the stock had been turned over to Mr. McCabe of the said company, and repeated requests for a settlement had been made to Supt. McFatridge without result.

We called upon the Broadwater-Pepin Trading Co. for an accounting and for this stock and they turned over 10 shares of stock made in the name of Henry A. Powell, the par value of which was $100 each, and an accounting of their standing, receipts, and liabilities.

This statement showed that the capital stock in said company was $15,000, of which Henry A. Powell owned $1,000, and that the undivided profits to date amounted to approximately $67,000.

The Powell estate owed said company the sum of $1,061.82, and this itemized statement and the stock we turned over to Supt. McFatridge for Mrs. Powell. This statement showed that the stock, aside from its par value of $1,000, was also worth one-fifteenth of the $67,000 undivided profits and one-fifteenth of the stock and building belonging to said company.

It is worthy of mention that, although this estate were stockholders in said company, they received no benefits in the matter of discounts, while the other stockholders and the employees of the company did receive same.

This matter is related to show that no proper protection has been afforded some of these Indians by the superintendent.

SPOPEE.

Upon inquiry we found that a selection of land had been made for Spopee, which is No. 2045 on the schedule, and the same is described as follows:

Lots 3 and 4, S/2, NW/4 N/2 SW/4, and W/2 E/2 SW/4, sec. 4, T. 33, R. 13, and E/2 E/2 SE/4, sec. 5, T. 33, R. 13.

This tract of land contains 319.07 acres.

Supt. McFatridge stated that this is good land, lying in one continuous body; that it is good grazing and hay land, and that none of the same is irrigated.

We suggested that prior to sending in said selection for approval that he take out 40 acres of the poorest land in said tract and substitute for same 40 acres of the best land that could be found in the irrigable district. This he said he would do.

We found Spopee living at Browning, where he seemed to be well fed, well clothed, and happy, but somewhat discontented, and wants to return to Washington. As a matter of fact, Spopee is somewhat simple minded, but he is being well treated and is quite a favorite with everyone in the section.

WILLIAM MURPHY.

We were requested to investigate and report upon the case of William Murphy, a half-blood Indian of the Blackfeet Tribe who was formerly employed as laborer at the Cut Bank Boarding School on said reservation, and who was seriously complained of by Miss Lucile Fitzgerald.

We found Mr. Murphy at the present time employed as laborer at the Blackfeet Agency, at Browning, Mont. He is 31 years of age and reads and writes the English language fluently.

He stated in substance that he kept company with Miss Fitzgerald a good deal while at the boarding school, and that she permitted him to embrace her and hug and kiss her, and that she never complained of such attentions upon his part. We took the affidavit of Mr. Murphy, in which he makes a very frank statement with relation to this whole matter, and states that he had a talk with the principal, Mr. E. J. Peacore, regarding this young lady. He tells of the trip down in the timber near the barn and of what happened.

We believe that this young lady was indiscreet and that Mr. Murphy evidently tried to take advantage of her. We do not believe that she had any bad intentions, and that when this was discovered by Mr. Murphy he ceased to press his attentions upon her. This affidavit of Mr. Murphy we inclose for your information, marked "Exhibit F."

MYLES RUNNING WOLF.

Among the complaints given us for investigaton is an affidavit signed by Myles Running Wolf, dated Browning, Mont., September 23, 1914, in which he complains that he purchased a reimbursable team through the superintendent of the Blackfeet Agency; that this team was purchased from another Indian by the name of Jesse Brown, a brother of Joe Brown, the superintendent of live stock on the Blackfeet Reservation.

At the time he purchased this team for the sum of $350 he was advised that these animals were 8 and 10 years old, respectively. He states that since he purchased same he found out that one of the animals had a fistula, and if worked hard for any length of time a soreness developed in its shoulders and that he was unable to use same.

We secured another statement in the form of an affidavit from Myles Running Wolf relative to his complaint, said affidavit being given in the presence of Joe Brown, superintendent of live stock, and Supt. McFatridge, both of whom were allowed to cross-question Myles Running Wolf when the statement was taken. He made practically the same statement in their presence that he made under date of September 23, 1914.

From our investigation we found that a team had been purchased for Myles Running Wolf as of June 30, 1913; at the time he purchased same he was told that unless he took the team that day he could not get another; but this statement is qualified by records in the superintendent's office and by Joe Brown himself, inasmuch as he did tell Myles Running Wolf that unless he took the team at that time he could get no other, meaning that this was the last day of the fiscal year, and that he would have to wait until another appropriation was made with which to purchase reimbursable teams. The team was purchased, as stated, from Jesse Brown, for the sum of $350.

The team was kept by Myles Running Wolf for some time, and after various complaints to the superintendent that one of the horses was unfit for use and had been since the purchase, the superintendent took the team back and absolved Myles Running Wolf from any debt in connection with this team.

We viewed the team in question, which were being taken care of in the stable at the agency. They are two old gray horses; so old that it is impossible to tell their age, and from what we could learn they must have been from 12 to 16 years old. They were poor at the time we saw them, although they had been in better condition a short time before that.

One of these horses had a bad fistula, which appeared to have been of long standing, so that the complaint of Myles Running Wolf that these horses were unsound at the time of purchase appears to us to be true. From various inquiries and a personal inspection of the team in question we are of the opinion that these horses are not worth to exceed $100 for both.

Supt. McFatridge admits that he had never seen this team before they were purchased, and that the matter was left entirely to Joe Brown, superintendent of live stock. This is also admitted by Brown.

This is a peculiar case, and it would appear to us that the superintendent was very derelict in his duties in allowing Joe Brown, superintendent of live stock, to inspect a team to be purchased for an Indian from his own brother.

We think that Myles Running Wolf was imposed upon at the time he purchased this team, and that this imposition was practiced by Joe Brown, the superintendent of live stock, and that Supt. McFatridge should have ascertained the true value of the team and as to their actual condition before he allowed this full-blood Indian to purchase same at an exorbitant price.

Numerous complaints were made to us by Indians, principally full bloods, against this superintendent of live stock, Joe Brown; and from our opinion of him, and the manner in which the live-stock business has heretofore been handled at this agency, and the numerous permits which he has issued for the disposition of live stock, we believe that some of the complaints were well founded. We believe that he does show partiality, and that if an Indian is disliked by him that it is very hard for this Indian to obtain justice at his hands.

At the same time we are reliably informed, and have nothing to the contrary, that Joe Brown is a very capable man and well versed in the value of live stock.

The affidavit of Miles Running Wolf relative to the purchase of this team we inclose herewith, marked "Exhibit G."

This Joe Brown, superintendent of live stock, has issued permits promiscuously to the Indians, permitting them to dispose of their cattle and horses, including their cows and heifers, to an alarming extent, and, as heretofore shown, this has decreased the Indian herd very materially.

Of course he will claim that these permits were issued with the consent and approval of the superintendent; but it was one of his duties to help safeguard the Indians' interests, and in view of this matter and the favoritism that he has shown in certain cases we believe it in the best interests of the Blackfeet Reservation and the Government service that he be separated from the position of superintendent of live stock at this place, and have the honor to so recommend.

One Sampson Bird complained that J. A. Perrin ran about 6,000 sheep on said reservation for which he paid no taxes; that they ran in two bands about 2 or 3 miles apart, covering a territory of about 5 by 15 miles, spoiling the cattle range; and that the superintendent does not enforce the regulations in this regard.

Your attention is invited to the fact that out of Authority No. 48125, dated May 3, 1913, granting permission to purchase 100,000 pounds of seed oats and 40,000 pounds of potatoes for the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation, the superintendent used only 12,000 pounds of oats and a very small amount of potatoes.

One George W. Cook claims that his property was taken by the Reclamation Service at Two Medicine Lake, and will eventually be flooded; he states that this property was appraised by Messrs. McFatridge and Ralston, and he is very anxious to get his money, as he has been waiting for this settlement for about two years.

We invite your attention to his communication addressed to us, which we inclose herewith marked "Exhibit T."

Mrs. Louise Aubrey calls attention to a small irrigation ditch which has been neglected and which it appears should receive attention. We mark her letter "Exhibit U."

RECOMMENDATIONS.

In consideration of the foregoing we have the honor to recommend:

1. That Supt. McFatridge be removed as superintendent of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation. We feel absolutely justified in stating that he has made a complete failure as a superintendent. If he is fitted for any position in the Indian Service it is that of deputy special liquor officer. A good, strong, honest, and competent superintendent should be promptly placed at Blackfeet in his stead.

2. That a competent superintendent of live stock be appointed in lieu of Joe W. Brown, who occupies this position at present.

3. That a competent principal be supplied for the Cut Bank Boarding School at the earliest possible date.

4. That a competent engineer be supplied for said school in lieu of William A. Montgomery. This man may be capable of filling some other position, but he is not competent as an engineer.

5. That the head matron, Emma A. Walters, be promptly transferred or dismissed.

6. That such action be taken in the case of Farmer Arthur J. Crim, who, it is shown, has been dealing in Indian cattle, as the evidence warrants.

7. That a competent disciplinarian be supplied at the Cut Bank Boarding School in lieu of William Sherman.

8. That a competent laundress be supplied in lieu of Mary Hunsberger.

9. There are four line riders on said reservation, and it is doubtful whether the service of any of these men is needed, in view of the fact that the reservation boundary fences are all down, and there seems to be no duties for them to perform other than that of police duty, which can be taken care of by the Indian police. We believe, therefore, that these positions can very well be dispensed with.

10. The positions at the Cut Bank Boarding School, which at the present time are filled by temporary employees, should be promptly filled with permanent employees.

11. We believe that the police force should be reorganized.

12. There is great need for a strong guiding hand to take charge of matters on said reservation, and an honest, capable, fearless man is badly needed here—one who will deal justly, firmly, and honestly, rectify the many mistakes, and bring order out of chaos, as is herein shown to exist upon said reservation.

We return herewith office files furnished us in connection with this investigation, and have the honor to remain,

Very respectfully,

E. B. LINNEN, Chief Inspector.
FRED S. COOK, Special Agent.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there has been prepared and handed to me a document by Mr. Charles H. Davis, the supervisor of farming in the Indian Service. It seems to contain much information concerning the Crow Reservation and certain leases. I feel that I ought to apologize to the Senate for imposing on it a long document at this hour when we are all so rushed, but I do ask that it be read at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the document referred to.

During the reading,

Mr. OWEN. I will ask that the document be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The document referred to is, in full, as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR COMMISSIONER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 13, 1915.

I have examined the testimony submitted to the joint commission of Congress, part 15 and part 15–A, relative to the allegations being made by Mrs. Helen Pierce Grey. I have examined in connection therewith Crow Agency file No. 321–69901–1912, and Standing Rock file 321–95884–1914, parts 1 and 2.

During the winter of 1913 and 1914, while the matters recited hereinafter were under consideration I was in the Indian Office and handled this matter very largely, working in direct connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I was frequently charged to see that the permits being granted and the modifications and adjustments being made should be carefully watched to the end that no hardship or injustice should come to the Crow Indians, and to that extent was held responsible by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to see that the rights of the Indians were protected. I was thoroughly conversant with each and every permit, and the various proposals on which they were based and submitted recommendations to the commissioner as to their important features before they were acted upon by him. I recall with great distinctness how, at one time, it appeared that notwithstanding we had advertised the letting of district No. 3, through the public press in the various parts of the country, that we would fail to get a tenant at anything like a reasonable rate. I was greatly surprised and equally relieved when this district was finally let for a period of one year and nine months at a total sum of $45,000.

I submit herein a brief of the transactions, based, in part, on my memory of such and largely on the files found in the office and as noted in margin hereof.

CROW DISTRICT NO. 3.

When I came into the office in the autumn of 1913, bids had been received for the grazing privilege on this pasture for a two-year period beginning on February 1, 1914, as will be seen by the specifications published broadly through the public press, under departmental approval of September 12, 1913. This advertisement set forth the period and estimated the acreage at about 400,000 acres, and the proposals were opened by Superintendent Scott of the Crow Agency, on October 20, 1913.

This resulted in three bids—one from William Rea, jr., of $20,000 per annum for not to exceed 50,000 sheep or 10,000 cattle, for which he made deposit of $2,000; one from C. R. Massey for $21,500, the kind and numbers of stock not being named, with which he made a deposit of $2,150; and one from Lee Simonson offering 45 cents per head for sheep and $2.55 per head for cattle, but not naming the amount of either or the amount per annum which he proposed to pay, and with his bid he deposits check for $2,000. The specifications in the advertisement called for a deposit with the bid of not less than 10 per cent of one year's rental. The several bids named above and the abstract prepared by Superintendent Scott will be found in Crow file, cited above.

Mr. Rea's bid was on the basis of not to exceed an average of 50,000 sheep. Mr. Massey's did not specify, and Mr. Simonson failed to name either the number of animals to be grazed or the amount to be paid annually, but the size of his check accompanying the bid would indicate that his bid was not to exceed $20,000 a year.

Almost immediately after the opening of the bids at the Crow Agency Mr. Rea, through his attorney, Z. Lewis Zalby, raised his bid from $20,000 per annum to $22,000, making it, as he presumed, $500 higher than the highest bid; but in the meantime Mr. Simonson had come in with a letter amplifying his former bid to the amount of 50,000 head of sheep, making his bid $22,500.

The successive raises in the bids, made in such manner as not to be known to the other bidders, placed the commissioner in an embarrassing position should he attempt to approve either of them, as they clearly indicated that each of the two who had made raises would make other raises in case they were advised of what the other had done. It also indicated that neither of them had offered what they felt the privilege was worth. I therefore recommended that all bids be rejected and the pasture readvertised, which was done under advertisement approved by the department November 7, 1913, which was likewise broadly advertised through the public press. These specifications were modified somewhat as compared with the others, stating that the estimated maximum capacity of the district was 50,000 sheep or 10,000 steers, and stipulated that the maximum should not be exceeded. It also defined more definitely when the lambs should be charged for.

While the record here does not show definitely the acreage of this pasture or the amount it will carry, it was well known locally that its maximum carrying capacity, which could be grazed without injury to the range, was about 50,000 sheep or 10,000 cattle. While I have not been over this range in person, it was similarly described to me by various stockmen, practically all of whom claim that nearly one-third of it was so poorly watered that it was almost worthless for grazing purposes. The grass was also rated as of lower value than the grass on other Crow ranges, but, on the other hand, it was claimed by all that there were only a few families living within it and that they had only a few hundred head of live stock, but there were quite a number of unbranded wild horses ranging there a portion of the year.

The bids all show that the several bidders were estimating it on a basis of about 50,000 sheep or 10,000 cattle.

About the time that the second proposal was put out it is claimed that both Mr. Rea and Mr. Massey had met with financial embarrassment, all of which was well known to Mr. Simonson. This being the case, neither Mr. Rea nor Mr. Massey submitted bids under the second proposal, and Mr. Massey, knowing the character of the range, bid $12,000 per annum on about two-thirds of the district. Clearly this put the office in an embarrassing position, for, unless the range could be successfully leased for not less than the highest previous offer, it would mean that the decision of the office to submit the matter to a second letting was a mistake.

During the time the matter stood with the one bid of $12,000 only, the proposal was made to stock the range with sheep on behalf of the Crow Tribe, to be purchased from tribal funds. I submitted a memorandum thereon under date of December 20, 1913, but found that the enterprise would be greatly handicapped by reason of the $15,000 maximum that can be used at any one agency for the payment of white employees, as it would forestall the employment of reliable white stockmen to care for this herd.

Just at this juncture Mr. Dalby, on behalf of his client, Mr. Rea, makes various proposals, ending in him offering to take this district for a period of one year and nine months at a total of $45,000, as will be shown by his letters of December 20, 1913, January 29, and February 11, 1914. This offer was tentatively accepted by the office, and a permit was written up to comply therewith, covering the period from February 1, 1914, to November 1, 1915, for an average of 50,000 sheep, with a maximum at any one time of not to exceed 70,000, all for the sum of $45,000. The maximum of 70,000 appears here in the record first at this time, and by reason of the fact that it was found necessary to permit the lessee to maintain a yearly average of 50,000 sheep. Obviously it would be quite impossible for a lessee to maintain an even average of sheep on a given territory the entire year round, particularly when he would want to ship to market once each year and replenish and particularly the fact that the lambs dropped in the spring would begin to count in the autumn.

This contract was sent out to Crow Agency to be executed, but Mr. Rea was never able to make financial arrangement whereby he could give bond and stock the range. The offer of Mr. Rea, therefore, failed, and the office was compelled to look elsewhere for a lessee.

I. Z. Zimmerman held a lease on a portion of the Standing Rock Reservation, North and South Dakota, which expired January 31, 1914, and which he asked to be renewed. It was found, however, that the presence of the Zimmerman cattle on this reservation, much of which had been opened to homestead settlement, was a great menace to the Indian allottees. After considerable correspondence and various reports thereon, the office declined to renew Mr. Zimmerman's permit, as will be seen by office letter of February 3, 1914, to his attorneys, Clark, Prentiss & Clark, of this city. It was necessary, of course, to make some adjustment whereby the permittee would be allowed to carry his cattle over, as it would be impossible for him to remove them at that period of the year. In attempting to make a satisfactory adjustment as to what would be done with his cattle it was proposed that a lease be taken out on District No. 3, of the Crow Reservation, which was finally accepted, they agreeing to take the pasture at the offer made by Mr. Rea, and which he had been unable to carry out, namely, for a period of one year and nine months, beginning February 1, 1914, the date of the expiration of the old lease, and extending to November 1, 1915. It was then felt that the proposal of Mr. Zimmerman and Mr. McGee to take this district at this price was very fortunate, as it would insure a proper use of the range and a better income therefrom than the Indians had ever before received. Careful inquiry was made as to whether Mr. McGee was a suitable man to be given such a privilege on the reservation and whether he was financially able to carry out such an agreement, and the answers to such inquiries were all quite favorable.

It is explained that I find nowhere in recent record estimates giving this range a carrying capacity of more than 50,000 sheep or 10,000 cattle, and I am sure that there was no offer made during all this time that meant putting on more than this number as an average. The insertion of the 70,000 maximum was intended to prevent the permittee from putting on a double amount during the summer and removing them therefrom in the autumn, thus taking technical advantage of a loosely written permit.

In letting this grazing privilege three things are to be kept carefully in mind, namely, that the range may not be overstocked; that the remuneration shall be a fair market value for the privilege granted; and that the lessee is a person of suitable character and sufficient financial backing to make a satisfactory and successful permittee. It is further explained that in about all cases of this kind where large numbers of cattle are put on the open range that the person owning or controlling the range stocks such range largely with borrowed capital. It is a rare exception that the owner of the stock has more than a minor portion of the capital necessary to carry the enterprise. The mere fact that a man acquires a good range under a reasonably fixed tenure, together with the further fact that he bears a good reputation for integrity and experience in the stock industry, is about all that is necessary for him to command the necessary capital to stock the range. Banks loaning on such security, or commission houses handling cattle in large numbers, will usually finance his enterprise without further question. It has never been regarded as any material matter with the Government who may finance the enterprise, so long as the man acquiring the privilege is a proper person to be given such privilege and so long as he can show that he is able to carry out his financial obligations.

The question of when this lease should begin and terminate has been one of much discussion for many years past. The trouble is that no one period of the year can be found when cattle can be taken off and others put on without a period of intermission between. It would be absolutely impossible to stock one of the northern ranges in the autumn without inviting virtually a sure loss of the greater part thus put on, unless it could be stocked by merely transferring cattle from another nearby range, without shipping or jading by overland travel. It would be equally impossible to clear a range in May or June, both from the fact that the stock would not be in shape for the market and the further fact that no other range could be found.

Some advocates adhere to an early summer date as being the best, while others adhere to an autumn date, and others an intermediate date as a compromise. During the administration of Commissioner Valentine it was decided to make February 1 the dividing date.

Personally I should say that the important matter is to hold the letting of these grazing privileges in the early autumn, so that the result thereof may be known to the present lessee in time for him to move his stock before winter, and so that the successful bidder may make his financial arrangements and contract for his stuff during the winter with a view of putting them on the range early the next spring. Just what period the permit should begin and expire is much less important than that the parties interested may know the result in the autumn. In every case where the permits expired in the early summer, as was formerly the practice, it was found that the permittee necessarily had to be given an extension of time until he could market his stock in the autumn, which would give him a summer's grazing additional, and usually very much to his gain.

It should be noted that the tribal interests have lost nothing through the delay in completing this lease to McGee and Zimmerman, inasmuch as the lease dates from February 1, 1914, and payment in full is made to cover all time from that date. The prior lease expired January 31, 1914.

It is also pointed out that the lease, as it is written and is still pending approval, is quite in excess of the highest bids previously received, as it calls for $45,000 for one year and nine months, or about $25,000 per annum, whereas the highest previous bid was $22,500, and the highest prior lease was at $17,000 per annum.

It may rightly be claimed that the letting of this district to Mr. McGee has really been a most fortunate transaction and quite worthy of commendation. Great delay has occurred one way and another, but the fact that Mr. McGee made an advance payment of $11,000 at the time of submitting his proposal has operated to insure him going ahead and completing his contract, which he might not have done had not this advance payment been made.

It is further pointed out that Mr. Zimmerman has been required to pay the highest rates for the extension of time granted him on Standing Rock that the Government has ever received for a grazing privilege. The adjustment of this matter, made about one year ago, required him to pay 25 cents per month per head on cattle continued on the range after January 31, 1914, the date of the expiration of his permit, until October 1, 1914, after which he was to pay 50 cents per head.

The recent outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease among cattle in the United States operated to prevent Mr. Zimmerman from marketing the remnant of his stock on the Standing Rock Reservation during the autumn of 1914, and the office was virtually compelled to give him another extension. This extension is covered by the informal agreement dated November 13, 1914, whereby Mr. Zimmerman pays 50 cents per head per month from November 1, 1914, to June 1, 1915, on cattle and horses left over on that date, whether such cattle and horses are moved prior to June 1, 1915, or not. He was also required to make full settlement to all parties for specific damage committed by his stock trespassing on individual allotments. These damages aggregated over $13,000. They have been collected and are now in process of distribution to the various individual allottees to whom they belong.

In assessing these grazing charges, which would ordinarily be regarded as exorbitant, the purpose was to do justice by the Indian allottees and to insure that Mr. Zimmerman would remove his live stock from the Standing Rock Reservation at the first possible opportunity he could take advantage of without too great a loss. The fact that he may or may not have had connection with any branch of the so-called Beef Trust had no influence whatever on the action taken in his case or the proposal that he consider taking out the permit on Crow district No. 3.

CROW LEASE NO. 5.

The record in connection with the Crow Range No. 5, frequently called the "I. D." Range, is so very voluminous that it will not be practicable to cite all the references, but the more salient ones will be pointed out.

This lease covers a great part of the hearing before the joint commission, part 15, pages 1815 to 2166, and it comprises all the hearings in part 15–A, pages 2167 to 2206.

Mrs. Grey would seem to charge dishonesty and collusion in the leasing of this territory, and particularly in the lease dated May 4, 1914, for the reduced portion of Range No. 5, which is still pending approval. She claims that the carrying capacity of this reduced range is much larger than the rated carrying capacity, and that the price received is inadequate.

The entire No. 5, or "I. D." Range, was covered by permit to F. M. Heinrich, dated November 8, 1912, and approved by the department January 14, 1913. It covered a "V"-shaped territory lying between the Big Horn River and the Little Big Horn River and extending south to the Wyoming line, except as it adjoins Range No. 6 in the southeast corner, which range is also held by Mr. Heinrich under another lease. This lease was estimated to contain 400,000 acres, and the permit was written for three years, beginning February 1, 1913, for the sum of $44,850 per annum. This territory comprises quite a large portion of the Crow population, and reserves the right of free grazing for 100 head of cattle or horses to each family living therewithin. The permit provides for the number to be grazed as follows: "A maximum average number of 23,000 head of cattle." The permit does not define the term "maximum average" or state at what season of the year these cattle shall be grazed. In the absence of such a definition, common custom and the intent of the agreement, as it may be fixed by prior practice, would seem to govern.

This permit was issued in conformity with a bid or proposal of Mr. Heinrich, made in response to an advertisement of this and other leases, Mr. Heinrich's being the only bid received. It is said to be quite in excess of any former bid or lease up to that time for this range, and, figured on a basis of 23,000 cattle and $44,850 per annum, makes a rate of $1.95 per head per annum.

The decision on the part of the office to cancel Mr. Heinrich's permit as to the northern portion of this range and to stock the portion thus vacated with cattle on behalf of the Crow Tribe is too familiar to require repeating, and the record too voluminous for me to attempt to make reference thereto. Suffice it to say that Mr. Heinrich was required to vacate the northern portion of the range and to take his cattle therefrom to the southern portion during the summer of 1914. It is also a matter of record that a fence was constructed between these two portions of the old "I. D." Range, which fence would divide the territory reserved for tribal use from the diminished territory which Mr. Heinrich was entitled to use under his former permit or for which a new permit would need to be written.

As to the actual carrying capacity of the "I. D." Range, or No. 5 Range, as a whole, it had been determined by actual use to be somewhere about 23,000 head. Under date of April 24, 1913, John W. Goodall, superintendent of live stock for the Indian Service, reports "there are on this range at this time approximately, of the Frank M. Heinrich cattle, 24,000 head." He also reports that there are between 1,000 and 3,000 head of Indian live stock on this range. He also says "the district should not be stocked heavier than it is now." While he estimated the number on the range at that time as 24,000 head belonging to Mr. Heinrich, the record shows that there were not to exceed 23,000 at that date. Mr. Goodall was a range stockman of a lifetime experience and was particularly qualified to estimate carrying capacities of ranges.

Dr. R. H. Tracey, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Agricultural Department, in report of July 9, 1913, commenting on the portion of this range reserved for the tribal herd, or the portion south of the new fence, says: "The Indian range, as proposed, will easily carry 15,000 cattle and all their horses." He estimates their horses at 2,000 head, but makes no mention of the number of Indian cattle that will be left on the range.

When this entire range was used and occupied as one unit it would mean that the southern portion, which is mountainous and rough, would be used mostly during the summer period when there was no snow. The lower portion in the north end was used very largely for wintering grounds, being much less liable to heavy snows and much more convenient to supplies of hay. That part of the range bordering on the Little Big Horn River is good winter territory, however, as far up as Range No. 6.

While it would be no difficult matter to estimate the carrying capacity of the lower or north end, reserved for the Crow tribal herd, inasmuch as it is mostly open territory and good grass for both summer and winter, it would be a much more difficult task to determine the carrying capacity of the upper portion, which Mr. Heinrich was permitted to retain. This is due to the fact that the upper, or southern, portion is partly covered by mountain range, rendering it useless for winter pasture, and particularly by the fact that the extreme southwest corner, known as Garvin Basin, is so completely segregated by the mountains and abrupt canyon that it can be reached only by a roundabout route through Wyoming. It was therefore necessary to estimate the carrying capacity of the diminished Heinrich range on the most accurate basis possible until it could be tested by actual use.

Mrs. Grey contends, in one place, that this end is the best portion of the entire old "I. D." range, but offers no estimate from anyone to sustain the claim.

Quoting from the report of John W. Goodall of April 24, 1913, he says: "I have gone over district No. 5 very thoroughly, except the mountain portion, which is still covered with snow." If the mountain region contained too much snow at that late date in spring to permit its cruise, it would necessarily mean that stock could not be safely put thereon until about the 1st of June, and would doubtless have to be removed in the autumn not later than November 1, leaving only a short summer's grazing, during which the grass would be soft for the most part, and would not mature out the cattle into good solid beef form. It would doubtless make a splendid sheep range for a summer period, but unsuitable for cattle.

During the discussion as to the terms on which Mr. Heinrich would be permitted to continue his use of this diminished range he proposed to accept as a settlement of the various questions a new lease covering the diminished portion only, on the basis of an annual average of 7,500 cattle at $2 per head. It will be noted that this is 5 cents per head more than he is obligated to pay under his former proposal, and my understanding was that the small increase was inadvertently made by Mr. Heinrich, who failed to recall the exact rate he was then paying. As he made no protest, the proposal was allowed to stand, and the new lease for the portion now pending therefore calls for a rate 5 cents in excess of what the old one carried.

At the time this proposal was made the carrying capacity was carefully considered and discussed with various persons, including Superintendent Scott, and such stockmen as were familiar with the region.

It was concluded that the range could not be relied upon to carry more than 5,000 as a winter range, but that it would probably carry double that number as a summer range. This would result in an average of 7,500 head. As previously remarked, no one could determine exactly without the range being thus tried out as a separate unit.

It should be borne in mind that at that time Mr. Heinrich was really much worried as to what he would do with the cattle which he was being required to remove from the lower portion of this range to make room for the tribal herd and was putting forth every endeavor to find other range to which he could remove his surplus. He stood in much danger of loss by being compelled to put more cattle on his reduced territory than it could properly carry, a fact fully recognized by the office and in which it endeavored to cooperate to prevent such loss. It is no more than a reasonable conclusion that if Mr. Heinrich had felt that the range would carry more than the estimate given above he would have insisted on the permit for the diminished area being written for a larger number. He would have nothing materially to gain by securing an estimate below the actual carrying capacity, inasmuch as he is required to pay the $2 per head for all the excess. But should the permit be written for a larger number than it would carry he would be required to pay for that larger number, whether or not he was able to graze them.

Mrs. Grey quotes the following paragraph, taken from a permit prepared at the Crow Agency and signed by Supt. Scott and Mr. Heinrich, under date of March 7, 1914 (March 11, 1914, in committee report):

"The permittee shall have the privilege of subleasing, with the approval of the superintendent of Crow Reservation, and for not in excess of the amount paid by him, that part of the above-described lands south of the mountains, known as the Garvin Basin, and estimated to contain 30,000 acres and to support 1,500 head of stock. All stock grazed in this basin to be counted with permittee's stock in making above average."

This feature of this permit was disapproved by the office and another permit was written instead with this clause eliminated, which was signed by Supt. Scott and Mr. Heinrich, under date of May 4, 1914. It will therefore be seen that this subleasing privilege was rejected as soon as presented to the office.

It is explained that this Garvin Basin is the extreme southwest corner of the original "I. D." range, and by reason of its isolated character it can virtually be used only in connection with other lands in Wyoming. The basin region has held a very unenviable reputation for a number of years, and it must be regarded as about as much of a menace to the cattle interests on the Crow Reservation as it would be of benefit to a person holding this diminished range. The fact that Mr. Heinrich's diminished range fills in the gap between this basin and the range reserved for the tribal herd is recognized as adding very largely to the security of the tribal herd.

The question of subleasing by the permittees has received considerable attention, and it would appear that an attempt has been made to bring the permit system into disrepute by the mere fact that persons not known to the permits have been allowed to put cattle thereon. It is pertinent to inquire under what conditions these cattle were thus put on the territory covered by the permit system.

It is frequently very difficult for a permittee to furnish himself with approximately the number of stock called for in his permit and for which he is required to pay. The custom has, therefore, very largely prevailed that such permittee would engage to run a fixed number of cattle for some other owner for a stated sum per head. This arrangement might be for all or a portion of the year, and was usually for a rate in excess of the permit rate. There is nothing objectionable to this practice so long as the third party (who may thus put cattle on the range) does not handle them himself. If the permittee merely takes the cattle to graze and care for in conjunction with his own, serving as his own manager, the cattle all being handled by the one crew, it would seem that neither the letter nor the spirit of the permit contract has been violated. If the permittee furnished the labor and incidental expenses for handling these cattle, he would necessarily have to charge much more than he pays for the permit privilege, and a double charge should not be regarded as excessive.

If, on the other hand, the permittee allows the third party to bring on cattle and run them himself, thus establishing an independent control over a portion of the territory included in the permit, he has then violated both the letter and the spirit of the permit.

Questions of this kind are about all covered by well-established custom of the range country, and in the absence of stipulations incorporated in the permit contract, such well-established customs would be presumed to control.

The permit prepared at Crow Agency and signed by Supt. Scott and Mr. Heinrich, March 7, 1914, carried the provision whereby Indian residents of the district would be allowed to carry 100 head of stock per family without charge, but further provided that a charge of $2 per head for any excess over 100 head would be made and the proceeds thereof credited against the amount Mr. Heinrich was required to pay. This was a loosely written paragraph and would operate to the unjust advantage of the permittee in case he was then running the full amount of cattle called for in his permit.

The revised permit executed by them under date of May 4, 1914, and which permit is now pending approval was amended to provide that this excess should be placed to the credit of the tribal fund, unless the permittee was prevented from grazing his full contract number by reason of the presence of the Indian-owned stock.

It is alleged by Mrs. Gray that Mr. Heinrich submitted estimates of the stock he had on the range in pencil memorandum signed by him as "manager." The permit contract requires Mr. Heinrich to submit twice a year a sworn statement of the live stock he is carrying under this permit to be made at the close of June and at the close of December. The pencil memorandum referred to by Mrs. Gray is one of the sworn reports thus called for, and properly signed by him as manager of his own range.

Relative to the allegation that the combination alleged to control the grazing privileges on the Crow Reservation and to fix the price the Indians receive for the cattle, it is only necessary to point out that these cattle are usually shipped to the regular markets under the supervision of the superintendent and his employees and the Indians receive the market prices prevailing on the date their stock is sold, just the same as any other stock growers.

I deem it advisable to point out the difference between the large stock owner and the small stock owner as it may affect the welfare of the Indians under these permits. The large stock owners must necessarily bring their cattle from foreign parts, and such stock are about universally brought to the reservations by railroad shipments. Naturally the large stock owner is very anxious to prevent his brands from going into local private ownership, consequently he sells nothing on the reservation or in the vicinity thereof, but ships his cattle to foreign markets.

On the other hand, the small stock owner who seeks to secure a grazing privilege, say of 100 or 200 head, usually expects to bring his stock from near-by ranges, and in that way his brands will be found both on the reservation and on one or more near-by ranges. Every experienced stockman recognizes the serious complications that may arise from such conditions.

While in no way intending to impute the integrity of the small stock owner, experience teaches that one of the favorite schemes of the cattle rustler is to get a few head of stock bearing his brands on a reservation where some other owner may be ranging hundreds or thousands of head. These few head will give him a claim to a round-up right on the range, and the round-up right attaching to 100 head on such range may frequently be made worth several hundred head, if the person thus holding the privilege proves to be that kind of a man. In view of this condition, every man holding a permit covering large numbers of cattle will strenuously resist the effort of any small owner to a round-up right on his range. If the Indians have cattle running on such range they are usually thus menaced in greater degree than the large permittee, from the fact that it is usually easier to run off the Indian cattle than those of the permittee.

In letting these grazing privileges and supervising them, many problems will arise that would be wholly unseen and comprehended by inexperienced stockmen. To properly safeguard the Indians in their livestock enterprises great care must be exercised, and frequently stipulations have to be made that, to the inexperienced person, would not only be incomprehensible, but would probably cause suspicion, whereas they are really intended for the protection of the Indians and operate to their protection.

In all my close connection with this matter within the past two years I have endeavored to keep the Commissioner of Indian Affairs advised as to all these matters, and in every case where it has been pointed out to him that the Indians' welfare would be menaced by any contract or loosely written portion of a contract he has insisted that such changes be made as would remove the menace.

This memorandum has been prepared by me at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and sets forth truthfully my memory of the several transactions enumerated. I had full knowledge of each and every transaction then being made, and do not hesitate to assume my full share of responsibility for them and for the recommendations I made, as the records will disclose. At no period in any of these transactions was there the least opportunity or occasion to suspect any motive except to protect and advance the interests of the Indians and to avoid doing injustice to the permittees and others dealing with the Indians and with this office.

CHARLES L. DAVIS,
Supervisor of Farming.

I, Charles L. Davis, supervisor of farming for the Indian Service at large, being duly sworn, on oath depose and state that the recital of facts set forth in the foregoing memorandum is true and correct according to the best of my knowledge as based on the records cited and on my memory of the incidents then transpiring.

CHARLES L. DAVIS,
Supervisor of Farming.

Subscribed and sworn to before me at Washington, D. C., February 13, 1915.

E. B. LINNEN, Chief Supervisor.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I feel that I should say a very few words on this matter.

I am a member of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordinarily I am present whenever any Montana matters are being considered. I try to be present at all times when Montana matters are being considered; but for some weeks past the work of the Senate and its various committees has been such that I have not been able to attend to all my different duties at all times without finding that one sometimes conflicted with the other.

This amendment was put on the Indian appropriation bill by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs on the last day of the sittings of the committee, a week ago yesterday. I tried to be present at the sitting of the committee all that I could on that day, but I had many other demands on my time. I was engaged, among other things, in looking after some important Montana matters on the floor of the Senate in bills which were being considered by the Senate on that day, and I was not able to be present on all of that day. This amendment was adopted by the committee on the last day and about the last minute before taking action on the bill, I believe. I had been called out and called away from the committee at the time, and knew nothing of it. I knew nothing of this amendment, never heard of it, and never saw it until I saw it in the bill after it was printed.

I want to say that as to this amendment I heartily concur in the views of my colleague [Mr. WALSH], which have been so well stated on the floor of the Senate. I agree with what he says about it. I believe it is unnecessary and unwise. I have always believed that the views of Senators from a State, as to local matters within their State, ought to have a fair degree of weight and credence. If they are men of ordinary intelligence, they ought to be a little better informed about the affairs of their own State than outsiders; and, if they are honest, I think their views ought to have equal weight.

As to Indian matters, I have never believed that Senators from a State where there are Indians ought to be regarded as parties from whom the Indians of their State had to be protected by the intervention of outsiders or others. I believe that the Senators from a State where there are Indians ought to be credited with at least equal integrity and sincerity and honesty of purpose with outsiders, and a little better knowledge of the affairs of their own State. I do not say that they are always right or that the views of others should not be considered as well, but I believe that the views of those who are on the ground ought to be considered in connection with all the other circumstances connected with matters that arise in their own State.

In this matter I am in hearty accord with the views of my colleague, as expressed by him. I agree with all that he has said about the amendment and think it ought to be rejected. I think it is a bad provision and should not be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it probably will not be amiss for me to make some observations sustaining the action of the committee.

The action of committees should be respected by legislative bodies from which they are appointed. They usually investigate carefully matters coming before them. They have more information on which the legislative bodies appointing them on any subject have. I do not know a great deal about this Indian question myself, but I do know that this amendment is proposed by the committee. It is proposed by men who have large experience in dealing with Indian affairs. I assume that they investigated the question and gave it the attention that it deserved. Nor do I believe that the Senators from a State where Indians are located should be ignored. I think their views are entitled to great weight in this body, but I do not think their views ought to be adopted as against the conclusions and the views of a committee expressed in its report. Ordinarily, of course, the Senators from a State know more about conditions in that State and better represent that State than Senators from any other State; but the Indian question is a national question. It is not confined to any State. It never has been. It is not now. It involves many States. The Government is dealing with the Indian as a national question, and dealing in that way the Government should act, at least to some extent, from the standpoint of the Government and not absolutely and entirely from the standpoint of the State in which the Indians reside.

I do defer largely to the Senators from the State of Montana. I agreed with them in asking a large increase in the matter of appropriations for an irrigating project in that State. I did it because I thought they knew, and because I thought they better understood that question than other men. But we are told that this is a question of policy; that this amendment reverses the policy of the Nation; that it reverses the policy that has been in force since 1834. That may be true. But I assume that we know more about the Indian question now than was known in 1834. I am sure conditions are very different now from what they were then. At that time the Indians were not so completely under the control of the Government as they are to-day. They occupied vast stretches of country. They were, in many instances, entirely beyond the reach and the influence of the Government. When those conditions existed it was important that designing men should not be permitted to go into the reservations and by selfishness, by greed, induce them to act in a way that might be antagonistic to the policy of the Government. But now the Indian is well in hand. He is completely within the grasp of national authority. He is no longer a menace to the Nation from the standpoint of his ability to obstruct its policies. But he is still a ward of the Nation, Mr. President, and he is more the ward of the Nation to-day than he ever has been before, because in his natural state he better understood how to protect and provide himself than he does to-day. By crowding him onto the reservations and off of the public lands he occupied we have deprived him of the means of supplying himself with the necessaries of life. We have deprived him largely of a vocation. When that is done, then we must find employment for him. We must furnish him with a vocation. Are we going to do this by depriving him of any and all control of his affairs as well as his property? That has been the policy of the Government heretofore, and that is the policy of the Government that this amendment proposes to modify, at least to a limited extent.

There are two views of this question—one is the land view and the other is the Indian view. We have largely dealt with the Indian from the standpoint of dealing with the lands that he occupied. We as a Nation have been more eager to get control of his lands and bring them under the subjection of the white man than we have been to take care of the Indian. We have evinced that disposition of our English ancestors, and that was that no one except the white man had any right to control lands and that only a limited number of them should be allowed that inestimable privilege. It is not surprising, Mr. President, that we have taken that view or that we hold it now. That is the view which we inherited from our English origin.

Mr. President, it looks to me as if in this matter we were rather taking care of the land of the Indians and putting it to our uses than taking care of the Indian and making a man of him. What are we going to do with the Indian? Is he to be lifted from a semisavage state to civilization? Are we to extend to him the hand of a brother and lift him up from his lower position? If we are, then we must begin to treat him like a man and as a man. When we place him on a reservation and tell him that that is his, when we impress upon him that he is the owner of that land and yet deprive him of any right to control it, of any right to share in its advantages except as we direct, are we by that policy, I ask, giving the Indian any initiative? Are we teaching him to be resourceful and self-reliant? I think not. On the contrary, Mr. President, we are depriving him of any opportunity to develop along these lines. We are impressing on him a sense of his own helplessness. We make him all too conscious of his inferiority. Mr. President, this course may make his lands more profitable, but it will result in retarding his development. It will prolong the period of his inefficiency. It will continue to impress him with the injustice with which he has been and is being treated by us.

On the contrary, this amendment proposes to extend to him at least some of the advantages derived from ownership and some of the responsibilities of citizenship. If we give him the right, as this amendment does, to have at least something to say about how his land, his property, shall be disposed of, we necessarily impress upon him the idea that he is receiving some of the benefits, some of the advantages arising from the ownership of property, and we are impressing him with the idea that we are attempting at least to do him justice. But when we have him sit idly by on the reservation, when we deprive him of all control, when we deny him any right to say what shall be done with his property, we treat him as a child, and in that way we prevent his development and his growth. We sink him still deeper into a condition of inactivity and ignorance.

Mr. President, the amendment under consideration deals with two conditions—one in which the land is held by the tribe as tenants in common and the other where it has been allotted and is held in severalty by its owners. The amendment requires that before the former shall be leased, the Indians, as a tribe, shall be consulted through a council regularly called for that purpose.

The tribe complains that the tribal lands are being leased for grazing purposes without its consent; in fact, against the wishes of its council. The committee thought that it was right that the Indians should have a voice in this matter. And why should they not? To give them this right would be to stimulate in them an interest in their tribal affairs, their public affairs, if you please. Create in them an interest in their property, make them feel the responsibility of its ownership as well as an interest in what disposition is being made of it. To arouse their activities along this line would be worth almost as much to the Indians as that which they would derive from the use of the rents. I think it is eminently proper that these owners of this land should be accorded this right. I think it is entirely wrong to deny it to them.

The other condition with which we are dealing is the relation of the individual Indians to the lands allotted to them in severalty. The amendment allows them to use a sufficient amount of money belonging to them to fence the individual tracts, and, when fenced, to lease them for a period not to exceed five years. The lands when fenced can be put in cultivation by these Indians—or portions of it can—and be the means of furnishing them employment and enabling them to earn a livelihood. The allotted lands aggregate several hundred thousand acres. These lands have been leased to cattlemen along with the tribal lands, without taking any note whatever of the individual ownership; in fact, these allotted lands have yielded no return either to the tribe or to the individual Indians. It seems they were thrown in to the lessee as a good measure; at least, the herds of the lessee were allowed to browse on these lands, together with the tribal lands, and no account was made of it to the individual owners. This, to me, was rank injustice, and the only excuse offered by the Indian Bureau was that it would be difficult to determine the proportion that the land of the individual Indians bore to the whole leased tract. This, in my judgment, is no excuse for the violation of the rights of these individual Indians. This property is theirs; their ownership is as complete as that of any other owner, the only difference being that the Government proposes to act as guardian for them in the handling of it. Is it a sufficient excuse for the guardian to say that, because of some inconvenience to him, that his ward's valuable property rights shall be disregarded and ignored? That is not the rule, but the guardians are made to account by the courts of the country for the conduct of the property of their wards.

The right to adopt this amendment to the extent provided by it throws these Indians on their own resources, puts upon them the responsibility of handling their properties, and will have the effect, above stated, of developing them, giving them self-initiative and reliance.

It is said by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] that great inequalities would be produced; that some of these allotments contain water, while others do not, and therefore they would be very much more valuable and very much more readily attract lessees. I submit that that furnishes no excuse; that if one of these allotments is more attractive or more valuable than the other, that that is the individual benefit naturally to be derived by its owner.

The amendment limits the term of the leases very materially; they can not be made to extend beyond five years; they may be made for a very much shorter period. The Indian is given no right to sell or convey his property or to make a longer lease than that mentioned.

In the past the Government has gone very much further than this in dealing with lands held in severalty by Indians. It has permitted them to sell and dispose of their lands entirely, usually exercising some control as to the manner of its disposition; but we are told, Mr. President, that if an improper lease of the land should be made that the Indians would have to come all the way to Washington to have the Secretary of the Interior set is aside. I do not think this would be the result. Why could not the resident Indian agent look after matters of this kind and report them to the Secretary of the Interior, make known to that officer whatever vices are contained in the lease, and have him cancel it?

Mr. President, I am thoroughly convinced that the action of the committee was wise and that the amendment offered by it should be adopted. I therefore hope that the amendment offered by the committee shall be adopted.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, at the request of numerous Senators, I might say on both sides of the Chamber, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside until 9.30 o'clock this evening, and that promptly at the hour of 9.30 the Senate shall again resume the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. One moment. I will ask the Senator from Arizona what is the purpose of the request? I think we ought to know.

Mr. ASHURST. It is only fair to Senators very vitally interested in some items of the bill who are unable to be present during the next hour or hour and a half, but who nevertheless want to participate in the discussion of the amendments which have been postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will venture further to ask the Senator from Arizona if the purpose of his request is in part to permit the river and harbor bill to be taken up?

Mr. ASHURST. That is my understanding.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is entirely agreeable to me. I simply wanted to know.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is contemplated that we shall proceed with the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to make a request for unanimous consent, but I should like to inquire whether there would be any objection, if such a request were made, to fixing an hour certain to-night when we can take a final vote upon the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know just what the Senator from North Carolina proposes to predicate upon that query made when there is such a small attendance in the Senate. If it is designed to foreclose objection made later to a unanimous-consent request, I would suggest that it ought not to be made with the Senate attendance so thin as it is now.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was making the suggestion because I did not want to force the call of a quorum.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection made.

Mr. ASHURST. Not to the unanimous consent I asked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection is made to the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not ask for any unanimous-consent agreement. I was making an inquiry, and I do not think I was out of order in making the inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator rose to make a request for unanimous consent. There is a unanimous-consent proposition offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. Without objection, the same prevails.

COURTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

A message from the House of Representatives by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20894) to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 20894) to provide for the appointment of a district judge, district attorney, and marshal for the western district of South Carolina, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the bill just received from the House of Representatives be substituted for the Senate bill now on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House bill may be substituted for the Senate bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be a district judge for the eastern district of South Carolina and a district judge for the western district of South Carolina, who shall be appointed as district judges are appointed in other judicial districts of the United States: Provided, That the President, previous to appointing said judge, shall make public all indorsements of the applicants for said position. The present district judge, who is a resident of the eastern district of South Carolina, is hereby assigned to said eastern district as the district judge thereof.

SEC. 2. That all causes of a civil nature and motions therein submitted and all causes and proceedings of a civil nature, including proceedings in bankruptcy, now pending in the western district of South Carolina in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part before the present district judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, or taken in whole or in part and submitted to and passed upon by the said district judge, shall be retained by said judge and proceeded with and disposed of by said judge, who may for that purpose continue to exercise jurisdiction in the said western district.

SEC. 3. That there shall be a district attorney for the eastern district of South Carolina and a district attorney for the western district of South Carolina, who shall be appointed as district attorneys are appointed in other judicial districts of the United States. The district attorney for the eastern district of South Carolina and the district attorney for the western district of South Carolina shall each receive an annual salary of $4,500. The present district attorney, who is a resident of the eastern district of South Carolina, is hereby assigned to said eastern district as the district attorney thereof.

SEC. 4. That there shall be a marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina and a marshal for the western district of South Carolina, who shall be appointed as marshals are appointed in other judicial districts of the United States. The marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina and the marshal for the western district of South Carolina shall each receive an annual salary of $4,500. The present marshal, who is a resident of the eastern district of South Carolina, is hereby assigned to said eastern district as the marshal thereof.

SEC. 5. That terms of the district court for the eastern district shall be held at Charleston on the first Tuesdays in June and December; at Columbia on the third Tuesday in January, first Tuesday in November; at Florence, first Tuesday in March; and at Aiken on the first Tuesdays in April and October.

Terms of the district court of the western district shall be held at Greenville on the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October; at Rock Hill, the second Tuesdays in March and September; and at Greenwood the first Tuesdays in February and November.

The office of the clerk of the district court for the western district shall be at Greenville and the office of the clerk of the district court for the eastern district shall be at Charleston.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Senate bill (No. 7730) on the same subject be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

LINCOLN NATIONAL FOREST.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2278) granting the El Paso & Rock Island Railway Co. a right of way for its pipe lines and reservoir upon the Lincoln National Forest for the carrying and storage of water for railroad purposes, which were, on page 1, line 3, to strike out "permanent"; on page 2, line 10, after "purposes," to insert ": Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, upon abandonment or nonuse of the same for the purpose for which it is granted for a period not less than one year, declare said right of way or any part thereof forfeited and annul the same"; on page 4, line 16, to strike out "and for" and insert "of or"; and, on page 4, line 16, after "concerning," to insert "water."

Mr. CATRON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the river and harbor bill—House bill 20189.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 20189) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Lodge	Shields
Bankhead	Hollis	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bryan	Hughes	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Burton	James	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Catron	Johnson	Nelson	Smoot
Chilton	Jones	Newlands	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	O'Gorman	Thompson
du Pont	La Follette	Oliver	Tillman
Fall	Lane	Page	Vardaman
Fletcher	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Walsh
Gallinger	Lee, Md.	Root	Warren
Gore	Lewis	Shafroth	Weeks
Gronna	Lippitt	Sheppard	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for the bill the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by Mr. FLETCHER, and read to the end of line 7, on page 5.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I offer an amendment, after the word "harbor," in line 7, page 5, which I understand has the approval of the committee. It also has the approval of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. The reading of the substitute has not yet been finished, and I think it would be in order to complete the reading before offering amendments. I myself have some amendments to offer.

Mr. O'GORMAN. What is the objection to letting the amendment go in now? As I have said, the Senator from Ohio has approved it, and I think it likewise has the approval of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we had better proceed in regular order; that is all.

Mr. BURTON. I think it would be better to wait until the amendment is read. Then I am going to submit some remarks upon it. There will be plenty of time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move the adoption of the substitute of the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, on that I desire to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended, and the Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it is a matter of legislative history that the river and harbor act of 1914 was very materially changed before it was adopted. That measure as reported to the Senate carried appropriations for $54,000,000 approximately. It contained numerous provisions of an administrative nature and a large list of surveys to be made.

The bill was strenuously opposed because of opposition to old projects and new which were included in the bill. As a result a joint resolution was presented for an appropriation of $20,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, and to be applied only "for the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation, and most economical and advantageous in the execution of the work."

The object of this limitation or reservation which I have just read was to confine the apportionment of $20,000,000 to projects which had already been adopted. There was a reduction of $34,000,000 from the amount carried in the bill—from $54,000,000 to $20,000,000—but, more important than that, a number of new projects were omitted entirely, and of course no provision was made for them. The total saving to the Treasury of the United States by the elimination of those new projects exceeded $40,000,000, which would eventually have been expended in their completion.

This saving, Mr. President, justifies the very strenuous opposition to that bill. It is probable that some of the new items which were contained in the bill as originally introduced will never be adopted by Congress. A majority of them, I trust, never will be. Among the more important new projects which were cut out by reason of this joint resolution were appropriations for the upper Cumberland, for an improvement the ultimate cost of which would be $4,400,000; for the Sacramento and Feather, the ultimate cost of which would be $5,860,000; and a change was made in the plan for the improvement of the Tennessee River which would eliminate an expense which, at a very low estimate, would amount to $10,000.

In addition to that a project which has more to commend it than the three which have been mentioned—the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal—costing $8,000,000, was eliminated or, at least, postponed for the present. Also the Trinity River, the ultimate cost of which can not be determined, but the cost of improvement of which would probably amount to some $10,000,000, was omitted. I ask leave to file a list that was included in the bill of 1914 which has apparently been abandoned in the pending bill. I ask that it be printed without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. BURTON. The fact that items were included in this list does not necessarily mean their condemnation, because some of them, no doubt, are worthy of appropriations from the Government.

In the bill which was presented here at this session no new projects were included. That inflexible rule was adopted. But I am compelled to state that a very large number of old projects, most of them adopted in the river and harbor act of 1910, some adopted before that time, and a larger number since, are very objectionable and should not be appropriated for from the National Treasury. Either they promise no results or they are of local benefit or the amount required for their completion is altogether out of proportion to the benefit which will be secured.

Two courses were before those who desire a reform in our river and harbor legislation. One was to accept this bill. That, Mr. President, was out of the question. It was so full of mistaken projects, according to the mind of many who had opposed the bill of 1914, that we were disposed to fight against it to the utmost limit of the rules of the Senate.

Another course was to defeat the bill in its entirety. Mr. President, we did not feel justified in taking that course. There are many very important river and harbor works which are now under way, the completion of which will confer a great benefit upon the transportation facilities of the country. Among these projects which should be prosecuted to completion are the Hudson River, the Delaware River, numerous harbors on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, the harbors on the Great Lakes, and quite a number of smaller projects. To these must be added the lower portion of the Mississippi River—the part below Cairo. While this is not in any very important sense a navigation improvement, there have been great floods and great loss of life, and this provision should be retained; also the Ohio River, if it is to be completed, should receive the necessary appropriations, especially for the completion of work already under way.

It is not so much the amount we object to, or did object to in the last bill, as the manner in which appropriations are to be expended. Thus there has been here an agreement that $25,000,000 may be appropriated in a lump sum under the same conditions as in the bill of October, 1914. To this may be added $5,000,000 from a number of balances which have been in the Treasury for a long while and which very seriously need readjustment.

At the same time I insist, Mr. President, that we should go over this whole subject. We should recognize the changed conditions in regard to inland navigation. We should eliminate old projects which have proved unprofitable. We should stop work on others where the original plan was wrong.

It is impossible in the brief time given at this session to accomplish as much as could be desired, but certain steps have been taken in that direction by the insertion in this substitute of section 15, in which it is directed that the following projects now under improvement should be examined in accordance with the law for the original examination of rivers and harbors, with a view to obtaining reports whether the adopted projects should be modified or the improvement abandoned. Then follow an enumeration of 10 projects which are probably the worst in the list now under improvement and a general provision that the Chief of Engineers is directed to make a report upon any other projects, either river or harbor, a further improvement of which under present conditions is undesirable or in which a modification of the plans or projects should be made.

We have confidence that that section will be carefully complied with by the Corps of Engineers, that they will examine de novo each one of these 10 projects, and if further improvement is undesirable they will say so; if material modifications are necessary, they will say so; and that if there are other improvements of a minor nature not mentioned in this list which require reexamination, that reexamination is to be made.

I am frank to say I do not altogether feel satisfied with the apportionments which were made by the engineers under the act of October 2, 1914. The following are some illustrations of what was done:

Contentnia and Smiths Creeks and Neuse and Trent Rivers in North Carolina, for which appropriations were opposed, carried in the original bill a combined appropriation of $41,000. Of this amount, $27,000 was allotted. The Cape Fear River above Wilmington carried in the original bill $91,000 and was allotted $70,000.

The Flint River received $18,000 of the proposed $25,000. The Chattahoochee carried $120,000 and received $65,000. The Coosa received in the allotment $40,000. The item for the St. Johns River was $300,000; in the allotment it got $220,000. St. Andrews Bay was provided with $65,000 in the bill and got the full amount in the allotment. The bill gave Choctawhatchee $25,000; the allotment, $20,000. The Black Warrior was down for $750,000 and got the full amount. The item carried for the Yazoo River was $10,000, while the allotment gave it $30,000. The Big Sunflower River was originally provided with $80,000, and in the allotment received the full amount. The item for the Upper Brazos, one of the most strenuously opposed items, was $275,000, yet in the allotment it received $200,000. In the case of the Trinity, one of the worst items in the bill, but slight deference was paid to public opinion. Out of an original item of $255,000, the allotment was $203,000. The Missouri River, Kansas City to the mouth, an absolutely indefensible project, got in the allotment $850,000.

To illustrate the other phase of this policy of allotment, it may be mentioned that out of a proposed appropriation of $167,375 for Buffalo Harbor, it received nothing in the allotment. The item for Oswego Harbor was $100,000; allotment nothing. For Curtis Bay Channel, Baltimore Harbor item, nothing. For the Monongahela River item, $178,200; allotment nothing. For Curtis Bay Channel, Baltimore Harbor, item, $123,700; allotment nothing. Fairport Harbor item, $178,000; allotment nothing. Harbor Beach Harbor item, $362,380; allotment nothing. St. Marys River, $250,000; allotment nothing. Racine Harbor item, $182,400; allotment $3,000.

It will be noted from the above that projects for harbors and rivers serving an enormous tonnage and of highest commercial importance are totally disregarded, though no voice was raised in criticism of the projects, while allotments were freely made for projects serving an insignificant commerce.

I pass by these hastily. It is possible there is some explanation of them which does not appear upon the record, but certainly the items which were omitted were of much greater consequence than those which were included.

I have dwelt frequently, Mr. President, upon the class of rivers which may be profitably improved in this country. We have abandoned the ox cart; we have almost forgotten it; but in some quarters the remembrance of the "old tub" on the rivers and that method of transportation seems to be as vivid as ever, although the one is about as obsolete as the other. The following are the classes of rivers which in this day may be profitably improved:

1. Rivers which afford access to cities or centers of consumption located at no great distance from the sea, upon which the haul by river can be combined with the movement by sea. Those in the second and third list, as given above, are of this class. The portion of such rivers which it is necessary to improve is comparatively short.

These are such as the Kennebec to Augusta, the Penobscot to Bangor, the Patapsco to Baltimore, the Delaware to Philadelphia, and other similar rivers.

2. Rivers of considerable size, upon which large cities or industrial centers are located and which can be made the means of transportation between producer and consumer in the shipment of heavy and coarse freights, such as coal, iron ore, or building material: In this class may be included the Ohio and the Hudson, with its canal connection with the Great Lakes.

On large rivers flowing through States or counties having large agricultural production there was formerly an important traffic, but the carrying of grain or package freight by river is rapidly diminishing. The decrease in traffic has been greatly accentuated by terminal facilities and the absence of cooperation between transportation lines on rivers and railways connecting with them. This fact tends to restrict traffic to the bank of the river and the territory immediately adjacent thereto.

The Panama Canal act of 1912 sought to remedy the lack of cooperation between railways and waterways by compelling prorating of charges for the carriage of freight when conveyed partly by river and partly by rail, and the physical connection between railway lines and docks of water carriers, when such connection is reasonably practicable and can be made with safety to the public and where the amount of business to be handled is sufficient to justify the outlay. It is doubtful, however, whether this will accomplish any very salutary result, because the expense of transfer from boat to rail or from rail to boat is now so considerable and the change causes such inconvenience that it is more profitable to carry freight in bulk without transfer to its destination.

3. Short rivers in busy industrial sections where the consumer and producer are located near to each other: The best illustration of a river of this class is the Monongahela, in Pennsylvania, on which the traffic for the year 1912 amounted to 11,575,329 tons. This tonnage consists almost entirely of coal carried from mines on or near to the river to mills or furnaces at or near to Pittsburgh, or in less quantity to points along the Ohio and the Mississippi.

It should be said in this connection that as the output of the mines near to the river decreases and it is necessary to go a distance from the river to obtain coal this class of traffic is likely to diminish.

4. Minor streams at or near great cities or thickly populated areas: There are a number of these streams tributary to the waters around New York City, to the Delaware River below Philadelphia, and to the Chesapeake Bay. In the case of these streams a market for the products of the locality tributary to the river in question is not far away, and freight can profitably be carried in boats of shallow draft. Oftentimes boats upon these streams and the larger bodies of water into which they empty are utilized for the carrying of building material to large cities, as is the case in the neighborhood of New York and Philadelphia. Prompt delivery of freight often gives to such boats an additional advantage.

5. Shallow streams of considerable length in the interior flowing through level areas, which can be made available or improved for navigation at comparatively small cost by snagging, removal of obstructions, and dredging of bars: There are rivers of this type in North Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana. The total expense of improving and maintaining them is comparatively slight.

Although it is contrary to a prevalent impression, rivers and creeks of the last two classes, the improvement of which has evoked very severe criticism, have been among the most profitable objects of expenditure by the Federal Government, yet there is constant danger that streams of trivial importance will receive appropriations from the improvement of which no benefits will accrue.

Outside of these classes, Mr. President, there are none which can be profitably improved, and I especially oppose the projects which involve tremendous cost, such as upon the Tennessee, the Cumberland, and rivers of that class, where locks and dams are necessary. Have we not had experience enough with the Big Sandy River, where we have spent millions, recommended and eulogized by the Engineer Corps, and yet to-day it is recommended that it be entirely abandoned? It is in this direction that the most serious waste exists, and there is a waste almost as bad in the improvement of rivers that flow through an alluvial country.

I desire also to set forth certain principles in regard to the improvement of rivers and harbors:

1. There is a considerable number of small streams which are not expensive to improve and on which money can still be profitably expended. This is also true of large rivers when they are near to large cities or afford a channel from the sea to a town of importance.

2. There are several uses for rivers, such as relief from congestion in time of unusual traffic, the prevention of excessive charges for moving freight, and the furnishing of facilities to localities not otherwise provided with means for transportation, which are worthy of careful consideration. None of these uses in itself or combined with the others justifies improvements on any expensive scale.

3. There has been a diminishing traffic in recent years—that is, on rivers—and there is every indication that this tendency will continue.

4. Even on rivers of very considerable size and length short hauls have become the rule rather than the exception. Through traffic does not exist in any considerable quantity save in the case of a few commodities, such as coal and floated logs. Even this traffic is decreasing.

5. There is no promise of traffic in such a volume as to justify large expenditures, except on rivers the channels of which can be made available for the convenient handling of boats and the freight thereon, and which connect distributing and consuming centers between which there is a large interchange of coarse materials, such as coal, iron ore, or building supplies. The quantity of such materials carried upon rivers and canals is decreasing and the length of the haul is diminishing.

6. The predominant function of many rivers and canals has been to provide transportation for sparsely settled or undeveloped areas. With increased population and more complete development the requirements of transportation are more and more provided in other ways and the use of rivers for general traffic diminishes or disappears. A principal use of streams during this period has been, and will continue to be, the bringing of timber to the market.

Mr. President, you yourself may know of a river in your State, the Wabash, in which there is an expensive lock and dam constructed at Grand Rapids. It is possibly within your memory that a very considerable amount of freight was carried down that river; but it has all disappeared now, or it has decreased to less than a thousand tons, so that the cost of maintenance of the lock there is very considerable in proportion to the value of the freight that is carried through. Until roads are built, until railroads are built, the rivers afford the best means of transportation, perhaps permanently the best way of floating logs; but in time, unless they are good-sized rivers with good channels, they are superseded by other means of transportation.

7. The statements above made do not apply to short canals connecting large bodies of water, such as the canal in St. Marys River between Lakes Superior and Huron, nor to waterways, such as the Great Lakes, which are exceptional in their nature.

8. Transportation facilities other than by water, present and prospective, are not limited to steam railways. Other means are, or will be, available, such as the use of electric railways, the cost of which is very much less than that of steam railways.

Possibly the last statement should be somewhat modified, because there are certain classes of electric railways that are probably as expensive as steam railways, but the ordinary electric railway is not so costly.

Notwithstanding the omission of new projects in this and the prior bill, there still remain a very considerable number of proposed improvements which are not fit objects for appropriations from the Federal Treasury.

I wish to call attention to section 15 of this bill. First, the inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet, N. C. It is here proposed that an improvement be made at a cost of $5,400,000, of which $1,460,000 has already been appropriated. A canal on this route—the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal—has been purchased at a cost of $500,000.

Mr. President, the number of people in the counties tributary to this waterway, if we leave out Norfolk, at the terminus, does not total 100,000; but the paternalistic Government of the United States is proposing to spend in a river and harbor improvement over $54 per capita! This project, according to the bill, is to be reexamined. There is a proposition to make the depth 12 feet. There is already, if you go through Croatan Sound, where occasionally stormy weather prevails, a depth of 8½ feet. Why, the Mississippi River below Cairo has only 9 feet. The projected depth for the Ohio is only 9 feet. It is an exception that any of the rivers in Europe, where there is such an enormous traffic, have a depth of more than 9 or, at the outside, 10 feet; but in this sparsely settled region it is proposed to have a waterway 12 feet in depth, and one of the features of it is that already in the 18 miles from the Neuse River to Beaufort there are 10 feet, and it is now proposed to expend $397,000 more upon it to increase that depth to 12 feet.

I want to call attention here to the fact that there is another route in this neighborhood, called the inland route, to the sounds of North Carolina, which utilizes the Dismal Swamp Canal, on which tolls are paid. This route, which cost only $240,000—and there is a question whether that was not too much—has a larger traffic than the other elaborate inland water route, although the latter possesses a greater depth over most of the route and taps a larger territory. The traffic on this inland route to the sounds of North Carolina last year was 336,000 tons, while that on this expensive inland waterway route was 215,441 tons. Any private enterprise which would build a canal or a railway on this route at an expense of a million dollars—I think I may say $500,000—would go bankrupt within a year; and yet it is proposed here to pay $5,400,000 out of the National Treasury. The total area dependent upon it is computed at 2,625 square miles. This was opened as a free waterway after the acquisition of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal on April 30, 1913. The traffic in this locality through this waterway was largest in the year 1890, when it amounted to 490,000 tons. That illustrates what we all ought to recognize, that with the depletion of the forests and the provision of other means of transportation the traffic on these rivers very materially diminishes.

I want to call attention to the class of traffic carried upon these rivers. It is found on page 1949 of volume 2 of the Engineers' Reports. There is a total traffic of 258,000 tons. Of that, about 195,000 tons is made up of logs and timber of some kind—logs, lumber, piling, wood for fuel. The remaining 50,000 or a little more is made up of a variety of items, beginning with beverages. I believe this is called a "dry" State; and the first item on the list is beverages, 364 barrels, 46 tons. Next comes brick, 21,450 in number, 46 tons, and so on; a variety of items, amounting to about 60 tons.

I concede that probably that traffic will somewhat increase; but it is absurd to think of spending $5,400,000 for this waterway, where the amount of traffic is sure to decrease when the logs are gone and there are no more to float. These logs, too, can certainly float without an expensive improvement 12 feet in depth. Why, if we were to adopt the standard of such a waterway as this from Norfolk through the easterly part of North Carolina throughout the United States, billions of dollars would be expended in improving waterways which would be of little use to the people.

The second item that is included in this list is the Coosa River. This is a project that has been before Congress, lo, these many years, and it had been hoped that we were rid of it. There has been expended on one section of it $1,787,000; on another section, $404,000; and for the maintenance of locks and dams the amount of $208,444.98; and the bald statement is made on page 674 of one of these sections:

> The river is not navigable and there is no commerce between Wetumka and the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad bridge.

But in order to obtain appropriations in the past it has not seemed necessary that there should be any traffic at all. What does traffic have to do with it? It is a question of appropriations; and on this stretch the sum of $404,000 has already been expended for improvements, as well as certain amounts for the maintenance of locks and dams. The traffic here is comparatively trivial; on the other portion it amounts to about 46,000 tons, the larger share of which is stone, which I presume is hauled to some Government lock or dam for the sake of an improvement of a public nature.

The next to which I wish to call attention is the Brazos River. I will admit myself the responsibility for the construction of one lock and dam on this river. It was represented that this lock and dam would make it possible to pass around certain falls and would connect the northerly and southerly portions of the river. In the first place, it should be borne in mind that the improvement here proposed is on the upper part of the river. There is a portion 245 miles long from a place called "Old Washington" to the mouth, where no locks and dams have been built. That stretch of the river is open for navigation, but practically no navigation or traffic exists. This scheme is to improve the upper 170 miles of the river, to provide by eight dams, at a cost of $2,915,000, 4 feet of water for four months of the year and 3½ feet for six months.

The feature of the legislation with regard to this river has been that almost every year the bill has contained a provision for the commencement of two new locks and dams, or something of that kind. Barely is a dam finished upon the river, and yet, with the work half done or a quarter done, with the work under way for six years or eight years, these bills contain provisions for commencing work at other points. For what purpose? To commit the Government of the United States to this whole expensive scheme. The original estimate on these dams was $190,000. That has been raised now to $300,000, and the dam which is most nearly completed cost over $400,000.

I want to read briefly from a statement by an engineer who has had charge of this as to whether these locks and dams will do any good. This is the opinion of Col. Riché, who was the engineer in charge some years ago. The upshot of his estimate is that these 8 dams will each have to have another constructed in connection with it, making 16 in the upper section of 170 miles, and that 14 additional will have to be constructed in the lower section of 245 miles, making in all 30 dams, the probable cost of which will be something like $350,000 apiece; and yet this project has contemplated but 8. I refer to page 30 of a hearing before the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate held in 1913, on the 12th of February. Col. Riché says, on that page:

> My original estimate was $190,000 apiece.

He was asked the question:

> Does that estimate hold now?

He said:

> Maj. Judwin estimated $300,000 apiece. The only one that is near completion has cost considerably over $400,000.

When asked how many would be required in the section below Old Washington—that is, the 245 miles—he said:

> My recollection is 12, but I can verify that in a moment.

After referring to figures, he added:

> Twelve; I was correct. That makes 30. So the total number from the mouth of the river at Velasco up to Waco would be 30.

Mr. President, how is it possible that we have gone on so long without a reexamination of this river? It has been requested by a minority of the committee every year here for four or five years, but the examination has been refused, and that, too, in the face of a report to this effect, made by a board of engineers in September, 1905:

> The board believes—
>
> This is the Brazos River—
> That the expenditure of $3,000,000 by the United States, with an annual outlay of $100,000 for maintenance, to provide a navigation of such small depth and limited duration, and with such doubtful assurance of accomplishing the results desired, is an investment of such questionable wisdom as to make it inadvisable for the General Government to commence work upon this project, at least until the improvements of similar character now in progress on other streams and on the lower part of the Brazos shall have been sufficiently advanced to demonstrate their inadvisability or their advisability.

Mr. KENYON. What year was that?

Mr. BURTON. 1905.

Why, Mr. President, what a commentary it is upon our river and harbor policy when, in the face of such a report as that, we have gone on appropriating these very considerable sums, amounting to $853,052.11. That is what has been spent on that project. It is time that it should be reexamined.

I come now to the next item in the bill, the Red River of Louisiana, Arkansas, Texas, and Oklahoma. Why, that is a joke. The House inserted nothing for it, but in the Senate bill as reported there was an appropriation of $100,000 below Fulton, and $40,000 above Fulton. The traffic on that river, aside from floating logs, does not amount to more than a couple of thousand tons each year. On the Red River below Fulton, covering a distance of 475.4 miles, there was in the year 1912 a total tonnage of 44,967 tons. Of this amount 42,640 tons were saw logs and 1,100 tons of lumber. The balance of the freight, including this lumber, 1,100 tons, was 2,327 tons. The total amount appropriated to date for this stream is $2,768,577. That was the amount when this report was filed. I presume it has increased somewhat since then. The cost per ton, if you compute interest on this investment, would be $4.68, or, if saw logs were excluded the cost per ton would be $90.56, and the cost per ton-mile would be $1.53. The average cost on the railroads of the country for the transportation of freight is about seventy-five one-hundredths of a cent, as against $1.53 in this case. In the past this river was an artery of commerce, but now it has become obsolete, and it is an absurdity to appropriate $100,000 or 100,000 cents for that stream. In fact, there was $68,000 on hand on July 1, 1914, if you include an allotment that was made last October.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. For what length of time has the Government been making improvements upon it?

Mr. BURTON. For a very long time. This is one of the oldest improvements in the country; I think since some time in the thirties. I do not wish to say that it was a mistake to improve it down until, say, 1900, or to improve it since then; but the time has come now when——

Mr. POMERENE. What are the conditions which have made the changes, and what ought to be the policy of the Government?

Mr. BURTON. The policy of the Government ought to be to let the stream alone. There is a certain amount of commerce that can exist upon it without any improvement. I think perhaps a small amount for snagging; or something of that kind every year, so that the Government would not entirely lose jurisdiction over it, would be desirable; but to spend $100,000 a year for a couple of thousand tons of traffic requiring the use of boats is an absurdity.

In this case, and it appears also in one or two other cases, the Government has obtained a very extensive plant and equipment in the way of snag boats, dredges, and so forth. That is true on both the Red and the Arkansas, and the recommendation is made every year that money be appropriated to keep those dredges and snag boats running. You might as well go out in the center of a pond and dredge where there is no navigation. It does no good.

Mr. POMERENE. What I was trying to ascertain was this: The Senator has indicated that the conditions are such there should be a change of policy with respect to the improvement of the streams. Now, what was the amount of the trade which was transferred on this river prior to the date and since? Was it greater or less?

Mr. BURTON. It was at one time considerably greater than now. Those figures are given in the report. At all times, however, the traffic has been very largely made up of floating logs. I believe I stated once in the Senate that at the close of the Civil War there was gathered at Shreveport a fleet of passenger boats which had resorted there for safety—one of the finest fleet of passenger boats ever congregated anywhere. They were all shallow-draft boats—16, 24, and 28 inches—but there is practically nothing of that kind now. My colleague can find in our own State a parallel case. The canals of Ohio determined the routes of commerce, determined which should be the leading cities of the State; and to-day those canals are absolutely barren of traffic. By this same evolution streams of this kind are being ignored by commerce.

The next river to which I come is the Ouachita. I remember very well that years ago it was proposed to construct two locks and dams upon this stream, and it was thought that that would be sufficient to determine whether the improvement of the river would be worth while. On this there is a proposition to have eight locks and dams, some of which are well on toward completion.

On this project, Mr. President, there has been expended to the end of the fiscal year 1914 the sum of $3,145,385.66. It is a tributary of the Red. The estimate of the entire project is $4,876,000. It should be reexamined.

Let me turn to the traffic statistics on those portions that are completed. The magnificent quantity of 64,000 tons in a whole year, 17,000 of which was cypress timber, 21,000 miscellaneous timber, a total of some 39,000 tons, leaving about 25,000 tons of other varieties of trade.

Mr. President, in the harbors of the country, some of which we are improving at a smaller figure than that proposed for this river, this would be a poor average for one single day. Yet it is proposed to spend these millions to improve a river where the total annual commerce, except what could be floated in any stream, is less than that entering any one of many of our harbors in a single 24 hours.

Mr. President, my voice will not be heard many times, if at all, in the Senate after this evening, but I want to say to my fellow Senators that this whole system will be condemned by the people unless you reform it. The people of the United States will not tolerate such absurdities. They have gone along without understanding how the public money was being wasted, but they are now awakening to the situation, and that was the reason why, notwithstanding the imputation of a filibuster, our action last year was justified by the people. They justified the saving of $43,000,000. They justified a contest which aimed at a reform in our river and harbor policies.

Mr. STONE. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. BURTON. By the unanimous opinion as expressed by the press, by the manner in which the public platform references to the fact in regard to this matter have been received. I presume there are cases——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Was it not true, I will ask the Senator from Ohio, that some 50 or 60 candidates for Congress in the Middle West at least pledged themselves in the campaign to oppose the method of river and harbor appropriations, and in most instances they were elected?

Mr. BURTON. I think so. They were glad to pledge themselves against this extravagance and waste, against this effort to obtain for localities, for congressional districts, and for States appropriations on so large a scale.

I come next to the Arkansas, which is very similar to the Red. Unlike the Ouachita, it is not improved by locks and dams. The reference is made to the Arkansas on page 894. This is a very long river, and has been under improvement for many years. The total amount expended on it to June 30, 1914, has been $2,994,000. Nearly all of this commerce is timber—81 per cent it amounts to—and it is expressly stated here in the report that the favorite argument for these improvements is missing, namely, that it affects freight rates. In the last year the total amount of traffic on this was 55,228 tons, of which logs constituted 41,305 tons, stave bolts 3,050, about 44,000, leaving 11,000 tons, and this bill proposes to appropriate $237,500 for that river.

Have we lost our sense of humor? An appropriation out of the Federal Treasury of more than $20 for every ton that would be in any way aided by this improvement, an elaborate equipment of snag boats and dredges which probably will cost $100,000 a year more to maintain. Do not let us continue this policy. I think the course of the engineers in this regard has been such as to merit criticism, but in their action they doubtless thought they were following the wish of the Senate and the House of Representatives. I shall be greatly disappointed if in the apportionment they make under this bill they recognize these projects included in this list for any great amount of money. They are not to be wiped off the map exclusively, but the fact that there is an order here that those streams shall be resurveyed, with a view to their abandonment or modification, should cause them to go very slowly apportioning money for them.

If this is not well done, I am glad to say that when I am out of the Senate there will be others in the Senate and the House of Representatives who will take up this cause and criticize extravagance and waste more earnestly and, no doubt, more ably than I have been able to do.

The Tennessee River is another in the list. But I pass that. I dwelt on it at great length in my argument last September. There is a proposition to improve it which before you are through would cost thirty or forty million dollars, and for what? For a traffic that is diminishing every year and will diminish if you pave it on both sides and make it 10 feet deep.

There is one project that I have passed by, the St. Lucie Inlet in Florida, that is included in this list. This is an artificial channel originally cut in the reef off the village of St. Lucie. The cut originally was about 30 feet wide, but the ocean has widened it about half a mile. There is a circuitous channel about 6 feet deep.

About the only justification offered by the engineers for a harbor at this point is that it is about halfway between Key West and the mouth of the St. Johns. The project is to open a channel in coral rock 18 feet deep and 200 feet wide to the nearest point on the mainland, at an estimated cost of $900,000.

Mr. President, fancy a mariner in the darkness of the night and in a frightful storm, when the waves are rolling high, turning from the sea to get by Coral Reef and go into an inlet 200 feet wide. Think of the absurdity of the thing. Yet it is proposed to expend here $900,000. One hundred thousand dollars has already been appropriated and here is another $100,000.

But they may say there is a settlement there. Let us see how much population there is. St. Lucie County is the eighth county in area in Florida, but has a population of only 4,075. The town of St. Lucie—I do not know whether the town was named after the inlet or the inlet after the town; it is a very euphonious name—has a population according to the last census of 38 souls. But there is a large real estate speculation in connection with this, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and I myself have each of us been bombarded with letters asking us to be exceedingly friendly to this appropriation of $900,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if he knows how much of the $100,000 heretofore appropriated has been spent?

Mr. BURTON. I think only about $72. Only a very small amount. It is a good time to stop it.

Mr. CLAPP. Is it not commendable rather than otherwise?

Mr. BURTON. I think it is. They could not find any dredge to go through that coral reef.

Mr. KENYON. I knew that there had been only $72 spent, and I, too, think it is a good time to stop it.

Mr. BURTON. It is always unfortunate when we have two reasons for a river and harbor improvement, for both of them may be entirely insufficient. They may both be very bad. Those 38 souls in St. Lucie are not a strong argument for an improvement. A passage 200 feet wide for a boat to get through in a storm to get into a harbor of refuge is an exceedingly poor argument. It would be keeping the word of promise to the ear of the mariner and breaking it to his hope. At least he would find himself stranded on a coral reef.

I pass to the Missouri River, and I have no hesitancy in speaking of this as an economic crime. The beginning was made in the year 1910 against my protest here in the Senate and in the committee room. I had known something of that river. In the year 1902, after a long discussion, the commission that had charge of it and were going ahead with their dredges and all their material was abolished and the appropriations were stopped. But in some mysterious way it again got back on the diagram of appropriations, and it is proposed to spend $20,000,000 there and $500,000 a year to maintain the improvement. That is what is proposed. Now, there is already a depth of 3 or 4 feet, and for three months and perhaps four months of the year a depth of 5 feet.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this argument that a small depth brings no results but that a greater depth will do so is a delusion. I challenge any Member of the Senate to cite the case of a river in Europe or in America that has developed a big traffic where that traffic did not commence to show favorable results when the depth was slight.

Now, let us look at the list of a few of those in Europe at this time. The line from Strassburg to Mannheim, a distance of 84 miles, has a depth of only 4 feet, and yet there is a traffic of two or three million tons over that river. The Main, from Bischberg to Schweinfurt, has a depth of 2 feet and 6 inches; the Weser has a depth at different places of 3 feet, 3.3 feet, and 4.1 feet; the Elbe has a depth of 3.6 feet in one place, where there is a traffic of 973,000 tons; in another place it has a depth of 3 feet 6 inches, where there is a traffic of 2,008,000 tons. The Oder, with a very large traffic, has a depth on the upper portion of from 2.6 feet to 3 feet; in another portion 185 miles long of 3 feet, and in still another portion of 4½ feet. On the Oder there is not one of these stretches with less than a million tons of traffic, while on the lower stretch there is a traffic of 2,471,000 tons, and that on a less depth than was available on the Missouri before there was any commencement of the expenditure of $20,000,000.

That expenditure commenced in a very singular way. A report was made here to the effect that $3,500,000 would furnish 6 feet of water and that it could be maintained at $145,000 per annum. It invoked much discussion in the Senate, and I called the attention of Senators to the fact that that project was liable to cost $20,000,000. This is what Senator Warner, of Missouri, said in that connection. The question was asked him:

> What do I understand the Senator from Missouri to advocate—this $20,000,000 improvement or the $3,000,000 improvement?

Three million dollars is used where three and a half million dollars should have been used.

> Mr. WARNER. The Senator from Missouri advocates the three and one-half million dollar improvement, believing, with the engineers and practical river men, that that will give a permanent 6-foot channel the year round, and that that will be part of a permanent improvement, which can be given greater depth if necessary.

"That is the limit of the Senator's demands until it has been shown what can be done?" was asked.

> Mr. WARNER. That is the limit.

In some way in the bill of 1912 there was a definite committal to this $20,000,000 project; and of this amount there was on hand on the 1st of January last the sum of $1,675,000; but this bill proposes to give them $1,200,000 more. It is proposed to spend on this river more than the German Government has expended on the Rhine; and if you exclude sand that is barged only a mile, the traffic on the Rhine is 1,000 times as great as that on the Missouri. How can you answer these figures? The cost of annual maintenance—this $500,000—is far and away more than was proposed then.

Look at the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio. I have repeatedly called attention to that, how the traffic has been steadily decreasing until it has dropped almost out of sight. Does anyone suppose that the Missouri River, turning at right angles from the Mississippi, will ever meet with any greater success as an artery of commerce than the Mississippi in the stretch upon which St. Louis is located? The traffic on the Rhine is 100 times as great as on the stretch of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio, yet there has already been expended upon it a larger sum than the German Government has expended upon the Rhine.

How do you explain these figures? Are we to continue making these extravagant and absurd appropriations? The engineer was called in and asked what he thought might be done on the Missouri, and all he would say, when his attention was called to the large amount of money expended and the poor prospect, was this:

> It is possible there might be a general revival of interest in water transportation, and that might stimulate traffic on the Missouri.

Upon such an argument as that we are asked to appropriate $20,000,000. There is no promise that anything tangible will result, but there is a bare possibility that at some time there will be a revival of interest. There is a boat line down there from Kansas City, and he states they have spent $180,000 for boats. I do not blame those gentlemen. There is a general impression in the country that shrewdness in obtaining appropriations is one of the highest types of cleverness, but it is like a street railroad which runs a single car in order to maintain its franchise. They have built up a certain amount of commerce, not very large, but, nevertheless, some traffic exists. They charge 20 per cent less for freight from St. Louis to Kansas City than is charged by rail.

In this connection I want to call attention to an interesting fact. The report states that the rate of freight by water from St. Louis to St. Paul and from St. Paul to St. Louis——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely desire to interrupt the distinguished Senator from Ohio long enough to say that we have a unanimous-consent agreement, by the terms of which promptly at 9.30 we shall again resume the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON. I have very nearly finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, is in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Ohio can continue his remarks on the unfinished business.

Mr. BURTON. Do I understand that the Indian appropriation bill is now before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Indian appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. The Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate, as I understand, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not interrupt the Senator from Ohio out of any discourtesy, but I must press the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON. I appreciate the desire which actuates the Senator from Arizona to conclude the consideration of the bill and also his courtesy.

I wish to file, without reading, traffic statistics on the Missouri from the year 1897 to 1912. From these it will appear that the tonnage was very considerably greater in the years from 1897 to 1903 than in recent years. The maximum was reached in 1909. It will appear also that in earlier years there was a very considerable quantity of grain carried on this river. Now, it appears, and it was so stated by Col. Deakyne in the hearings, that the quantity of grain is not so large as formerly, and also grain is brought out of the Gasconade and Osage Rivers, tributaries of this stream, carried to the nearest railroad station, and then taken away by rail.

Before this elaborate improvement was commenced the traffic was more than now; and, Senators, you may spend $20,000,000, yes, $30,000,000, on this project and, in spite of that enormous amount, the traffic will diminish, because you are facing a condition that no policy of river improvement can reverse—the decadence of that class of river traffic and the utilization of other agencies for the carrying of freight.

In a way I wish it were not so. Indeed, I have been so long associated with rivers and harbors and I have recommended in so many cases appropriations for rivers that I should like to see every one dotted by boats carrying the products of the States, one to another, from the farms to the great markets; but I am tired of "rainbow chasing"; and that is what this is. It is much worse than "rainbow chasing"; it is pure, bald, unmitigated waste.

There are one or two other provisions in the bill, Mr. President—a section providing for an examination of the Mississippi River and tributaries, the contributions made by localities, the amount of bonds they have issued, the taxable value of the property. It has been maintained in some instances that they have bonded themselves to the limit. I think, both in justice to themselves and to the Federal Government, accurate statistics should be prepared in that regard. There is also provision for the repeal of appropriations made for Youghiogheny River, the ultimate cost of which would be $1,050,000 and for which $100,000 has been appropriated. Also another for the repeal of the authorization of a proposed section of the Lakes to the Gulf deep waterway, the ultimate cost of which would be many million dollars.

As regards the surveys, they were not included in the last bill; they are included in this. Some of these may be subject to criticism, but I think it unobjectionable that a very considerable number, perhaps all of these surveys, be examined by the Board of Engineers.

Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD a statement giving the proposed appropriation in the river and harbor bill of 1914 in the first column, in the second column the apportionment of October 2, and in the third column the amount for the various projects which were proposed in the bill of 1915, which the pending substitute supersedes.

I desire also to have printed in the RECORD some other material pertaining to the traffic on the Missouri River. With the leave for that, I will no longer detain the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to submit a report.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to a report being presented, but if it leads to discussion I shall object.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I report, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, favorably the bill (S. 7738) to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended June 29, 1906, February 25, 1909, and June 18, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand that it is not in order unless there is unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Claims, and let it go to the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before we resume the consideration of the bill I want to make a brief statement. We have recently accused our friends on the other side of filibustering; that is, talking wildly and consuming time unnecessarily. I think we ought to look to our own "glass houses," for I fear that upon this side some of us might justly be subjected to the charge of filibustering against this very bill. I speak in all kindness; what I say is not harsh nor unfriendly; but may I not appeal to my Democratic brethren to restrain their laryngeal activity at this time. The mind of every Senator is made up; no Senator's mind will be changed by anything that will be said to-night. Another session of Congress will convene next December, at which time our oratorical temperaments may have free and full swing. In all candor, may I not therefore appeal to the Democrats to say nothing, but to sit and vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the hope that we may speedily conclude the consideration of this item, I want to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin a few amendments to the provision which has been inserted in the bill and which is now under consideration, and which I think he will be willing to accept. I also want to suggest to the Senators from Montana that if possible it would be wise for them to agree to these amendments.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like first to perfect the amendment which I offered, if the Senator will permit me to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I will take whichever course the Senator from Wisconsin desires.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In line 22, page 39, after the word "allottee," I wish to add the words "or allottees." I move that amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no objection, Mr. President. I hope it will be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In line 25, after the word "allotment," I move to add "or allotments."

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. After the next word, "of," I move to strike out the word "any," and insert the word "such."

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. After the word "allottee," in the same line, I move to add the words "or allottees."

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 40, in line 3, after the word "lands," the third word in that line, I move to add the words "other than his homestead."

Mr. WALSH. What is that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 3, after the word "lands," it is proposed to insert "other than his homestead."

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there is no objection to that. I think that will materially improve the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In line 4, after the word "years," I move to add the words "beyond the date of the execution of the lease," and a comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 4, after the word "years," it is proposed to add the words "beyond the date of the execution of the lease" and a comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the same page, in line 10, after the word "of," the fourth word in that line, I move to add the following: "inadequate compensation provided in said lease, or of any unfair terms or conditions contained therein, or of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 10, after the words "case of," it is proposed to insert:

Inadequate compensation provided in said lease, or of any unfair terms or conditions contained therein, or of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In line 11, after the word "lessee," I move to add the words "as a tenant."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 11, after the word "lessee" and before the comma, it is proposed to insert the words "as a tenant."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. After the word "lease," in line 11, on page 40, I move to insert:

Such lease shall be made upon forms furnished by the Interior Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 11, after the word "lease" and before the period, it is proposed to insert:

Such lease shall be made upon forms furnished by the Interior Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin has materially improved his amendment, but I think it can be still further improved, and I offer this suggestion to him:

After the word "lease" on line 2, page 40, insert the words: "on terms and conditions to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not think that amendment ought to be adopted, in view of the attitude of the Indian Office particularly toward the whole proposition contained in this amendment. I will go into that more fully later, but that is my——

Mr. ROBINSON. I was trying to avoid, perhaps, the necessity for a prolonged discussion of this item; but it occurs to me that some such provision is necessary in order to protect these Indians against wholly improvident leases. Now, if they are permitted and encouraged to make leases of their allotments without any restriction whatever, the inevitable result will be that designing parties, if there are such, will induce them, if possible, to enter into improvident leases.

It is true that in this provision, as framed by the Senator from Wisconsin, the Secretary of the Interior is given authority to cancel unfair and unjust leases; but in all such cases questions of vested rights might arise, and the burden or the initiative would then be upon the department and upon the Indian himself. After a lease was once made the Indian or the department would have to take the initiative; and I submit that if you recognize it as necessary that the department shall exercise any supervision whatever over these leases, the supervision should come when the leases are executed, because then the burden of starting the proceeding is not upon the Indian and not upon the department.

It seems to me that that is a practical view to take of the matter. I submit it to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator whether he intends to follow his proposed amendment——

Mr. ROBINSON. With other amendments.

Mr. SMOOT (continuing). With an amendment to strike out line 5 and the first word on line 6, as follows:

Without interference on the part of any Government official.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. That would be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be absolutely necessary if the Senator's amendment should be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly; but I can only present one amendment at a time.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply asked to be informed as to what the Senator had in mind in offering this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I had that in mind, among other things. I have several things in mind.

I offer that as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Arkansas proposes to amend, on page 40, line 2, at the end of the line, after the words "permitted to lease," by inserting the words "on terms and conditions to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I trust that amendment will not be adopted. My reason for expressing that hope is this—and it might as well be stated to the Senate now as later:

The Indian Office is not friendly to the proposed amendment. I have every reason to believe that if it is invested with a discretion which will enable it to defeat the operation of that amendment there never will be a lease made in accordance with its provisions on the Crow Indian Reservation. I contend, Mr. President and Senators, that the whole conduct by the Indian Department of operations on this particular Indian reservation with regard to the leasing of the lands of these Indians warrants the inference which I have drawn.

On April 4, 1882, Congress ratified an agreement with the Crow Indians. This agreement fixed the boundaries of the reservation, which included the present reservation.

Article 3 of this agreement reads as follows:

Third. That if at any time hereafter we, as a tribe, shall consent to permit cattle to be driven across our reservation or grazed thereon, the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the amount to be paid by parties so desiring to drive or graze cattle; all moneys arising from this source to be paid to us under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe.

By the same agreement the Indians were to be allotted, the heads of families receiving 320 acres and all other members of the tribe 160 acres each. Under this agreement 2,300 allotments, according to the record, have been given to individual Indians; and it appears from the statements of the officers of the Interior Department recently made before the Senate committee that in the majority of cases these individual allotments are not occupied or controlled by the owner, but are included within the large pastures leased for grazing purposes.

On page 35 of volume 2 of the Senate hearings on this bill will be found the following, being part of the examination of Thomas L. Sloan, a graduate of Carlisle and an Indian attorney who visited the Crow Reservation:

Senator LA FOLLETTE. You stated, I think, Mr. Sloan, that a great many of their allotments are included in the grazing area.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes, sir.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. And that they were overrun with cattle and their crops destroyed?

Mr. SLOAN. There are very few lands that are cropped.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. They are hay lands?

Mr. SLOAN. Their hay lands are overrun and their hay destroyed in that way, but the larger part of their allotments, I should say more than half of their allotments, are included in grazing lands or in grazing permits that are granted to white men and for which no compensation is made whatsoever.

Senator OWEN. Do they not get pay for their grazing land that is used by the white men?

Mr. SLOAN. No, sir; there is no payment made either to the Indian or to the department for the use of the individual allotments that are grazed upon the Crow Reservation.

Senator LANE. That is right, Senator OWEN.

Senator OWEN. Do you know anything about that, Mr. Meritt, as to how that is?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir; those allotments are included within a grazing area and the entire grazing area is leased for a certain consideration. We get more than $150,000 a year for leasing grazing lands on the Crow Reservation.

Senator OWEN. Does each Indian get his pro rata share for the land used?

Mr. MERITT. No, sir; he gets his tribal share of the money that we derive from the leasing of the reservation.

Senator LANE. Is it paid to him personally?

Senator ROBINSON. What authority have you to lease the Indians' allotments?

Mr. MERITT. We have authority of law to lease the tribal lands. There is a serious question of law, but that has been the policy that has been followed for years.

I will say just a word, prompted by a suggestion made to me by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] as he passed my desk—that the amendment as amended, I believe, meets the objection raised, in so far as any possibility of imposition upon or injury to these Indians is concerned. As now amended it is provided that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the power, in case of inadequate compensation provided in such a lease, or of unfair terms or conditions contained therein, or of any unfair treatment of the lessor by the lessee to cancel or revise said lease. I believe that will be such a check upon any white man who attempts to lease the allotments of any of these Indians that it will entirely restrain him from overreaching them in any way. He will understand that he can gain no permanent advantage; that the lease, as soon as it is drawn and signed, is subject to cancellation by the Secretary of the Interior. Furthermore, the words added, "that such lease shall be made upon forms furnished by the Interior Department," supply another check.

Mr. President, I want to suggest that there is an undue emphasis placed upon the opportunity and the power to transact a little business by the Indian independently, sought to be conferred by this proposed amendment. What is it? This amendment does not contemplate that the Indian can part with the title to his property. It enables him to sell the grass that grows upon it, under the terms of a lease, for a period not to exceed five years at a time. Judged by the amount that the Indian Office receives per acre from the great cattle companies that are grazing these lands, it is not going to amount to a very considerable sum. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], who visited this reservation and has very much more definite and accurate information in detail regarding it than I have, will remember, perhaps, what the cost per acre is to the cattle companies that lease the Crow lands, and I will ask him to state it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say that the cattle companies' outside price, as I understand, is 8 cents an acre; and in addition there are thousands upon thousands of allotted lands which are thrown in to them free of cost.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to present to the Senate in this connection the situation upon that reservation, as I understand it.

There is a great stretch of country there belonging to these Crow Indians, secured to them by treaty; it comprises something over 2,000,000 acres. Of that land there has been allotted to Indians some 500,000 acres. I have before me a report made by Mr. E. B. Linnen, chief supervisor of the Indian Office, and found in the testimony taken by the joint commission created by Congress. It appears from this report that there are 2,300 allotments of 320 acres each on this reservation. I read from his report:

MAY 2, 1914.

The act of Congress approved April 11, 1882, as contained on pages 42 and 43 of volume 22, United States Statutes at Large, specifies that allotted lands to members of the Crow Tribe of Indians shall not be subject to alienation, lease, or encumbrance, either by voluntary conveyance of the grantee or his heirs, or by the judgment, order, or decree of any court, nor subject to taxation of any character, etc., for a period of 25 years and until such time thereafter as the President may see fit to remove the restrictions, which shall be incorporated in each patent.

I am informed that the original allotment roll of allottees under this act has disappeared from the files, and it is contended by Mrs. Gray that allotments of lands other than the original lands allotted have been substituted, and patents issued under what is known as the Burke Act of 1906.

It is also contended that the original allotment papers under the acts of 1882 and 1891 were in the hands of Chief Supervisor Holcombe, having been turned over to him by the then Secretary of the Interior Ballinger. It also appears that office letters have been written to the various Indians who desired to make individual private leases to one John Booz or others, prohibiting such leasing or fencing of their allotments, and that the general lease of tribal lands has included these allotted lands of various Indians, for which no compensation has been received and no moneys paid to the Indians whose individual allotments are so used.

It is stated that the lease contracts of the cattlemen especially provide that "in case of the allotments of land in severalty, it is agreed and understood that this lease shall be void as to the lands so allotted." This exclusion of the allotments, a very large majority of which are unfenced, permits the lessees to graze their herds over these allotted lands free of cost, and according to the present superintendent there are about 2,300 of these allotments of 320 acres each.

Instances have occurred where the Indians could lease their allotments, but are prohibited from doing so, or from fencing same for such purpose, or leasing those which are fenced.

When it is taken into consideration that the leases are made at so much per each head of stock and that the number of head of stock permitted to be grazed is based on the estimated area of the tribal lands and does not embrace about 2,300 allotments of 320 acres each, it is readily seen that the allotted Indians are not receiving payment for a very large area of land, and neither is the tribe receiving such payment, and further, the bids do not provide for the actual acreage, and generally the only persons acquainted with these facts and this advantage to be thus gained are the lessees who have been taking advantage of same for years past.

Mr. President, some of these allotments are 320 acres, and some of them 160 acres. The heads of families receive 320 acres and all other members of the tribe 160 acres. So that the average allotments would probably cut down somewhat the figures which I gave to the Senate a moment ago as comprising the total amount of allotted lands upon that Indian reservation. But if half of them——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Without objection, I will withdraw the amendment which I offered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not object to that, but I will conclude what I want to say while I am on my feet. On this whole proposition I had intended to address myself to the Senate and in support of the amendment which I had the honor to offer in the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not wish to worry the Senate, but I consider this matter of tremendous importance to these Indians.

It appears that the Indians have for years been protesting against the system by which they are deprived of the use of and any benefit from their allotments, and that although they have many opportunities to lease the allotments which belong to the members of their family and which have been taken in groups with the idea of fencing in one common body for grazing and farming purposes, that the Indian Office has uniformly refused to permit them to do so, and has adhered to the policy of leasing the tribal grazing lands in large bodies and permitting the lessee to graze the allotments included therein. On December 19, 1913, Acting Commissioner E. B. Meritt instructed the superintendent at the Crow Agency as follows:

[Land contracts, 143525-13 H. V. C. Unauthorized leasing by allottees.]

DECEMBER 19, 1913.

Mr. WINFIELD W. SCOTT,
Superintendent Crow School.

SIR: The office has received and considered your letter of December 4 last, with reference to informal grazing leases being made by some of the allottees holding land under your jurisdiction without advice or approval and contrary to the order contained in office letter of May 27, 1912 (49059-12), to which you refer. It is understood that in some cases these informal leases or agreements are made by Indians who have control of a group of allotments belonging to members of their families, and that in such cases the tract embraces favorable watering places, being first fenced and thereby excluded from the area included in the permits covering the several tribal pastures. You refer to several specific cases which have come to your attention, saying that the practice is rapidly spreading over the reservation, and you recommend that the previous authority of May 27, 1912, be approved.

As stated by you, previous to the date of the authority above referred to the matter was fully reported to the office, and after careful consideration action was taken as indicated. It was believed then that such action was for the best interests of the tribe in general without regard to any particular allottee, and that it was only fair to the parties holding permits on tribal lands, which, of course, include all lands not under fence. At the same time it was thought that the Indians should be encouraged to fence their grazing allotments for the use of their own stock, and you were instructed accordingly.

In view of the conditions now reported you are instructed to invoke the authority previously given you regarding this matter, and to prohibit the leasing by allottees of their allotments in groups for grazing purposes. You will take prompt action in all cases of this character that may come to your notice, and cause to be removed from the reservation any stock belonging to outsiders found grazing without proper authority, reporting the facts to the office.

Respectfully,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

(12-H. V. C.-17.)

The Crow Indians contend that at the time they took their allotments they were possessed of a considerable amount of stock; that they took their allotments in groups, with the idea of farming the irrigable land and running their own cattle upon the grazing area. They also contend that the policy of the department which has prohibited them from fencing their lands has resulted in their becoming impoverished. It is said that because their allotments have been included within the large pastures that they have been obliged to let their cattle run with the herd of the lessee. This has been very unsatisfactory, because the lessee frequently overstocked the range and when grass became short he turned the Indian cattle out into the waste places, where they died of starvation. It is now contended that very few Indians have more than 1 or 2 head of stock, and many of them none. They are in a state of want. The money derived from the tribal pastures has in recent years been used for the pay of employees and for perfecting and maintaining an irrigation system. The general agency expenses have more than exhausted this source of revenue, and the proceeds of the sale of ceded land has been drawn upon to supply the deficiency. The Indians receiving no distribution of any kind are without revenue other than that which they derive from their daily labor. There appears to be but little employment available, and the Indians have become discouraged, and appear to be degenerating rather than progressing. They contend that these allotments are theirs; that the Government of the United States has given to them trust patents in which the United States obligates itself to hold the said land for the sole use and benefit of the allottee and his heirs; that under this trust patent they are entitled to the benefit of these lands. Because they have not been permitted to fence their allotments, they have not been able to cultivate or graze, as was the evident intention of Congress when it provided that they should be allotted.

The condition of these unfenced allotments and the department's method of protecting the Indian is pretty well illustrated by the statement of Mr. Estep, the present agent, on page 39 of volume 2 of the Senate hearings on this bill.

Senator WHITE. Can you not take care of that situation by imposing penalties upon people whose stock get out?

Mr. ESTEP. We can; and I have notified one owner particularly in that regard.

Senator WHITE. Why not adopt that system?

Mr. ESTEP. That would increase the complaint that is made; it would take more men to do that.

Senator WHITE. It would do justice to those individuals whose rights ought to be protected.

Mr. ESTEP. Well, we think we are protecting the individual rights. Of course that is a matter of opinion. We are doing the best we can for them. The allotments of an Indian stand, in that western country particularly, on exactly the same status as a homesteader. A homesteader in the range country must protect his homestead, and if he does not do it with a proper and sufficient fence—which is defined by the law of Montana—he can collect no damages from a trespasser or from trespassing stock. The law defines it.

Senator WHITE. That is a one-sided affair. It looks as if the man whose stock gets out should be the man you should punish; he is the man you should restrict rather than punish the other man for allowing the cattle to graze there.

It is evident that this whole difficulty can be overcome by permitting the Indians to fence their allotments. It is evident from the testimony appearing on the latter part of page 39, above referred to, that the Indians will themselves fence their allotments, if furnished the wire, under the provisions of this bill. It is further apparent that the agent now has the wire.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. With regard to the matter of fencing these allotments, if you please, Mr. Estep, you have material for fencing which is issued to the Indians for fencing their allotments, I understand?

Mr. ESTEP. Yes; it is on the reimbursable plan.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How large a force of employees have you on the reservation?

Mr. ESTEP. All told, including everything?

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. ESTEP. Regulars, about 80 or 85, which include the Indian police, and from that on up.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Have you any employees there who aid these Indians in building their fences around their allotments?

Mr. ESTEP. Oh, yes; we have the district farmers, who have charge of that work all the way through.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Do those Indians know how to make fences that will turn cattle?

Mr. ESTEP. Yes; I think so. They are pretty good workers.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. You furnish them with all the wire they need, do you?

Mr. ESTEP. Yes; wire and staples.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. And they have to procure the posts themselves?

Mr. ESTEP. They have to procure the posts themselves and do the work of setting up the posts.

It is contended that this provision is impracticable, that the Indian allotments are so located that if fenced it would take the water out of the leased pasture and make that worthless. This reservation is evidently well watered, and it appears from the testimony taken in the Senate committee upon this matter that the fencing of allotments will in no manner interfere with the supply of water required for the proper grazing of the leased pastures.

On page 37 of volume 2 of the recent hearings before the Senate committee, Mr. Estep, in reply to a question by Senator ROBINSON, makes it very plain that it would be impossible to cut off the water supply on that reservation.

It is evident from this same answer of Mr. Estep that the Indians receive no encouragement in the business of leasing or otherwise controlling their allotment.

Senator ROBINSON. Do you know that there are cases where the water holes or water streams are upon the lands allotted to individual Indians, and that therefore under the system that has heretofore prevailed of leasing these lands in large areas the lessees have the use of the water on those individual allotments, and that when the Indians have applied for permission to fence their allotments so as to use them severally they have been denied that privilege on the ground that it would cut off the water supply for the herds of the lessees?

Mr. ESTEP. I know of no such case, because it would be impossible to cut off the water supply on that reservation in any large quantities. It has never been done to my knowledge. I do not know what was done before, but never to my knowledge has any Indian been denied the right to fence his own allotment. In fact, we are doing everything we can to encourage them to do it. However, we are not encouraging them to do it for the purpose of letting the outsiders in with a few head of cattle with the intention of their cattle breaking out and running and ranging over the range. We are now furnishing wire for the express purposes of fencing their own allotments and making use of them. I have concluded in the department, since I have been down here, a further purchase of some $15,000 worth of reimbursable stuff, including wire for the purpose of fencing their allotments, and the allowance has gone to the warehouse.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I only wish to call the Senator's attention to this fact. It is now a little over 24 hours until Congress will adjourn sine die, and this bill has on it perhaps more amendments than any other appropriation bill which has been considered. A conference will be necessary. I simply wanted to hasten the consideration of the measure. For my part I should like to see the amendments agreed to and the consideration of the bill proceed. I think that can be done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will endeavor to be very brief in what I have to say. I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and in all the time this appropriation bill has been before the Senate I have not occupied a moment of the time of the Senate in a discussion of its provisions. I will take just as little now as I possibly can. I do not want to prolong the consideration of the bill.

I wish to say that there are from 400,000 to 500,000 acres of allotted land on this Indian reservation included within the area leased to the great cattle companies by the Indian Office, but the terms upon which those cattle companies lease the land exclude from the acreage upon which they pay all the allotted lands embraced within the pastures which they lease.

In regard to this situation E. B. Linnen, Chief of Supervisors, Indian Office, in a recent report made to the department has the following to say:

The present leases in vogue likely extend for another two years. It now appears that leases could be made by or for a large number of individual allottees whereby they might secure a considerable revenue from such leases, and it further appears that certain persons would be willing to fence the allotments so leased for a term of years, and that the fences so constructed would at the termination of, say, five years go to the owners of the allotments.

The present lessees have no control over these allotments under the terms of their leases, and thus a considerable revenue from the leasing of these allotments and sale of hay which might be cut from same could be secured for the benefit of these Indians. Roughly estimated, there are approximately half a million acres of individual Indian allotments so affected, for which no payment is made by the present lessees who have had the use of same for many years back free of any expense.

It appears that the allotted area in any pasture is first deducted from the total acreage, and that after this deduction the amount which the lessee is to pay is computed. Under this arrangement no benefit from the grazing of the allotments come either to the tribe or to the individual. This is made very plain by the report of Mr. Linnen.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator wants to be correct. The leases are made on a head basis, not on the acreage at all, but at so much per head.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That may be true, but the fact is that it figures out, as stated in the testimony taken by the Committee on Indian Affairs, something like 8 cents an acre for the land included within the leased grazing area, but excluding the allotted lands of the Indians. In other words, there are 300,000 or 400,000 acres, at the least, of land belonging to these Indians just as much as the home of any Senator on this floor belongs to him. They have the title and the right to possession. They are entitled to the use of that land. The Indian Office, in leasing it without their consent, unlawfully deprives them of that to which they are entitled. The only reason which can be assigned for that course on the part of the Indian Office is that it is easier to handle these Indians as a herd, as a drove, than it is to take the pains to encourage individual allottees in the use of their property. It would be some trouble to develop a little business instinct and a little business responsibility in the individual in handling his property without any possibility of impairing his holdings or his title.

Mr. President, I will content myself with submitting this amendment, at least for the present, on that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will be willing that the Senate should hold at this time an executive session?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am an inexperienced man in managing a bill in the Senate. Any favor, any courtesy, anything that the distinguished Senator from Missouri would ask me I would grant; but I have learned that lex talionis is the law of the Senate in its closing hours. I have yielded to the right and to the left, but from now on I shall oppose to the limit of my strength anything else until the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of. I think we can get through the bill by 1 o'clock. May we not agree to vote at 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock?

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me, I appreciate——

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will not press a motion for an executive session.

Mr. STONE. Just a moment. I was going to say I appreciate the kindly expression of the Senator, but it is not a personal question with me in any sense any more than it is with any other Senator. There are a large number of nominations sent in by the President that ought to be referred during this calendar day to the proper committees or else they might be subject to some objection to action thereon under the rules. Anyway, it is entirely with the Senate, and in the course of 30 minutes or thereabouts I shall move an executive session and let the Senate decide whether it prefers to go on with this bill and allow these nominations to fail.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not so stupid as to fail to observe the veiled threat, and I will say now that I will oppose the holding of an executive session and any other business being done until the pending bill is passed. My courtesy is not going to be one-sided with me any more. I want this bill to proceed to a vote. I ask for the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. Mr. SWANSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SMOOT. The question of consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question on proceeding to the consideration of a conference report is not debatable. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to ask, not being very conversant with the rules of the Senate, whether a motion will be in order to recede from a part of the proposition upon which the Senate and House originally disagreed and to recommit with instructions to insist on another part?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will come up for consideration after the Senate determines whether it will proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia withhold his motion?

Mr. SMOOT (continuing). If he would not, in a very few words, state what changes have been made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can not be done at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that the report may go over and be printed, so that we can look at it.

Mr. SWANSON. I will object to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. SWANSON. I call for a division.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I ask that the report be printed, so that we can see what the amendments are. I do not want, I will state to the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia has asked for a division.

Mr. LIPPITT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. HUGHES (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OLIVER (after having voted in the negative). I will ask if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. OLIVER. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is absent. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY], and let my vote stand.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Has the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

R. 21201) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 22, and 23.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 14, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, and 24, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Salaries, United States agency: One counsel and joint secretary, at $2,750 per annum; stenographer, at $1,200 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $200; rent of rooms, $600; in all, $4,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out "$60,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$55,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read

And the Senate agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
LUKE LEA,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. D. FLOOD,
CYRUS CLINE,
HENRY ALLEN COOPER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina presents a conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular bill, and moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration thereof.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be printed under the rule of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that it will not take five minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. ASHURST. I prefer that it shall wait until the Indian appropriation bill is passed, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no rule of the Senate requiring a conference report to wait.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. What was the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OVERMAN. To proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, which has just come over from the House. There are only three amendments to it, and no one objects to it.

Mr. ASHURST. I object to anything whatsoever except the consideration of the pending appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona can not object to the presentation of the conference report.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Arizona does not object to the presentation of the report, but he emphatically objects to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to concur in the conference report. [Putting the question.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. While, of course, under the rules it is in order to present a conference report to the Senate at any time, action upon it in the nature of agreeing or disagreeing to it is not privileged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is correct about that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, how does the matter now come before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has moved to proceed to the consideration of the report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But was that motion put to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was being put.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; I beg the Chair's pardon. I understood the Chair to put the question on concurring in the reoprt.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to proceed to the consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. WEEKS. What is the report?

Mr. OVERMAN. The conference report on the Diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object. I thought that the Senator had moved to concur and that the Chair was going to put it to a vote. If the Senator is asking unanimous consent, I object; but if he makes a motion, he will not know whether or not it is agreed to until the vote is announced.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have made the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote. I vote "nay." This announcement may stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to state that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] are engaged in conference over the Agricultural appropriation bill. That is the reason they are not present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the following pairs of Senators who are necessarily absent:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. HUGHES. I announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and its transfer to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and will let the announcement stand for the night. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I make the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous roll call and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—24.

Bankhead	Kern	Pomerene	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Smith, Md.

So Mr. OVERMAN's motion was rejected.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 73, line 3, after the word "act," to insert:

Except where contracts have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law: And provided further, That such contract shall first be approved by the existing Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 73, after line 15, to insert:

That the unallotted land or public domain of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, including any land the title to which has been, or may be, recovered for the Creek Nation, in any pending or other suit, or otherwise, be, and the same is hereby, withheld from allotment to members of said nation or tribe, and that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to cause such land to be leased, for the benefit of the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the proceeds of such lease to be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Creek Nation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay each and every citizen of the Creek Nation who has not been allotted lands in said nation, and who were duly, legally, and properly enrolled prior to the enrollment of the list included in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, second session, the sum of $2,080, in lieu of an allotment of land in said nation. Said sum of $2,080 to be paid to each and every such person out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Muskogee (Creek) Nation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, my attention has been called to this matter in a way which convinces me that possibly a wrong will be done if this amendment be adopted. I do not, however, wish to discuss it further than to make the point of order on the amendment. I believe it is subject to a point of order, and I therefore make it at this time. I believe this amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill, and it certainly changes existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To what amendment is the Senator from Michigan directing his remarks?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am directing attention to the amendment before the Senate, on page 73, after line 15, which withholds from allotment lands which under the law are subject to allotment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator refers to the amendment on page 73, beginning in line 16?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I refer to the whole of that amendment, beginning with line 16, on page 73.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. At the request of Mr. OWEN an amendment was passed over, on page 95, after line 12, to insert the following:

That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $90,000 for the payment of the members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians who were enrolled under the act of Congress of March 3, 1893, equal amounts to the amounts paid to the other members of said tribe prior to the enrollment under said act, and such payments be made upon the certificate and order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon claims being filed with him, showing to his satisfaction that such claimants, or the ancestors of such claimants, were enrolled under the act of March 3, 1893, entitled "An act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians of the State of Wisconsin."

That without bias or prejudice to the rights or interest of any party to the litigation hereinafter mentioned, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell the timber on the so-called "school lands" and "swamp lands," within the boundaries of the Bad River and Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservations in Wisconsin, and to which the State of Wisconsin has asserted a claim; to keep a separate account of the proceeds of such sale with each legal subdivision of such land, and to deposit the said proceeds at interest in a national bank, bonded for the safe-keeping of individual Indian moneys, to be paid over together with the interest thereon to the party who shall finally be adjudged to be the owner of such land: Provided, That the consent of the State or parties claiming title therefrom be obtained before any such sale shall be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I objected to that amendment and asked that it go over for the reason that it proposes to charge the United States for the benefit of persons who had been left off the Stockbridge rolls for 20 years, from 1871 to 1891. It puts a charge upon the Treasury of the United States not only involving this amount but involving another amount.

I should have no objection to making a gratuity to these Indians, but I do object very strongly to laying down a principle that, after a roll was made of the Stockbridge Indians on their own request and no adequate objection was made during the 20 years that followed, they should be permitted to come in and compel the United States to pay them back annuities which during 20 years they have not presented to the Treasury in any proper form.

The matter turns, so far as its justification is concerned, upon the act of the Comptroller of the Treasury in one individual instance, in the case of one particular Indian, a man named David Daniels; and out of that single instance, in which the comptroller overruled the auditor, there is brought in here now a demand that 350 individuals similarly situated shall also be provided for; and the end is not yet.

The amendment lays down the principle that the United States Government will be responsible for any Indian omitted from a roll. As I have said, I do not object to making a gratuity to these Indians, but I do object to the form in which this provision is framed. If the Senate desires to grant a gratuity, I have no objection; but I object to the principle being laid down that the United States shall be responsible for an error on a roll made in 1871—if it were an error—and being required, after all this lapse of time, to pay back annuities for 20 years. It is a wrong principle, and it ought not to be established as a principle of law.

I repeat that I am perfectly willing to make a gratuity to them, but not in the form in which this amendment is framed. I have no objection to striking out the objectionable features of the amendment and appropriating $90,000 for the benefit of the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians; but I think it is a very great mistake to lay down the broad doctrine that where an error was made—if it was an error; it has not been proved to be an error, so far as I know and am informed——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. If we grant this $90,000 as a gratuity, in a few years will not the same proposition be brought back here that is now in this bill?

Mr. OWEN. It is stated in the report upon which this item is based that this is a part and that there is more necessarily to follow, amounting, I believe, to a gross sum of $130,000, there being 350 who have been reported, and there may be others reported.

Mr. SMOOT. My idea was that if we made a straight appropriation of $90,000 from the Treasury of the United States, the same parties interested in securing the $90,000, based upon the provisions of this amendment, perhaps two years or three years from now might come to the Senate and ask for another appropriation based upon the same provision as is contained in this amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Well, I think that the amount which would be asked would be based upon the finding of other persons who would claim that they were entitled to enrollment and who would demand a draft upon the Treasury to pay them annuities back to 1871. I do not think the Government ought to be put in that attitude, because it not only involves these Indians but it involves Oklahoma Indians; it involves the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes in principle and in effect. For instance, the Cherokee rolls are closed. There are 35,000 people on the Cherokee rolls.

If those rolls can be reopened, as is demanded by the citizenship attorneys, inasmuch as the property of that tribe has been distributed, it simply means that the other applicants for enrollment will have a precedent set in this Stockbridge case to demand from the Treasury of the United States, upon the authority of the act of Congress fixing the precedent, that the Treasury shall pay whoever shall be able to have his name placed on the Cherokee roll hereafter. It would be a very serious national mistake to set that precedent.

I again say that I have no objection to making a flat appropriation to the Munsee and Stockbridge Indians, but I say that the facts in this case do not justify this appropriation, because the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians themselves made an agreement by which one roll was made of United States citizen Stockbridge Indians, who got their allotments and sold their allotments. Then they come back afterwards and say, "Well after all, we are just Indians, and we want to be enrolled as Stockbridge Indians." Then they are enrolled over again under the patronage and safeguard of the United States. Then they come here and say, "Well, you have been paying annuities for 20 years to the other Stockbridge Indians and we want to be paid our back annuities." Then they bring a case before the Auditor of the Interior Department and he refuses to make the payment. Then an appeal is made to the Comptroller of the Treasury, and he says that he thinks the claim ought to be paid. Then come in 350 cases based upon that precedent.

If we lay down that doctrine, it means that, if the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes are opened, the United States Government will be responsible out of its Treasury for an unknown sum of money. I do not think it is a wise thing to do, because the distributive shares of the Five Civilized Tribes are large. In the case of the Cherokee Nation each share is equal to about $700.

I think the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I do not want to make a point of order against it if the provision can be arranged so that it merely goes as a gratuity and does not lay down the doctrine to which I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. I will make the point of order against it unless it is changed, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will either have to make the point of order or not do so.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order against it, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On what does the Senator base his point of order?

Mr. OWEN. On the ground that it changes existing law, which can not be done on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rule is that a question that is usually submitted to the Senate or is it a question that is generally decided by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a question to be decided by the Chair, but an appeal may be taken from the ruling of the Chair. The Chair, however, will be glad to hear the Senator upon the point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not desire to be heard upon the point of order; but I will take occasion to present the case of the Stockbridge Indians at some length, whatever the ruling may be, in order that the record may be set right and the statements of the Senator from Oklahoma completely answered, as they may be completely answered. He has misstated the case of the Stockbridge Indians and their claim upon the Government. I do not propose to have that statement stand in the RECORD; and I shall go fully into the Stockbridge Indian case, but will not take the time now, except to have placed in the RECORD some official correspondence which fully covers the case.

It appears that under the act of Congress of February 6, 1871 (16 Stats., 404–407), that certain Stockbridge and Munsee Indians were excluded from enrollment, notwithstanding the fact that they and their ancestry had been recognized as members of the tribe for many years. In 1893 Congress, by the act of March 3 of that year, undertook to correct the wrong done under the act of 1871, and to restore to the Indians wrongfully excluded from the rolls the right which had been guaranteed to them under the earlier treaties of the tribes. Between 350 and 400 Indians were excluded from the rolls under the act of 1871. As a result, they received none of the fund distributed to members of the tribe from the year 1874 to the year 1894. Since 1894 these reenrolled persons shared in the tribal funds.

The object of this provision is to pay to them the amount found due them by the Treasury Department on account of their failure to receive their portion of the tribal funds during these years. The matter which I wish to have placed in the RECORD is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 23, 1913.

Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate.

SIR: In response to your letter of January 8, 1913, inclosing a communication from August G. Schmidt, of Shawano, Wis., concerning moneys alleged to be due certain Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, I have the honor to advise you as follows:

About 350 claims have been filed by Stockbridge Indians for shares in payments made to the tribe from the third quarter of the fiscal year 1874 to the second quarter of the fiscal year 1894. These payments were made to persons enrolled in 1874 as members of the tribe, under the provisions of the act of February 6, 1871 (16 Stat., 404–407), section 6 of which reads as follows:

"SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of determining the persons who are members of said tribes and the future relation of each to the Government of the United States, there shall be prepared, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or such person as may be selected by him to superintend the same, two rolls, one to be denominated the citizen roll, to embrace the names of all such persons of full age, and their families, as signify their desire to separate their relations with said tribe, and to become citizens of the United States; the other to be denominated the Indian roll, and to embrace the names of all such as desire to retain their tribal character and continue under the care and guardianship of the United States; which said rolls shall be signed by the sachem and councilors of said tribe, certified by the person superintending the same, and returned to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but no person of full age shall be entered upon said citizen roll without his or her full and free consent, personally given to the person superintending such enrollment; nor shall any person, or his or her descendants, be entered upon either of said rolls who may have heretofore separated from said tribe and receive allotment of lands under the act of Congress for the relief of the Stockbridge Tribe of Indians, of March 3, 1843, and amendment of August 6, 1846, or under the treaty of February 5, 1856, or who shall not be of Stockbridge or Munsee descent. After the said rolls shall be made and returned as herein provided, the same shall be held as a full surrender and relinquishment on the part of the citizen party, each and every one of them, of all claims to be thereafter known or considered as members of said tribe, or in any manner interested in any provision heretofore or hereafter to be made by any treaty or law of the United States for the benefit of said tribes, and they and their descendants shall thenceforth be admitted to all the rights and privileges of citizens of the United States."

After the enrollment many persons who desired to remain under the control of the Government complained that they had been forcibly prevented from presenting themselves for enrollment, and after several investigations and reports to Congress the following act was approved on March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 744–745):

"CHAP. 219.—An act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians, in the State of Wisconsin.

"Whereas a treaty was entered into on the 5th day of February, 1856, by and between the Government of the United States and the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians, in which the said Indians ceded certain lands to the United States, and accepted in consideration thereof certain lands as a reservation, to which said Indians removed, and upon which they have ever since resided; and

"Whereas by the interpretation placed by Government officials on the act of February 6, 1871, an act for the relief of said Indians, a large part of said Indians (and their descendants) who signed said treaty of 1856, and have continued with said tribe from the making of said treaty to the present time, are excluded from participating in tribal funds and the right to occupy said reservation: Therefore

"Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who were actual members of said tribe of Indians at the time of the execution of the treaty of February 5, 1856, and their descendants, and all persons who became members of the tribe under the provisions of article 6 of said treaty, and their descendants, who did not in and by said treaty, and have not since its execution, separated from said tribe, are hereby declared members of said Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians and entitled to their pro rata share in tribal funds and in the occupancy of tribal lands; and all members who entered into possession of lands under the allotments of 1856 and of 1871, and who by themselves or by their lawful heirs have resided on said lands continuously since, are hereby declared to be owners of such lands in fee simple, in severalty, and the Government shall issue patents to them therefor.

"SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, without unnecessary delay after the passage of this act, to cause to be taken an enrollment of said tribe on the basis of the provisions of this act, which enrollment shall be filed, a copy in the Department of the Interior and a copy in the records of said tribe: Provided, That in all cases where allotments of 1871 shall conflict with allotments of 1856, the latter shall prevail.

"Approved March 3, 1893."

The persons who were held to have been erroneously excluded from the roll made in 1874, and children subsequently born to them, were enrolled in 1894, and have shared in tribal payments made since that time. So far, however, but one family has received shares in payments made prior to the 1894 enrollment. Daniel Davids, the head of the family mentioned, on July 8, 1909, made formal application for shares in payments made prior to his enrollment, and his claim was allowed by this office and the department. The case was taken by the Auditor for the Interior Department to the Comptroller of the Treasury, who finally decided in favor of the claimant. The following is an excerpt from the comptroller's decision, a copy of which is inclosed:

"The claimants appear to have been corruptly and forcibly excluded from enrollment under the act until their rights were restored by the act of 1893, supra, which appears both in the preamble and body of the act to have been passed to correct the wrong done under the act of 1871 and to restore and maintain the status established by the treaty of 1856.

"The disallowance of the claimant's interest in tribal funds from 1874 to 1894 would very materially defeat the purpose of the act of 1893 and be a travesty upon the justice intended by that act.

"The present allowance of their claims would appear but a tardy and incomplete correction of the wrong long endured by the claimants."

The above decision, which was broad enough to cover all persons wrongfully excluded from the earlier roll, was made known to the tribe through the superintendent of the Keshena School, and the submission of the 350 claims above mentioned was the result. The Stockbridge and Munsee Indians have to the credit of the tribe in the Treasury $71,522.30, known as the "Stockbridge consolidated fund," with accrued interest on the fund to January 2, 1913, amounting to $11,785.27, a total of $83,307.57. The principal is liable for the payment of approximately $40,000 in money in lieu of land, provided for by the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stat., 382). The estimated value of the claims for back annuity already filed is approximately $130,000. About $7,500 of this amount is payable from the Stockbridge consolidated fund, and the balance of about $122,500 payable from interest only, unless otherwise authorized by Congress. There are some unpaid shares due various persons from tribal payments made since 1894 for which the accrued interest is liable. It is apparent, therefore, that before settlement can be made of all just claims and equal benefits conferred on various members of the tribe the Stockbridge fund will have to be augmented by an appropriation of probably between $87,000 and $90,000.

The payments made prior to 1874 amount to $567.33 per capita. About 122 persons entitled were living during the entire period; others were born after 1874, and others, living in 1874, died before the final enrollment. Until these claims have been thoroughly examined and proof furnished as to the actual dates of birth and death it would be impossible to give the exact amount of the claims, and it is probable that a few more claims will be filed.

Since the right to back annuity of those excluded from the 1874 roll was recognized in the case of Daniel Davids, action on other claims has been suspended because of lack of sufficient funds to pay all and the consequent dissatisfaction if any claimants were preferred. It has been the intention of the office to bring the matter to the attention of the department, with a view of recommending legislation as soon as a safe estimate of the amount necessary could be arrived at.

The office will soon be in a position to prepare an accurate estimate of the money needed to pay the claimants and the matter will then be taken up with Congress, with the view of procuring an appropriation to pay the claims of the Indians.

Respectfully,

C. F. HAUKE,
Second Assistant Commissioner.

Approved, January 25, 1913.

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

APPEAL NO. 19551.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
July 17, 1911.

Daniel Davids, a Stockbridge Indian of Wisconsin, appealed from the action of the Auditor for the Interior Department in settlement No. 18881, dated October 4, 1910, in which claim for per capita payments in arrears due to himself, his daughter Myrtle Davids, and son Ernest Davids, amounting to $1,059.50, was disallowed.

The claim, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was based upon the alleged wrongful nonenrollment of claimants and their nonpayment of per capita allowance under the act of February 6, 1871 (16 Stat., 404–407), from 1874 to 1894, and their subsequent enrollment under the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 744–746), and payment from and after enrollment.

The auditor's alleged reasons for disallowance were that Darius Davids, father of the claimant Daniel Davids, received allotment of certain lands and became a citizen of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1843 (5 Stat., 645); that thereby his relations of membership in the Stockbridge Tribe were severed; and that neither he nor his descendants were thereafter entitled to share in tribal funds or other communal benefits; that he was not a party to the treaty of 1856 (11 Stat., 663-678), and that therefore the claimants, his descendants, were not entitled to enrollment and payment under the act of 1871, supra; and, further, if said claimants were wrongfully excluded from enrollment under the last-named act, still, that they are not entitled to payment of annuities in arrears for the 20 years, or any part thereof, from 1874 to 1894.

The laws and treaties upon which the decision depends are as follows:

Act of March 3, 1843 (5 Stat., 645 et seq.);
Act of August 6, 1846 (9 Stat., 55 and 56);
Treaty of 1848 (9 Stat., 955 et seq.);
Treaty of 1856 (11 Stat., 663-678);
Act of February 6, 1871 (16 Stat., 404-407); and Act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 744-745).

The said act of 1843 provided for choice of commissioners to make allotments of the Indian lands to all the members of the tribe in severalty, to prepare maps showing result of their work, and requiring a copy of the maps with full report of final action to be filed, one copy with the Secretary of the Territory of Wisconsin, one copy in the office of the clerk of the county in which the lands are situated, and one copy to be transmitted to the President of the United States, who would thereupon direct the issue of patents to the allottees for lands to be held by them in fee simple, after which the said Indians should be deemed and declared to be citizens of the United States to all intents and purposes, with all the immunities, privileges, and liabilities pertaining to citizenship, and their tribal relations and usages should wholly cease and determine.

The said act of 1846 in the most sweeping terms repealed the act of 1843 and restored the Indians to their tribal status and ancient form of government, with all powers, rights, and privileges held and exercised by them under customs and usages as fully and completely as if said act of 1843 had never passed.

Such is the provision of the first section of the act of 1846. The second section provides that those Indians who wish to become and remain citizens may enroll themselves with the subagent at Green Bay Agency within three months; at the expiration of three months the agent should divide the township held by the Indians into two parts, one part to be known as the Indian district, the other to be known as citizen district. None enrolled under this provision, and the proposed division of the township proved impracticable, as appears from the preamble to the treaty of 1848, supra.

By article 1, treaty of 1848, the Stockbridge Indians renounced all participation in the benefits or privileges granted or conferred by the act of 1843 and relinquished all rights secured by said act and declared themselves to be under the protection and guardianship of the United States as other Indian tribes.

This article appears to be affirmation by treaty of the first section of the said act of 1846, which repealed in toto the act of 1843 and restored the Indian tribal status of all the Stockbridges.

Nevertheless, it appears from the evidence in the case that the apportionments or allotments of the lands in severalty to all the Stockbridge Indians under the act of 1843, or their interest in such lands, which had not been patented as proposed and promised, had been in large part transferred for valuable consideration and that the Indians were divided in sentiment, a minority preferring to continue their status as citizens under the act of 1843 and the majority preferring restoration of Indian status under the act of 1846. (See Report of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1847 to 1850, pp. 728 to 768, particularly p. 747 and p. 757, et seq.)

In consideration of the wishes of said minor party, that desired to continue their citizenship, article 4 appears to have been inserted in the treaty of 1848.

This article provided for resurvey of the lands into lots in conformity with the plan of the commissioners under the act of 1843 confirming the allotments to the old allottees, and again promising patents, which did not issue, at any time prior to 1860.

The seventh article of the treaty suggests contemplation of the removal of the Indians to a country west of the Mississippi River, set apart for them or to be secured by them; but how, when, where, or by whom set apart, or how to be secured is left to conjecture. Nothing provided for or contemplated in the treaty appears to have been effectually carried out except grant made in article 3, and the same condition of unrest and dissatisfaction which had prevailed for years appears to have continued until the treaty of 1856, supra, was made.

By preamble of nine paragraphs prefacing the treaty of 1856 are set forth the treaties, acts, and facts preceding and making necessary said treaty.

By article 1 all the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians who were included in the treaty of 1839 were parties to the new treaty concluded February 5, 1856, and in the list of signers appended to the original agreement appears the name of Darius Davids, signed by mark.

The Davids family record as it appears in the evidence shows that Darius Davids married Louisa Baldwin, daughter of Debby Baldwin; that two sons, Daniel (present claimant) and John, were born of this marriage, the former June 1, 1844, and the latter September 27, 1845; that Louisa died in 1846 and that the boys, Daniel and John, were in the care of and numbered with their maternal grandmother, Debby Baldwin, at the time of the treaty of 1856.

The names of both Darius Davids and Debby Baldwin appear as signers by mark to the treaty of February 5, 1856, and her name but not his appears signed among those who approved the treaty with its amendments in general council of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes, July 29, 1856. Her name also appears in the roll and census made under article 5 of the treaty, where she is enrolled with two children, Daniel and John Davids.

Some evidence filed in the case indicates that Darius Davids died April 14, 1855; but as his name appears signed by mark to the treaty as first concluded and not as later amended it seems probable that his death occurred between February 5 and July 29, 1856.

Whatever the status of Darius Davids in 1856, and whether he was then living or dead, his sons, Daniel and John, would inherit from their grandmother, and no allegation is made that either she or they ever severed their relations as members of the Stockbridge Tribe. It therefore appears that if any Stockbridge Indians were entitled to enrollment as members of the tribe under the act of 1871, supra, Daniel Davids was so entitled.

This act, like some of its predecessors, is entitled "An act for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians in the State of Wisconsin." From much of the evidence filed in the case it appears that the act in its inception, framing, and execution was designed and operated to relieve the Indians of what was most valuable in their possession. (See S. Misc. Doc. No. 226, 52d Cong., 1st sess., especially pp. 31 to 33.)

The claimants appear to have been corruptly and forcibly excluded from enrollment under the act until their rights were restored by the act of 1893, supra, which appears both in the preamble and body of the act to have been passed to correct the wrong done under the act of 1871 and to restore and maintain the status established by the treaty of 1856.

The disallowance of the claimant's interest in tribal funds from 1874 to 1894 would very materially defeat the purpose of the act of 1893 and be a travesty upon the justice intended by that act.

The present allowance of their claims would appear but a tardy and incomplete correction of the wrong long endured by the claimants.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 23, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I have received your letter of March 23, forwarding for report copy of a bill (H. R. 12297) proposed by Hon. THOMAS F. KONOP, intended to provide an appropriation to pay certain members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians, enrolled under the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stats. L., 744), the amount of payments made prior to their respective enrollments.

This bill apparently is designed to accomplish a purpose similar with that intended to be provided for by an item which Mr. KONOP heretofore proposed for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill and which was referred for report by your letter of December 6, 1913, addressed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and reported upon by me on December 26, 1913.

Section 6 of the act of February 6, 1871 (16 Stats. L., 404-407), provided for the determination of the persons who were members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes and the future relations of each to the Government, in pursuance of which two rolls were to be prepared—one to be known as the citizen roll, to embrace the names of all persons of full age and their families who desired to separate their relations with the tribe and become citizens; and the other to be known as the Indian roll, and to contain the names of all who desired to retain their tribal character and continue under the care and guardianship of the Government. It was provided that no person should be entered on the citizen roll without his or her full and free consent or on either of the rolls if separation from the tribe was effected and an allotment of land was received under the act of Congress for the relief of the Stockbridge Tribe of Indians approved March 3, 1843 (5 Stats. L., 645), and amendment of August 6, 1846 (9 Stats. L., 55-56), or treaty of February 5, 1856 (11 Stats., 663-678), or who was not of Stockbridge or Munsee descent. Subsequent to the enactment of this law, payments were made to persons enrolled in 1874 as members of the tribe, and thereafter many persons alleged that, although they desired to remain under the control of the Government, they had been forcibly prevented from presenting themselves for enrollment.

Under date of March 3, 1893 (27 Stats. L., 744-745), Congress enacted a law under which all persons who were members of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribes of Indians at the time of the execution of the treaty of February 5, 1856, supra, and their descendants, and all persons who became members of the tribe under article 6 of that treaty, and had not become separated from the tribe, were declared members thereof and entitled to their pro rata share in the tribal funds and in the occupancy of tribal lands.

The persons who were held to have been erroneously excluded from the roll in 1874, and children subsequently born to them, were enrolled in 1894, and have shared in tribal payments made since that time, but so far only one family has received shares in payments made prior to the 1894 enrollment. I am advised that about 343 claims have been filed in the Indian Office by Indians for shares, amounting to $567.33 each, in payments made to the tribe, under the provisions of the act of February 6, 1871, supra, from the third quarter of the fiscal year 1874, to the second quarter of the fiscal year 1894.

The amount of money required to pay the claims now pending aggregates approximately $121,676.24. On March 25, 1914, the Stockbridge and Munsee Indians had to their credit in the Treasury $71,522.30, with accrued interest thereon amounting to $15,334.59, a total of $86,856.89. From a report received from the superintendent it appears that the "interest" on the fund is liable for the settlement of unpaid shares in payments made through the agency amounting to $7,192.06, which would leave a balance of interest of $8,142.53, and the greater part of the amount needed to liquidate the 343 claims for back annuities now pending before the Indian Office is also payable from the "interest," which, as is obvious, is entirely inadequate. Under the provisions of the act of June 21, 1906 (34 Stats. L., 325-382), the members of this tribe are given the option of taking an allotment of land or having it commuted in cash at the rate of $2 per acre, and about $40,000 of the principal mentioned above are liable thereunder. In brief, the available liabilities and assets may be summarized as follows:

Liabilities:
Claims for unpaid annuities from 1874 to 1894		$121,676.24
Unpaid shares in payments made since 1894		7,192.06
For money payments in lieu of allotments		40,000.00
		168,868.30
Assets:
Stockbridge consolidated fund	$71,522.30
Interest	15,334.59
		86,856.89
Additional amount required		82,856.89

The amount of money intended to be appropriated in the proposed bill will not, alone, be sufficient to pay all the claims made by Indians, and it is believed the bill as now written will preclude the use of any other funds which might be available and which, in view of the large amount of the claims, must be also used. It is therefore recommended that the bill be amended by inserting, after the figures "$90,000.00," on line 5, page 1, the words "to be used in addition to tribal funds of the Stockbridge and Munsee Tribe of Indians," and on line 4, page 1, strike out the words "the Stockbridge and Munsee" and insert the word "that."

Claims other than those now pending may be presented, which would increase the amount which will be required if the claims are to be settled. In a decision dated July 17, 1911, the Comptroller of the Treasury decided that persons who were restored to the rolls by the act of March 3, 1893, are entitled to shares in tribal payments during the time they were excluded, but action on the pending claims has been suspended because of lack of funds with which to effect a complete settlement, and it is not considered advisable to make a partial settlement for the reason that such a course would make preferred claims of some and result in dissatisfaction.

For these reasons I recommend that the proposed bill be amended as suggested and that it be given favorable consideration by your committee and the Congress.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

From pages 441–442, Senate committee hearings on the Indian appropriation bill:

Senator PAGE. When you come to making a payment of that kind to the Indians I think there ought to be some very strong substantial safeguards against fraud, and I suppose they have such safeguards in the department, and that the department will look after the Treasury of the United States. This is a matter that I am not very conversant with, and I do not know whether you have left it so that in a few years more we shall have another application for payment or not. We supposed we had settled this matter a number of years ago, and here is a $90,000 claim. Do you say that you have examined this with a good deal of care, and feel certain that there will be no fraud on the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MERITT. There will be no fraud on the Federal Treasury, but there will be an injustice done to a number of Indians if this appropriation is not made, because some of the Indians have already gotten their share of the funds, and we have not the funds available now to pay the other Indians entitled to their share.

From page 257, Senate committee hearings on the Indian appropriation bill:

Senator ROBINSON. Has your bureau gone into this, Mr. Meritt?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir; that report was prepared in our bureau, and those Indians are entitled to relief, and we think that the appropriation should be made in order to settle the controversy and equalize matters.

Senator ROBINSON. I have just pointed out that it will not settle it. If it would settle it, I would be encouraged to do it.

Mr. MERITT. We believe that it will settle the controversy if the appropriation is made.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Are these not all the Indians that have ever made any claim?

Mr. MERITT. That is my understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not subject to a point of order, so the point of order is overruled. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Mississippi proposes to strike out all after line 9, on page 72, down to and including line 7, on page 73, and to insert in lieu thereof:

That jurisdiction be, and the same is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear and determine upon principles of equity the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws under the treaty of October 18, 1820 (7 Stat. L., 210), and the treaty of September 27, 1830 (7 Stat. L., 333), by and between the Choctaw Indians and the United States in and to the lands, funds, and other property now claimed and held by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma, both tribal and individual, and to render judgment in such amount as to the court may appear just and equitable in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws; and the court is authorized and directed to ascertain the individual Mississippi Choctaws entitled to participate in the distribution of said judgment, if any, the amount necessary to pay any such judgment being hereby appropriated out of any funds standing to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes in the Treasury of the United States or under the control of any officer of the United States; and in the determination of the rights of distributees the court shall adopt and follow the full-blood rule of evidence provided in section 41 of the supplemental agreement with the Choctaws and Chickasaws approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641). The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ two competent attorneys to bring and prosecute the action on behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws, and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to defray the necessary expenses of said litigation, is hereby appropriated out of any funds now in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Suit shall be begun by a petition filed within three months after the passage of this act, in which the Mississippi Choctaws shall be named as plaintiff and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or Tribes as defendants, the petition to be verified by one of the attorneys appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and service thereof shall be made upon the Attorney General of the United States and upon the proper officials of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, who shall appear by attorneys and defend said action on behalf of said tribes. The case shall be advanced upon the docket of the said court and heard and determined as soon as practicable, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party aggrieved by the decision of said Court of Claims. The said court may, if it deems it necessary in the ascertainment of the distributees under any judgment obtained, appoint a competent master or commissioner to perform any duties that may be required of him by the court.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, a spirit of impatience has been manifested here to-night which I regret, especially when I consider the importance of the proposed legislation which the Senate is now considering. It is very much more important that we should carefully and maturely consider the terms and provisions of this bill than it is that we should hurry through and economize time by passing this bill to-night.

I have no disposition to delay. I never have been so enraptured with the music of my own voice that I enjoyed speaking just for the sake of hearing myself. I am not going to take the time of the Senate unnecessarily; but I am going to insist that the record shall be made complete, and, in so far as it lies within my power, that every effort shall be made to protect the interests of that unfortunate fragment of a vanishing race, the Choctaw Indians who reside in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and a portion of them in Louisiana. It is an old subject, and the repetition may be to some Senators—

> A twice-told tale
> Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man.

In 1820 the Choctaw Indians owned about 15,000,000 acres of land situated largely in Mississippi and partly in Alabama. By the treaty of October 18, 1820, the Choctaws, by article 1, ceded to the United States about 4,000,000 acres of their lands in exchange for a cession of the lands then situated in Indian Territory—now Oklahoma. The object of this cession by the Choctaws of their lands in Mississippi and Alabama for the lands in Indian Territory is set out in the preamble of the treaty as follows:

> Whereas it is an important object with the President of the United States to promote the civilization of the Choctaw Indians by the establishment of schools amongst them, and to perpetuate them as a nation by exchanging for a small part of their land here a country beyond the Mississippi River where all who live by hunting and will not work may be collected and settled together * * *.

All the Choctaws at the date of this treaty were living in Mississippi and Alabama and were all owners in common, as members of the tribe, in the land ceded and in the land acquired. While the land acquired was to be used for the benefit of those "who lived by hunting and will not work," it was the property of all the Choctaw Indians. Under this treaty the Choctaws acquired the title to every foot of land owned or held by the Choctaw Nation west of the Mississippi River, as will appear from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Choctaw Nation v. United States (119 U. S., p. 1).

By the treaty of September 27, 1830, the United States induced the Choctaws to cede the remainder of their lands, amounting to about 11,000,000 acres in Mississippi and Alabama, to the United States in exchange for the identical lands the Government had ceded the Choctaws west of the Mississippi River by the treaty of 1820. This appears from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Choctaw Nation v. United States (119 U. S., 1), wherein the court says, in speaking of the treaty of 1830:

> It is notorious as an historical fact, as it abundantly appears from the record in this case, that great pressure had to be brought to bear upon the Indians to effect their removal, and the whole treaty was evidently and purposely executed, not so much to secure to the Indians the rights for which they had stipulated as to effectuate the policy of the United States in regard to their removal. The most noticeable thing, upon a careful consideration of the terms of this treaty, is that no money consideration is proposed or paid for a cession of lands, the beneficial ownership of which is assumed to reside in the Choctaw Nation, and computed to amount to more than 10,000,000 acres. It was not an exchange of lands east of the Mississippi River for lands west of that river. The latter tract had already been secured to them by its cession under the treaty of 1820.

At the time the treaty of 1830 was entered into the War Department, under whose control all Indians were, estimated that there were 12,000 Choctaw Indians. It has since been claimed that there were about 19,000. If the 11,000,000 acres ceded to the United States by the treaty of 1830 had been then allotted each member of the tribe would have received from approximately 600 to 1,000 acres per capita. A part of the Choctaws refused to remove, and provision was made for a division of the tribe. By article 14 it was provided:

> ARTICLE 14. Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of 1 section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by section lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him over 10 years of age and a quarter section to such child as may be under 10 years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside on said lands intending to become citizens of the States for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in such case a grant in fee simple shall issue; said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

Note the last sentence:

> Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen—which was an absolute reservation of their rights in the property of the nation, which included the property in Indian Territory; then the sentence proceeds:

but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

The Choctaw annuity referred to was $20,000 per annum provided by the treaty of 1820.

The allotment work under article 14 of the treaty of 1830 was intrusted to a man by the name of Ward. The Supreme Court in the case of Choctaw Nation v. United States found that this man was a drunkard and wholly unfit for the position. He refused to make a record of the applications of the Indians and threatened those who applied for allotments with dire punishment if they did not remove. The Court of Claims, in referring to Ward's conduct, said:

Col. Ward, the agent, at a meeting in June, 1831, when application was made to him by Indians through an interpreter for reservations by the presentation of sticks representing the heads of families and the number and ages of children, threw the sticks away, said there was too many of them, and directed the interpreter to tell them they must move.

The Indians protested and declared they would not move. They were advised by white persons present to live on their lands, even though they could not be registered. The above was a common method of indicating numbers by the Indians. The agent was a dissipated man, and was intoxicated on that occasion.

The evidence taken by Martin in the investigation of the claims of persons claiming under the fourteenth article establishes that within the time limited for registration, on one occasion, a number of Indians living at Suchennatchie had their names registered, and that such names were not found on the agent's book in the possession of Martin. The book or paper in which the names were taken was either lost by the agent or destroyed by some person.

The agent in the employment of the Government in carrying out the treaty with the Choctaws discouraged applications for reservations under the fourteenth article; and Col. Ward advised the removing agents to threaten the Indians with punishment if they did not emigrate.

By the acts of March 3, 1837, and February 22, 1838, commissions were appointed to investigate the conduct of Ward and to ascertain the number of Indians who had applied for reservations under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. The commission reported that only 143 heads of families had received allotments of land; that 1,150 heads of families had applied for allotments and had been denied by Ward, and that the 1,150 heads of families had 1,470 children over 10 and 1,219 under 10 years of age who were also entitled to allotments. At this time the land had all been sold, and by the act of March 3, 1842, Congress provided for the issuance of scrip to the Choctaws entitled to land under article 14 of the treaty of 1830, and then by an act passed in 1845 provided that a part of the scrip should only be delivered to the Indians upon removal. The result was that but few of the Indians ever received anything. Their land had been taken from them and they were left destitute.

The Choctaw tribal council in 1854 passed a resolution in part as follows:

Whereas the Choctaws were and ever have been dissatisfied with the manner in which the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek was made, owing to the many circumstances which were created to force them into it, and owing to the exceeding small and inadequate amount which was given as payment for their country; and whereas a large number of claims on the United States, arising under the fourteenth and nineteenth and other articles of the treaty of 1830, are still remaining unpaid; and whereas information has reached the council that the demands of a portion of certain claimants have become prejudiced by the unauthorized interference of white men at Washington, who, without the knowledge or consent of the claimants, pretend to be their attorneys; and whereas the claimants have repeatedly, from time to time, called on the council to assist them in procuring what is justly due them from the United States; and whereas, in the opinion of the council, a speedy and final settlement should be made with the United States of the foregoing specifications: Therefore,

Resolved, That P. P. Pitchlynn, Israel Folsom, Dixon W. Lewis, and Samuel Garland be, and are hereby, appointed delegates and fully empowered to represent and to institute, in behalf of the Choctaw people, a claim upon the United States for the pay and remuneration for the country which they ceded to the United States Government east of the Mississippi River and protect and defend all and every right and interest of the Choctaws arising under treaty stipulations or otherwise.

Be it further resolved, That the said delegates are hereby clothed with full power to settle and dispose of, by treaty or otherwise, all and every claim and interest of the Choctaw people against the Government of the United States and to adjust and bring to a final close all unsettled business of the Choctaw people with the said Government of the United States.

This delegation was appointed and came to Washington and presented a claim based largely upon the failure of the United States Government to redeem its promises to the Mississippi Choctaw claimants under article 14 of the treaty of 1830, as will more particularly appear from the petition filed by them with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

They claimed that their reservations under the fourteenth article were sold by the Government, that the Indians were dispossessed of them by lawless white men, and that threats and intimidation had been used to force the emigration of those who desired to remain and who were entitled to reservations under said article.

They alleged that the laws passed for the examination of their claims under said treaty and said article prescribed a course of adjudication of so rigid and technical a character as necessarily to exclude many just claims; that many were compelled to remove because of the failure of the Government to give them their rights under said article, and that the law unjustly cut off such persons from all benefits; that the scrip issued under the law was paid in such a manner as to make it of but little value to the Indian, and that the result was that those who received anything received but a mere pittance.

* * * * * * *

The nation proposed to pay all individual claims under the fourteenth and nineteenth articles, because such claims were not susceptible of proof against the Government, but could be adjusted by the authorities of the nation, provided the nation could effect such a settlement with the Government as the Choctaw people desired.

* * * * * * *

Consider the history of the execution of the fourteenth article of the treaty and the wrong and injustice thereby inflicted upon a large portion of that class who elected to take advantage of its provisions. Their reservations were sold from them by the Government as public land, or they were forcibly dispossessed of or by threats and intimidations driven from them by heartless and lawless white men. When these facts became known to the Government justice required that it should repossess them of their property, but no effort for that purpose was made. They were told that their reservations were gone and could not be restored.

For years they were petitioners in vain for some just remuneration for their lost rights, and when at last a law was passed for an examination of their claims it prescribed the course of adjudication of so rigid and technical a character as necessarily to exclude many just claims. Those that did not come within the exact measure of this strict and restrictive law were rejected, though in justice and equity they were, under the circumstances, fully as meritorious as those that were allowed. From lapse of time and death and dispersion of witnesses cases that did not come within the specific requirements of the law could not be established.

The investigation was such as could be successfully met only by intelligent persons familiar with judicial proceedings, and who had known from the first the importance of preserving and preparing for the establishment of every fact connected with the loss of their rights. Not one of the claimants could meet it without the assistance of able and astute attorneys, whom they were all compelled to employ, and to agree to pay one-half of what was recovered for them.

Many of the reservees, despairing of obtaining any remuneration from the Government for their lost rights, and being destitute of means and resources, were compelled to take a refuge with their brethren in the West before the law passed for the adjudication of the claims. All such the law cut off entirely, because they had removed; while, in the case of those who remained, and whose rights were established, the Government withheld the inadequate compensation it determined to allow them unless they did remove, though they were citizens of Mississippi, and by the treaty were entitled to remain and enjoy all their rights there. It is true that a portion of one-half of the scrip that was granted them in lieu of their lost reservations was paid east of the Mississippi, but it was paid in such a manner that it all went into the hands of attorneys and speculators, and was of no benefit whatever to its rightful owners. Most of that which was paid to them was issued in the Choctaw country west, where they could not locate it, and it was comparatively valueless. They had to dispose of it for what they could get from speculators, combined together to obtain it at the lowest rates. The price realized was seldom greater than about 31¼ cents per acre—only one-fourth of the lowest price they could have obtained for the lands they could have located with the scrip had it been given to them east. Their own lands, to which they were entitled under the treaty, but of which they were dispossessed, they could have sold, in many cases, for from $5 to $10 an acre.

The result is that those who have obtained anything have received the merest pittance—a compensation wholly inadequate—while there are hundreds whose claims are quite as just and meritorious as those that have been allowed that have never received anything.

Upon this complaint, based largely upon the claims of the fourteenth article, claimants under the treaty of 1830, Congress authorized suit to be brought in the Court of Claims to determine the controversy. The jurisdictional act was approved March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. L., 504), the first provision of which reads as follows:

Whereas the Choctaw Nation, for itself and in behalf of individual members thereof, makes claim against the United States on account of various treaty provisions which it is alleged have not been complied with.

In the suit filed under that act the Choctaw Nation recovered a judgment on account of the claims of the fourteenth article claimants in Mississippi amounting to $417,656.

Not one penny of this was paid to any Mississippi Choctaw living in Mississippi. The court also gave the Choctaw Nation a judgment against the United States for about $2,500,000 additional for the lands ceded by the treaty of 1830. The total judgment of $2,900,000 was appropriated by the act of June 29, 1888 (25 Stat. L., 217, sec. 9.), and was all paid to the Choctaws in Oklahoma, the provision in said act for the payment being as follows:

And said sum, together with the interest thereon, shall be paid from time to time and in such sums as requisition or requisitions therefor shall be made by the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation to the national treasurer of said nation or to such person or persons as shall be named in said requisitions therefor.

Under the act of June 28, 1898, the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes investigated the rights of 1,923 Mississippi Choctaws, and in a report submitted to the Secretary under date of March 10, 1899, stated that they were full-bloods and entitled to enrollment. The report was accompanied by a schedule containing the names and post-office addresses of each. The department held this schedule until the night of March 4, 1907, the day on which the Secretary's jurisdiction ceased and terminated by operation of law, and then marked the list "denied." These people were practically all full-blood Indians, and only a part of them were enrolled. The others lost their rights by the arbitrary action of the department.

Under section 41 of the supplemental agreement approved July 1, 1902, it was provided that the full-bloods in Mississippi should have six months after identification by the commission in which to remove to Indian Territory, and make settlement on their lands. In many instances the entire six months' period had expired before the commission notified them of their identification. In other cases they had practically expired before the claimant was notified and when it was too late for the Indians to comply with the requirement of the law.

Mr. President, the story of the treatment of the Choctaw Indian in Mississippi by the Government is a disgrace to the civilization of this Republic. The fact is the Government has ceased to be the guardian of the Indian. That function has been performed by somebody else or some other power. He has been the victim of plunder. He has been the sport of the speculator. Every interest has been paramount to his interest. There is no question in the world about the moral right of the Mississippi Choctaw to share in the lands which his forefathers bought by the exchange of lands in Mississippi and Alabama for the lands west of the Mississippi River in what is now the State of Oklahoma.

Laws have been passed authorizing him to go there and share in that benefaction. I admit that he has failed to go. I admit that if this Senate was sitting as a court we might be justified in deciding that he has no right to participate in the land over there or the funds arising from the sale of the land in Oklahoma. But this Congress is not a court. We are not executing laws; we are making laws. Every moral right the Choctaw Indian ever had to share in the lands of Oklahoma the Choctaw Indian in Mississippi has that right to-night. For Congress to deny him the right to participate in the land and enjoy the privileges of citizenship is a crime against misfortune, an outrage upon justice, indefensible in morals, and violative of every idea and principle involved in a trust.

But they say he did not take advantage of his opportunity, and, failing to do that, he must suffer the loss of his rights. Why, Mr. President, if you could know those people as I know them, if you could understand them as I understand them, I do not think there would be objection raised to an amendment providing for them. They have no ambition; they are ignorant; they are illiterate—mere flotsam upon the sea of life. You might advertise in the papers of Mississippi to-day, giving them an invitation to go to Oklahoma and draw a section of land, but unless some white man or some person who is interested in their welfare should take the news to them and tell them about it 90 per cent of them would not find it out in six months. They do not vote; they do not associate with white people; they live unto themselves, in the woods, doing a little job here and a little job there, living on very scanty earnings. I repeat, they are without ambition, without knowledge, without any capacity for self-care and self-protection, and now for the Government of the United States to leave them in that destitute condition and deny them the right to share in the estate bought by their fathers is an infinite injustice which this Congress can not afford to perpetrate.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16510) to provide for recognizing the services of certain officers of the Army and Navy, late members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to extend to them the thanks of Congress and to authorize their promotion, and for other purposes, with an amendment on page 2, line 5, of the amendment of the Senate to strike out the word "captain" and insert "rear admiral of the lower nine."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon what is the amendment and what will be its effect?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senate passed a bill which was substituted for the House bill, and the House has amended that bill by simply adding to the grade one officer who served on the Panama Canal. He is a naval officer, and the bill raises him one grade, so as to equalize him with the officers of the Army.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is a matter in which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is interested. I shall merely ask that it go to the calendar.

Mr. PENROSE. Let it go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Maine reports a bill from the Committee on Claims the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17174) to pay the claim of the American Towing & Lightering Co. for damages to its tug Buccaneer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, would it be allowable for me to make several reports from the Committee on Printing and let them go to the calendar?

Mr. ASHURST. Without reading?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, however, they might be considered now. They merely provide for the printing of some public documents.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to their consideration, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, let them go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida that the reports be sent to the calendar? The Chair hears none.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. LANE. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Ben W. Olcott, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 6 with the original thereof filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Oregon on the 23d day of February, 1915, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon. Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 24th day of February, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.]

BEN W. OLCOTT,
Secretary of State.
By S. A. KOZER, Deputy.

STATE OF OREGON,
TWENTY-EIGHTH LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
SENATE CHAMBER.

Senate joint memorial No. 6.

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation designed to encourage the development of the water-power resources of the West; and

Whereas it is contemplated by such legislation that the interest and control of each State in the water power which may be developed, under the provisions of such legislation, shall in some particulars be no more than one-half, the other one-half accruing to or resting in the Government of the United States; and

Whereas, in other particulars, said legislation would give to the Government of the United States a preferential reversionary interest in water powers developed thereunder: Be it therefore

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That it is now wise and opportune for the State of Oregon and the whole people thereof, through their legislative assembly, respectfully to assert for the guidance of their Senators and Representatives in Congress, and for the information of the Congress of the United States, the following principles as just and equitable in the premises:

That the title to the beds of all nonnavigable streams and the water powers within their banks now unappropriated and as yet not alienated by the State of Oregon, and the title to the beds of all navigable streams within the State of Oregon and the water power within their banks—subject only to the rights of commerce—is vested exclusively in the State of Oregon and the whole people thereof.

That the unappropriated or reserved or withdrawn Government lands on the banks of said streams wherein water power is available, while necessary to the development of said power, are in no case of value equal to the value of the water power within said banks and owned by the State of Oregon.

That the State of Oregon does not concede that the proportionate value of said water power to the value of said lands necessary to its development is less than the ratio of fifty to one.

That under such conditions it is to the benefit of public policy that the Government of the United States relinquish to the States its title to lands needed for water-power development under such terms as will safeguard the public from monopolistic or speculative control.

That of importance equal to the water-power development is the creation of hydroelectric markets now interfered with by burdensome restrictions on the settlement of public lands and on the utilization of mineral and timber products, extending in Oregon alone over tracts equal to nearly 60 per cent of the area of the State: And be it further

Resolved, That for the purpose of declaring in more specific detail the principles which the water-power and public-land States of the West deem a just and equitable basis for developing their resources, the Legislature of the State of Oregon does hereby invite each of the governors of the States of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, California, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, South Dakota, and North Dakota, and five delegates to be appointed by the legislatures of the said States, to meet with five delegates to be elected by the Legislature of the State of Oregon in conference at Portland, Oreg., in the summer or fall of the year 1915: And be it further

Resolved, That the governor be selected as chairman of the Oregon delegation, and that the senate select two delegates and the house two delegates: Provided, That in those States where the legislature will not convene before the time of conference the governor be requested to appoint the delegates, and that the governor of the State of Oregon appoint the time for such conference in accordance with the desires of the several States herein mentioned: Be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the Oregon Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the governor of each State invited to the water-power conference herein provided for transmission to the legislature of his State.

Adopted by the house February 20, 1915.

BEN SELLING, Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 20, 1915.

W. LAIR THOMPSON, President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:) Senate joint memorial No. 6. Introduced by committee on Federal relations.

JACOB BARGER.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11256) granting relief to Jacob Barger, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1065) thereon.

THE TELEPOST (S. DOC. NO. 983).

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the special committee appointed to investigate the use of the Telepost by the Post Office Department I submit a report, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AND REPORT UPON THE USE OF THE TELEPOST BY THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the committee authorized to investigate the use of the Telepost in connection with the Post Office Department, pursuant to Senate resolution No. 405, Sixty-third Congress, second session, submitted the following report:

The Telepost, through its president, Mr. H. Lee Sellers, submitted the only system of rapid telegraphic transmission for consideration by the committee. The resolution did not authorize the committee to incur any expense in investigating the general efficiency and economy of the system, and, therefore, it was confined to statements by representatives of the company, to a personal inspection of a demonstration exhibited in a room at the Capitol, to certain data gathered by letter from customers of the system now in operation between Chicago and St. Louis, certain reports by the Franklin Institute, of Philadelphia, and certificates of awards by a number of international and national expositions. Senator Chamberlain, a member of the committee, while conversing over the lines of the Telepost in Chicago with a friend in St. Louis, noted messages were being sent over the same wire by the Telepost at a rate of about 750 words per minute.

From all the data submitted, it is the opinion of the committee that the system is worthy of and should receive careful investigation by the Post Office Department, with a view to utilizing it in connection with an electrical mail service, and that the Postmaster General, in his discretion, arrange for such experiments, without cost to the Government, as will demonstrate its value to the Post Office Department, and report the same to Congress.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20150) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to state that I propose to object to any requests for unanimous consent until the Indian bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the attention of the Senate for from three to five minutes on this matter, which is very important to my State.

Mr. SMOOT. We can not hear what the Senator is saying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And nobody else can because of the confusion.

Mr. OWEN. I asked that I might have the attention of the Senate for from three to five minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. There was so much talk in the Chamber, although the Senator was facing this way, I could not hear what he said.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator to speak louder, so that we may hear what he says.

Mr. KERN. I insist that we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is impossible for me to be heard while conversation is going on, and I do not wish to proceed until I can be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma will suspend until the Senate decides to be in order. [A pause.]

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi moved to strike out of the Indian appropriation bill a per capita payment of $200 to the Choctaws. The United States 22 years ago sent the Dawes Commission to wind up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. Those tribes agreed that they would allot their lands and give up their governments on condition that their remaining property should be sold and distributed per capita. This is a fulfillment of a long-delayed promise of the Government—a per capita payment of $200.

The Choctaws agreed with the Dawes Commission in 1897 to allot their lands. That agreement was ratified in 1898. That has now been 17 years. The question of citizenship was determined by the Dawes Commission after 11 years of controversy.

I beg Senators to be quiet that I may be heard. I am going to take but a few minutes. This involves millions of dollars and vitally affects my State.

As I stated, the Senator from Mississippi has moved to strike out this per capita payment. The Dawes Commission, after 11 years, determined these questions of citizenship. The Congress of the United States closed the rolls by an act of Congress on April 26, 1906, to take effect a year later, on March 4, 1907. It has now been eight years since those rolls were closed.

The affairs of the Cherokees have been closed up and their property has been distributed; the affairs of the Creeks are practically closed up; the affairs of the Seminoles are practically closed up. The Choctaws and Chickasaws alone remain with a considerable amount of property undistributed.

The Senator from Mississippi moves to strike out the per capita and submits the draft of a long bill, sending the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws to the Court of Claims in a suit against the Choctaw Nation, instructing the court to adopt certain rules of evidence adopted by the Choctaws in the agreement of 1902. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate to go into these details at all, except to point out seven different times when the question of the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws were passed upon by an authorized tribunal.

In 1897 the Federal court in the Indian Territory, on appeal in the case of Jack Amos, declared that the Mississippi Choctaws were not entitled to come into the Choctaws unless they had removed and proved that they were entitled under the treaty.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply want to make this observation: I think the Senator from Oklahoma should take time to have the RECORD show what this matter really means. As he has well said, we are about to dispose of four or five million dollars, and I think that every Senator here ought to be anxious to know what is going on.

Mr. OWEN. I shall put it into the RECORD, but I shall not take the time of the Senate beyond giving the fundamental facts. The Senate is in no humor to hear a long statement, and I do not wish to impose upon the patience of the Senate when the Senate is itself exhausted.

In 1895 the Dawes Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes made a report that the Mississippi Choctaws were not entitled, unless they removed from Mississippi to the Choctaw country in Oklahoma and were identified by an authorized tribunal and showed themselves to be entitled under certain treaties.

In 1902 the Choctaws and Chickasaws, by an agreement with the United States, approved by the Congress of the United States, finally settled this matter in an agreement of July 1, 1902. Under that agreement it was stipulated that the Mississippi Choctaws would not be required to furnish the legal proof which the law imposed upon them to show that they were the lineal descendants of ancestors who had complied with the conditions of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. The Mississippi Choctaws could not furnish this proof. They had no adequate record; they did not know what the truth was about themselves. They might or they might not be the fourteenth-article claimants; they might have been nineteenth-article claimants or seventeenth-article claimants; but the Choctaws and Chickasaws, in order to buy their peace, agreed to waive the rules of evidence, and as a matter of brotherly regard to admit, as a gratuity, those who were of the full blood if they would remove from Mississippi to the Choctaw country west. It only takes a small amount of money to move from Mississippi to Oklahoma. There were unnumbered men desirous of having these Choctaws remove to Oklahoma and secure lands and lease their lands. They were offered the cost of removal by any number of men seeking to remove them; the Government appropriated thousands of dollars for the purpose of removing them, and those who did not move are justly chargeable with their own laches. Under the terms of that treaty if they did not move they have neither a legal, moral, nor an equitable right.

Again, this matter was passed on in 1906 by the Congress of the United States in closing the rolls.

Again, in 1912 it was passed on by Hon. Samuel Adams in his report.

Again, in 1915 a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives heard this matter ad nauseam, and the hearings held by them are printed in a document of over 800 pages. They made a unanimous report, I believe—perhaps there was one exception, who intended to make an adverse report, but I do not think he ever did; but the committee from the House determined that they had no claim whatever on the Choctaws West.

Again, this matter was reported on by the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, in a recent report intended for the use of Congress.

I ask to submit for the RECORD a memorandum as to this matter, and also the record of April 24, 1914, in which Mr. A. Jones, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, sent to Congress a list of all those who appeared to be equitably entitled to enrollment after a further search of these rolls from the time they were closed in 1907 to 1914, seven years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted the Senator from Oklahoma to print in the RECORD the matter referred to by him.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

On March 10, 1899, the Dawes Commission reported that there were extremely few, if any, Indians in Mississippi who could prove their right to enrollment as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations under the fourteenth article of the treaty of September 27, 1830. At that time there was much agitation for the enrollment of the so-called Mississippi Choctaws, and in the agreement between the Choctaws and Chickasaws and the United States, approved July 1, 1902 (30 Stat. L., 641), a compromise was reached on the Mississippi Choctaw claim.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws agreed to enroll, as a gratuity, all full-blood Choctaws who then resided in Mississippi, if they would remove to and establish a residence in the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations.

Under this agreement 1,634 Mississippi Choctaws were enrolled and received allotments in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. With a few exceptions, the entire 1,634 were enrolled under the full-blood rule of evidence and were not required to prove a right to enrollment. The approximate value of the property received by these 1,634 persons is $15,000,000. This is the price paid by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for a settlement of the Mississippi Choctaw claim in 1902.

In consideration for this concession on the part of the Choctaws and Chickasaws the Government agreed to close the rolls, to sell the residue of tribal property, and distribute the proceeds per capita among the enrolled members of the tribes. The United States Government has not performed its part of the agreement.

The agreement of 1902, above referred to, contained the following provision:

"No person whose name does not appear upon the rolls prepared, as herein provided, shall be entitled in any manner to participate in the distribution of the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and those whose names appear therein shall participate in the manner set forth in this agreement."

The act of April 26, 1906, declared the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations closed in the following language:

"Provided, That the rolls of the tribes (Choctaw and Chickasaw) affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after that date."

The rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations are therefore closed, and have been closed since the 4th day of March, 1907.

The claim which is now being presented by the proponents of the legislation for the enrollment of Mississippi Choctaws has heretofore been fully considered and decided adversely to the so-called Mississippi Choctaws by the following tribunals and officials:

1. 1897: The Federal courts of Indian Territory. (Jack Amos v. Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. Jurisdiction affirmed by Supreme Court: Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S., 445.)

2. 1898: The Dawes Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. (See reports Jan. 28, 1898, and Mar. 10, 1899.)

3. 1902: The Choctaw and Chickasaw people and the United States Government in the preparation of the supplemental agreement of July 1, 1902. (32 Stat. L., 641.)

4. 1906: The Congress of the United States which by the act of April 26, 1906, finally directed the closing of the rolls March 4, 1907.

5. 1912: Hon. Samuel Adams, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

6. 1915: A subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

7. 1915: Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior.

The United States Government is bound by solemn agreement to sell the residue of Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal property and distribute the proceeds among the enrolled members of the tribes. Fulfillment of this obligation has been, and is being, prevented by the representatives of the alleged Mississippi Choctaws and by the proponents of legislation intended to be of assistance to the alleged Mississippi Choctaws.

It has been repeatedly shown that the Mississippi Choctaws have no legal, equitable, or moral right to share in the property of the Choctaw Nation.

CLAIMANTS FOR CITIZENSHIP OTHER THAN MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

It has been contended by attorneys and agents representing claimants for enrollment as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations that there was a period immediately before the closing of the rolls on March 4, 1907, during which action on all pending cases was rushed, and that the applicants were not given the benefit of a cautious consideration of their cases.

This contention is very misleading, because it is a fact that the cases which were considered during the so-called "rush period" had been considered before—some of them had been considered and determined a number of times and were pending on motion to review or on appeal from the order denying a motion to review. Very few, if any of them, were pending on a direct appeal from the original decision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, and none of them were pending for a consideration on the merits of the cases—the merits having theretofore been passed upon by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.

All of these matters have been under consideration almost continuously since the closing of the rolls, March 4, 1907. At one time, the agitation for the reopening of the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes became so great that the matter was brought to the attention of the President of the United States, and after having fully considered the matter President Taft wrote the following letter to Richard C. Adams, an attorney at law of Washington, D. C.:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 20, 1910.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter which you visited my office with Mr. Creager, of Oklahoma, to hand me. Your letter deals with the question of claims of Indians against the Government. Of course, I am in favor of facilitating the hearing of those claims as much as possible; and as to the second, I am opposed to the reopening of the Indian citizenship rolls. It seems to me it would be like opening a Pandora's box. Exceptional cases that present great equities might be considered by special legislation.

In conclusion I can only say that no one is more anxious than I am to close out these Indian disputes and put Indians on the basis of other citizens, in so far as it is possible to do so without exposing those who are uneducated and unable to look after their own interests to the fraudulent manipulation of unprincipled persons.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. RICHARD C. ADAMS,
Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

(See H. Rept. 2273, 61st Cong., 3d sess.)

It will be noted that the President was opposed to the reopening of the rolls, but said "exceptional cases that present great equities might be considered by special legislation."

On February 12, 1910, Hon. R. A. Ballinger, then Secretary of the Interior, addressed a letter to Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, in which he made the following recommendation:

"In conclusion I am constrained to believe, and therefore recommend, that the rolls be not opened up, but that proper legal authority be given the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the rolls those Indians (about 52 in number) whose applications were approved by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and were transmitted to Washington before the 4th of March, 1907, but did not reach the department until after the rolls were closed; and, furthermore, that proper authority be given the Secretary of the Interior to examine and place upon the rolls the minor orphan children, incompetents, and Indians in incarceration whose claims were not presented in due time for adjudication. I am informed that this class numbers about 200. No one seems to have taken the responsibility of presenting the claims of this class for consideration. They could not look after their own interests."

(See S. Doc. No. 1139, 62d Cong., 3d sess.)

The Secretary, in this letter, recommends against the reopening of the rolls, but favors special legislation for the relief of 52 persons whose names were omitted from the rolls through inadvertence, and recommends that authority be given for the examination of the cases of certain other persons not to exceed 200 in all.

Both President Taft and Secretary Ballinger, after having fully considered the question that is now under consideration, both decided against the reopening of the rolls. They considered, however, that there were a few exceptional cases wherein the applicants had strong equities and were in justice entitled to some relief.

Two investigations were made by the Interior Department to ascertain the names of all persons who were legally or equitably entitled to enrollment as citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes and whose names were not upon the finally approved rolls.

With the consent, and upon the advice of the attorneys for the tribes, Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, a Member of the United States Senate from Oklahoma, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior asking that he be furnished with the names of persons who, upon investigation, had been found apparently equitably entitled to enrollment.

On April 24, 1914, Senator OWEN received the following letter from Hon. A. A. Jones, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 24, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request of April 22, I am inclosing herewith a list of the names of persons who, upon the investigation heretofore made, have been found apparently equitably entitled to enrollment on the rolls of the various tribes composing the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. The data as to each of these names have heretofore been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and may be found in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

This list contains the names of all those whom the department has found equitably entitled to enrollment, omitting, as suggested, the names of new-born Choctaw freedmen.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

The list transmitted to Senator OWEN with the above letter contained the names of 318 persons. The Indian appropriation bill, which became a law August 1, 1914, carried a provision authorizing the enrollment in the respective tribes of the persons whose names appear upon said list.

The letter of Secretary Jones and the list are set forth in full in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, third session. (I am attaching hereto a copy of said document.)

Inasmuch as it has been repeatedly shown that the so-called Mississippi Choctaws have no right to enrollment, and inasmuch as all those residing in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations who appear to have been equitably entitled to enrollment have been enrolled, the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes can not understand why the Government of the United States does not comply with the terms of its agreement made with them in 1902.

There appears to be no just reason why the residue of tribal property should not be sold and the proceeds arising from such sale distributed per capita among the enrolled members of the Tribes in compliance with the terms of the treaty of 1902.

A considerable amount of tribal property has been sold and the money is now on deposit. There have been partial crop failures in Oklahoma for the past four years—in some sections the failure was almost complete. There are many Choctaws and Chickasaws who have been and are now in destitute circumstances and are in dire need of the money that belongs to them. The United States Government should at once pay them the money that is now on deposit to their credit.

For this reason we respectfully request that the provision now carried in the Indian appropriation bill authorizing a per capita payment of $200 to the Choctaws and $100 to the Chickasaws be enacted in its present form.

Respectfully submitted.

[Communication from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior to Hon. ROBERT L. Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, Chairman,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned, attorneys representing several of the Five Tribes, agree that for the purpose of obtaining an absolutely final settlement of the citizenship rolls and for the purpose of securing our peace, will agree to the enrollment of the persons enumerated in Senate Document 472, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and to the enrollment of the Nichols family, as enumerated in H. R. 13754, Sixty-third Congress, second session.

REFORD BOND,
Attorney for the Chickasaw Nation.

MAY 2, 1914.

[Telegram.]

TULSA, OKLA., April 30, 1914.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I acquiesce in your recommendation for enrollment, under letter of Secretary of the Interior, of persons whom he has found equitably entitled; also Nichols family, with understanding that this positively concludes enrollment. I suggest that you not agree to such enrollment until provision has been agreed to for vesting of tribal estate in individual members of the tribe and making final settlement. I do not consent to the enrollment of the Howell list.

P. J. HURLEY.

[Telegram.]

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., May 1, 1914.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
Washington, D. C.:

The enrollment of the 52 and the enrollment of the Pollock roll and the enrollment of the Nichols family would, in my judgment, settle the rolls question, and such concession meets my approval.

R. C. ALLEN,
National Attorney for Creek Nation.

REPORT ON H. R. 12586.

JANUARY 2, 1915.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman House Committee on Indian Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your subcommittee appointed to investigate and report on H. R. 12586 begs leave to submit the following observations:

A careful and painstaking investigation of all treaties, laws, and other records bearing on this claim, including hearings lasting from April 1, 1914, until August 27, 1914, was gone into by your committee.

H. R. 12586 directs:

1. That the Secretary of the Interior to enroll certain Mississippi Choctaws upon the rolls of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma with a full participation in their tribal estate.

2. To reopen the Choctaw rolls for the adjudication of 20,000 or more alleged claimants.
